JOHN BAUMGARTNER INJURED BY CAR AT MASON CITY

Was Struck By Car Sunday Morning And Seriously Injured

John Baumgartner, formerly of Klemme and who conducted a barber shop here for a number of years was seriously injured when he was struck by an automobile at Mason City Sunday morning, according to he following item in the Mason City Globe-Gazette:

J E. Baumgartner, local painter, 210 Fourteenth street northeast, was painfully injured when he was struck by the car driven by Carl Hermanson early Sunday morning.

Baumgartner was believed to have been fatally injured at first and Corner W E. Long was called. But an xamination at the Park hospital revealed that his right arm was fractured and that he was suffering from other cuts and bruises.

According to Mr. Hermanson he was driving north on South Federal avenue, and Mr. Baumgartner stepped out from the curb at Second street. He hesitated, returned to the curb and then started out again. Mr. Hermanson said that he attempted to dodge the pedestrian and in doing so ran up against the curb at the corner. The left fender of the car struck Baumgartner and knocked him down.

For more than the past week the highway from here to Garner had an almost impassible mud hole north of the Greiman farm or about a mile south of Garner. Cars had been getting stuck there nearly every day the past week. Small rocks were used to fill in the ruts but seemed to do little good. The highway patrol men should have bridged it over with plank rather than let such a condition exist.

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part IV)

EUROPE, for the first time in twenty years, could rest in peace and repair its shattered fortunes. Napoleon, who had been the "bogie man" of a whole scared continent, was beaten by sheer force of numbers; disowned by his own people; and safely stowed away on a distant island, where he could annoy no one. Small wonder that there was thanksgiving in Europe!

But the calm was soon broken. Barely ten months after the allies had imprisoned him on Elba, Napoleon escaped. With 1,000 of his "Old Guard" he landed in France, March 1, 1815. The news of his return swept the country like wildfire. The French nation which, a year earlier, had groaned under his yoke, went mad with joy. Louis XVIII had been a stupid, unpopular king. After a quarter century of military glory and endless excitement it had been hard for France to settle down to humdrum peaceful existence. People spoke of Napoleon as an almost immortal hero.

With one accord army and populace greeted their returned emperor with a frenzy of joy. He moved northward prepared for opposition. But he met with none. His journey to Paris was a triumphal march. Soldiers sent to arrest him flocked to his standard.

The gates were everywhere thrown open to the Corsican. Poor old Louis XVIII fled for his life, and Napoleon entered the French capital without striking a blow. In his absence people had forgotten his tyranny and selfishness and the havoc he had wrought. They remembered only his glory, magnetism and genius. He was again their idol.

But the Napoleon who returned from exile was not the same sort of man who had overawed Europe. His early life was beginning to tell on him. He could no longer concentrate his thoughts, make up his mind quickly, nor even keep awake at critical moments. He was living solely on his past fame.

The "Hundred Days" now set in. By modifying some of his former despotism the emperor won over to him those whose memories had at first proved stronger than their enthusiasm. The Royalists crept out of sight and bided their time. But the great body of the empire rallied about their former tyrant, eager to follow him against the whole universe. And they had not long to wait for a chance to prove their devotion. For the allies again rushed to arms, putting an army of 700,000 men into the field. Napoleon could muster barely 200,000 men for active service. Yet, to save France from a second invasion, he hurried his troops into Belgium, where the English, Dutch, Brunswickers, etc., under the duke of Wellington and the Prussians under Marshal Blucher, were encamped.

Napoleon knew Wellington and Blucher would try to unite at Charleroi; so he planned to get there ahead of them, thrash them each in turn and then march eastward, where the Austrian and Russian armies were gathering. The plan was worthy of Napoleon at his best. But its execution showed the pastworthy Corsican at his worst. He beat the first corps of the Prussian army at Ziethen, June 13, and seized Charleroi. Then he sent part of his army, under Ney, against Wellington. The two met at Quatrebras, June 16. After a hard battle Ney was repulsed, but Wellington was forced to fall back on the heights of St. Jean, near the Belgian village of Waterloo. Meantime Napoleon, with the remainder of the French army, met the Prussians, under Blucher, at Ligny and utterly defeated them, killing 12,000. It was the last of the emperor's innumerable brilliant victories. He sent General Grouchy with 33,000 men in pursuit of the flying Prussians (in the wrong direction, as it happened), and himself started after Wellington. The French reached Waterloo late on June 17, 1815. The next day they attacked Wellington's army in one of the most bloody and epoch-making battles ever fought.

Out of all Wellington's great army only 24,000 were English, the rest being Hollanders, Belgians and Germans. Thus the popular impression that Waterloo was won by England is not wholly correct. All day the French attacked, and all day Wellington barely held his own. But at nightfall Blucher and his Prussians (who had eluded stupid Grouchy) came up. The battle had lasted eight and one-half hours. France had lost 31,000 men, the allies 23,000. Napoleon's star had set. His cause was forever lost. Again he abdicated in favor of his son, and threw himself on England's mercy.

By a stroke of diplomacy that is variously described as a necessary measure and as a flagrant breach of trust, the man who for twenty years had defied the whole world was sent to the island of St. Helena, and was kept there under strict guard until in May, 1821, he died of cancer of the stomach.

So perished Napoleon Bonaparte, genius, charlatan, wonder-worker, "holdup man" of Europe—one of the greatest men that ever lived. A man, however, not great enough to realize that selfish ambition and purely personal glory can never bring lasting success.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Chang's Raid of the Soviet Embassy in Peking Enrages Russia.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

DEVELOPMENTS of the week in China were in the direction of a possible declaration of war on the Peking government by Soviet Russia, which action might well be followed by a general conflict involving at least some of the treaty powers which have been giving the northern Chinese a certain measure of support in the civil warfare.

Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the Manchurian boss in the north, learned of a plot to start a radical demonstration in Peking, so he obtained from the Dutch minister, dean of the diplomatic corps, permission to enter and search the Russian buildings in the legation quarter. Police and troops occupied the buildings and arrested all the nonofficial occupants—sixteen Russians and thirty-four Chinese. A thorough search of the premises revealed a mass of documents, said to be incriminating, and a quantity of guns and ammunition. The Peking authorities declared the buildings were the headquarters of the Kuomintang political commission, the local branch of the radical party, and the executive committee of the Third Internationale, and that the seizure had averted serious uprisings in Peking which would have affected foreigners.

"The menace at Peking is removed," said Marshal Chang in a message to his generals. "The trouble-makers' offense is unpardonable. They will be dealt with according to their deserts." Which was assumed to mean that they would be summarily executed.

Moscow's official opinion of Chang's coup has not been made public at this writing, but the indignation in the Soviet capital was extreme. The Russian consul general at Shanghai said the raid was contrary to the long-established international law of civilized countries and is "particularly dangerous in China owing to the fact that Marshal Chang is likely shortly to be ousted by the Cantonese, who may not be friendly toward certain other foreign ministries accredited to the Peking government."

Two American journalists, Mrs. Mildred B. Mitchell of San Francisco and Wilbur Burton of Columbus, Ohio, were arrested in Peking and transported to Tientsin because they were employed by organizations favorable to the Nationalists.

In Changsha, Kinkiang and Amoy anti-American feeling was rife and led to strikes and boycotts. Our consular officials in several places closed their offices and prepared to leave. Meanwhile every effort was made to complete the evacuation of American civilians, and this movement was extended to northern China, the plan being to concentrate the Americans there in Tientsin, whence their removal would be comparatively easy. The Japanese concession in Hankow was attacked several times last week by mobs of natives. Japanese marines were landed and all Japanese families were taken aboard warships, but Japan refused to withdraw from the concession.

The radical faction of the nationalists is growing stronger daily and it was reported that its committee in Hankow had dismissed Chiang Kai-shek, the Cantonese commander in chief. In Shanghai the hope was held that Chiang would refuse to be ousted and would form a moderate party. Later dispatches said Chiang had obtained from the Chinese Bankers' association a loan of $3,000,000 to finance the campaign in the north against Marshal Chang Tso-lin. The loan was negotiated by the nationalist finance minister, T. V. Soong. The Shanghai vernacular papers said Chiang was defying the orders of the Hankow executive committee and might shortly declare himself dictator, with the financial backing of the Shanghai native merchants and bankers, who fear the domination of the radicals.

The United States and Japan are still resisting the British plans for a program of active intervention because of the Nanking outrages, and have been formulating instead mere demands for apology and reparations. President Coolidge and his cabinet discussed the situation thoroughly and sent to Minister MacMurray an outline of the American demands. It was believed in Washington that 1,500 more marines would be sent to China within a few days. The British government, as was predicted, has decided to act singly, if necessary, in obtaining indemnity from the Cantonese and has started large military reinforcements from England on the way to Shanghai.

PRESIDENTIAL politics was at the fore last week. For one thing, Senator Moses of New Hampshire asserted positively that Mr. Coolidge would not seek a renomination, though there is no reason to believe that he is in the President's confidence. The Lowden boom was formally started by an Iowa legislative committee which began the formation of organizations in eleven states. This followed the reception of assurance from Lowden that he would forego his desire to continue in private life and would consider seeking the Republican nomination if a sufficient number of agricultural states demand it. With the knowledge but not the consent of Lowden, a movement for his nomination has been undertaken in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, with headquarters in New York city. The men interested will co-operate with the Iowans and probably will undertake to raise the necessary funds. Senator Reed of Missouri, chief counsel for Henry Ford in the Sapiro libel suit, took occasion Wednesday when cross-questioning Sapiro to give Lowden some very ill-natured digs.

On the Democratic side the feeling that Gov. Al Smith would be the party's best bet seemed to be growing stronger. Senator Glass of Virginia helped this along in a measure by a public declaration that of course a Catholic could be elected, but he added the assertion that if Smith wanted the support of delegates from the South he must "let the prohibition issue alone." This was taken to be a fair warning from the southern leaders that they will not make religious intolerance an issue but that they will stand firm in the matter of prohibition. Governor Smith's reply to this, as well as his answer to the Atlantic Monthly article asking him to define his future allegiance on religion and government, is awaited with great interest.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE put a stopper on the Philippine independence movement by vetoing the act of the island legislature providing for a plebiscite on the subject. In a letter to Governor General Wood he asserted that quite aside from economic or political reasons the veto was justifiable on the grounds that Presidential approval might be interpreted as an expression of the American people favoring immediate independence of the Philippine islands; that the act makes no provision for canvassing all the racial groups in the islands, and that under such conditions the result of the proposed referendum might create friction and would be unconvincing.

The letter stated that the agitation for independence is largely based on the misapprehension that the United States, even though granting full independence, would still assume "the heavy responsibility of guaranteeing the security, sovereignty and independence of the islands."

"In my opinion," writes the President, "this is wholly erroneous."

OUT of the most virulent campaign that Chicago has ever enjoyed, William Hale Thompson emerged victor, being elected mayor on the Republican ticket with a plurality of 83,072 over Mayor W. E. Dever, Democrat. The result was largely due to the heavy vote cast by the negro population of the city and by those who favor a liberal policy in the enforcement of the prohibition laws. There must have been some such reasons, for Thompson's two previous administrations offered few arguments in his favor, and his self-made campaign issues were of such ludicrous stuff as "America First" and abusive attacks on King George of England and the League of Nations.

ITALY and Hungary, through Premiers Mussolini and Count Bethlen, signed last week a treaty which declares "there shall be constant peace and perpetual friendship" between the two kingdoms. All disputes between them are to be submitted to attempts at conciliation, and should that fail, to arbitration. The Italian government regards the treaty as an important step in its program to attain a new balance of power, not for war but for peace. Skeptical correspondents in Rome look on it as part of Mussolini's policy of political isolation for Yugo-Slavia and eventual breaking up of the little entente, and the curbing of France's power in the Balkans. But the Rome newspapers said conversations were going on that might lead to the ratification by Yugo-Slavia of the Nettuno agreement and settle all outstanding questions between that country and Italy.

Sweden and Austria exchanged final ratifications of a treaty which makes war between them illegal under all circumstances. Sweden's safety now seems assured, for she has similar pacts with Norway, Denmark, Poland, Finland, Germany, Czechoslovakia and Belgium.

DISASTER finally overtook Commander de Pinedo, the Italian "four continent" flier, after he got fairly started on the North American part of his tour. At Roosevelt Dam, Ariz., when he was just starting for San Diego, someone threw a lighted match on the oil-covered surface of the water and started a blaze that within a few moments had utterly destroyed the big seaplane that had flown across the Atlantic and over much of South America. De Pinedo and his crew escaped unhurt. The United States War department immediately offered the aviator an army plane to continue his tour but word came from Rome that the Italian government would send over a new plane. So De Pinedo said he would go from California to New York to get the plane and would then fly to Washington, Philadelphia, New Orleans, St. Louis and thence up to Canada.

SACCO and Vanzetti, whose conviction in Massachusetts in 1921 for murder has been violently protested by radicals everywhere ever since, were denied a new trial by the Massachusetts Supreme court, and their only chance of escaping the punishment to which they will soon be sentenced is the possibility that their lawyer will find some means of carrying the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. The new trial was asked because one Celestino Madeiros, under sentence of death for another murder, confessed that he and a gang of fellow gunmen committed the crime with which Sacco and Vanzetti were charged. The defense always has claimed that the two men were convicted not because the jury thought them guilty but because they were admitted radicals.

EDWARD M. WILKINS, American electrical engineer who was kidnaped for ransom and then murdered by Mexican bandits near Guadalajara, has been avenged. Seven men who were arrested by the troops and whose leader was identified by Mr. Wilkins' little son, were tried by court-martial, found guilty and executed.

In Mexico City Gen. Federico Cordova and four accomplices were arrested and the general confessed an elaborate plot for kidnaping Americans, partly to obtain ransom and partly to embarrass the Mexican government in its relations with the United States. The first victim was to be Albert E. Watts of New York, the multi-millionaire vice president of the Sinclair Oil company. Cordova is the man whose band in 1919 captured William Jenkins, American consular agent, and obtained $150,000 for his release.

VICE PRESIDENT DAWES, returned from Panama, ruled that the senate campaign expenditures committee had not lost its power, and appointed Senator Fess of Ohio to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Senator Goff of West Virginia.

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 16: 13-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Pleases Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC — Confessing Our Faith in Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Confessing Christ Openly.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What think ye of Christ?

The disciples had been with the Lord for several years. They had heard His wonderful words and witnessed His mighty works. Various opinions were extant about Him. Since Jesus was soon to go to the cross it was necessary for the disciples to have a definite and true conception of Him. In order to help them into the right conception, He provoked this confession from Peter as the spokesman of the group of disciples.

I. Peter's Confession (vv. 13-16).

1. How provoked.

Two questions of Christ put to the disciples called forth this great confession.

(1) Whom do men say I, the Son of Man, am (v. 13).

1. He first inquired for the opinion of the people concerning Him. As a wise teacher He knew that this would help crystallize the view of the disciples. The people recognized Jesus as a teacher or a prophet, with more than human authority and power. Today, as then, there is a diversity of opinion among the people as to Jesus Christ. The multitudes today recognize Jesus as an unique personality and as having been a great teacher, but that which offends them is His deity.

(2) "Whom say ye that I am?" (v. 15).

This question involved the personal opinion of the disciples concerning Him. To be able to tell what others think of Jesus is not enough. There must be definite, correct and personal belief in Him. Personal belief is worth infinitely more than the knowledge of what others think, for upon personal belief hinges character and destiny.

2. What Peter's confession involved (v. 16).

Two vital things, the Messiahship and deity of Jesus. That which Jesus called forth from Peter is the burning question of today. "What think ye of Christ?" is the question that must be answered by everyone.

3. Christ's commendation of Peter (v. 17).

He pronounced him blessed. Truly he was blessed, for he both possessed and confessed Christ.

II. The New Body, the Church, Announced by Christ (vv. 18-20).

Christ declared His intention of bringing into existence a new body, to the members of which He will give eternal life and into whose hands He would entrust the keys of the Kingdom. Peter was to have a distinguished place in this body. Christ declared that Peter should be the foundation stone in His church. Christ is the chief corner stone upon which the church is built. Christ's person and Messiahship were confessed by Peter and on this rock (truth confessed) is laid the foundation of the apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20). All believers are living stones of this house (I Pet. 2:5). The keys entrusted to Peter were used on the day of Pentecost and again in the case of Cornelius.

III. The Cross the Way to the Throne (vv. 21-23).

From that time Jesus began to show unto the disciples how that He must go unto Jerusalem and suffer many things, be killed and raised again the third day. This indeed startled the disciples. They did not yet realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the passion of the cross. So unwelcome was this announcement that Peter cried: "This shall not be unto thee." Peter later saw through this darkness to the glory of the hilltops. A new hope then filled his heart (I Pet. 1:8, 4). Many are yet stumbling over the doctrine of salvation and redemption through the suffering of the cross. Salvation by blood is hated by the devil.

IV. The Cost of Discipleship (v. 24).

To follow Christ means to suffer. It means to turn one's back upon the world.

1. There must be denial of self. There is a wide difference between self-denial and the denial of self.

2. Take up His cross.

This cross is the suffering and shame which lie in the path of loyalty to God.

3. Follow Christ.

This means to have the mind of Christ; to be like Christ. Christ will come in glory to reward all such.

The Power of God

Many a battle has been won by the arrival of reinforcements. When a man is fighting a battle against his evil tendencies, the coming of the power of God into his soul often means victory. The human reinforced by the divine assures us of heaven.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Nature has a power to show what is inside of a man that responds to God on the outside.—Echoes.

Your Kidneys
Must Function Properly For You to be Well

LATE hours, rich foods and stimulating drinks are all hard on our kidneys. If their action becomes sluggish, they do not thoroughly cleanse the blood of poisonous wastes.

Such impurities may make one dull, tired and achy, with often a toxic backache, drowsy headaches and dizziness. A common symptom of imperfect kidney function is scanty or burning excretions.

Thousands have learned the virtue of Doan's Pills, stimulant diuretic in these conditions. 50,000 users have publicly recommended Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

50,000 Users Endorse Doan's

Lambert W. Cox, Westover, Md., says "Doan's Pills proved their value to me. My kidneys actad sluggishly and the secretions were scant and scalding. There was such a soreness across my back that I couldn't bend or stoop. I was told to use Doan's Pills and shall always be glad that I did. They put me in fine shape."

Or Your Money Back

Here is a surgeon's wonderful prescription now dispensed by pharmacists at trifling cost, that will do more towards helping you get rid of unsightly spots and skin diseases than anything you've ever used.

Not only does this great healing antiseptic oil promote rapid and healthy healing in open sores and wounds, but boils, abcesses and ulcers that are discharging are almost immediately relieved and cleanly healed.

In skin diseases its action is little less than magical. The itching of eczema is instantly stopped; the eruptions dry up and scale off in a very few days. The same is true of barbers' itch, salt rheum and other irritating and unsightly skin troubles.

You can obtain Moone's Emerald Oil in the original bottle at any modern drug store. It is safe to use, and failure in any of the ailments noted above is next to impossible. Your druggist can supply you at any time.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, is a carefree youth whose chief activities are fishing and hunting. Proud of his marksmanship, he gives an exhibition before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on a beach near him. The men bury a chest while he watches. The work finished, he sees two of the strangers kill the third. The actual slayer is the man with whom Lindsay had talked the day before. Lindsay's presence is discovered.

The silence lengthened; from the distance the whistle of a flock of plew camo to my ears. How strange, reflected idly, that that should be e last sound I would hear; and then, owly, deliberately, the dark pirate wered his weapon until its muzzle inted toward the ground. Then me the reaction. A momentary ainness and dizziness seized me; I lt myself sway, almost threw out arm for support. Then, with a eat fear lest these men should mock cowardice, I bit my lip savagely, rust my nails into my flesh, and the eakness passed.

Burford turned inquiringly toward e man in the red coat. The captain's face was alight with some emoon that I could not fathom; the awning of some new idea was there, d whatever it was, it must have leased him hugely, for all at once began to laugh, not openly and eartily, as I was accustomed to see en laugh, but silently, and as it eemed to me, evilly. Presently, since e did not communicate to his comanion the reason for it, my friend of esterday inquired with some sharpess, "What cause for laughter?"

"Cause?" answered the captain, beoming grave again. "Much cause. hat if we sent this one in place of he other?"

What he meant by this was unnown to me, but evidently Burford nderstood, for he seemed to ponder or a moment, then queried, "What ain?"

"What gain?" Barclay repeated. All the gain in the world. I spare is life; hence he goes as my man. He will be welcomed without suspiion; the fatted calf, perhaps, will be illed for him. And at a time appointd he delivers my enemy into my and."

What they were talking about I had ot the remotest idea, but I could see hat what red-coat said impressed his enchman. For an instant Burford tood in silence, then glanced at me ith a scrutinizing and critical air. "But they have the other's picture, nd he has a scar."

Captain Barclay, smiling as if at ome humorous thought which I could ot comprehend, answered lightly, "A imple enough matter, my dear Burord; simple enough."

Burford appeared to have no more bjections, and I was beginning to hink that for some mysterious reason I was going to be saved after all, when uddenly the captain gave a sharp exclamation of disappointment. "Ah, I orgot," he said. "The other is a dead hot. That, in fact, is the main reaon for his coming—to drill the bodyguard. The old fox adds other reaons, but if I know my man it's the marksman and not the nephew he wants. So unless this lad can shoot like the devil himself, we must give up the plan."

Again I shuddered, partly at his words but even more at the business-like way in which he once more raised his pistol, as if to complete his work where he had abandoned it. But this time, for a change, it was Burford who was to come to my aid. "But he can shoot like the devil himself," he exclaimed. "I saw him only yesterday kill three sea-ducks with three bullets, and two of the birds were on the wing."

The captain hesitated; finally his fingers, to my great relief, left the handle of his too-ready pistol. "It may have been chance," he answered, gazing at me as if suspicious of my merits as a marksman. "Still, we can see. Go to the gig, Burford, and bring me my gun."

Burford departed. The dark captain stood waiting silently until his follower returned and handed him his piece. Gradually, while we had been talking, the mist had begun to fade, so that now, while it was still impossible to see to any distance, yet for a space of perhaps one hundred yards around us the air was tolerably clear, and the faint light of the sun could be seen, painting the gray a pale and beautiful gold. From the mainland, where they had spent the night in the fresh-water ponds and streams, flocks of ducks were passing continuously out to sea. Indeed, the captain had no sooner taken the gun from Burford's hand than, heralded by a rapid beat of wings, a single black duck hurtled by overhead. Like a flash, the piece leaped to his shoulder, and the bird, struck dead in midair, turned over and over and crashed heavily upon the sand. Without the slightest emotion, the captain handed me my gun. "Do likewise," he commanded. And with a significant touch of finger on pistol butt, he added curtly, "No tricks, mind."

I was in no mood for tricks. Nor, to be honest, was I eager to enter this test of marksmanship, for I knew that my nerves had been sorely tried, and I knew also how simple a matter it is for the best-aimed charge to scatter and fail to strike a vital spot. However, there was but one thing to do, and a second later a widgeon shot out of the fog, and, catching sight of us, began towering upward with the speed and elusiveness for which a wild duck is noted. It was not an easy shot; yet so strong was the fowler's instinct in my heart that without thought I swung on the bird, and, hitting him with the very center of my heavy charge, fairly drove him upward through the air before he turned over and dropped lifeless within a dozen feet of where we stood.

The captain said nothing, nor from the expression on his face could I tell whether or not he was pleased at my display. "Load," he commanded curtly, and handed his own piece to Burford to be recharged. Once again we stood prepared, and before a minute had passed a pair of low-flying pintail drakes swept by us, separating, as they glimpsed us, and passing one to our right, one to our left, giving us a close, but none too easy cross-shot. At once the cautious Burford dropped flat to escape the chance of being hit, and the captain, picking the bird on the right, shot him neatly out of the air. I, perforce, took the one on the left, but, to my horror, though I felt that I had held straight and true, he flew on as if untouched. From the corner of my eye I could see the captain's hand reaching for his pistol. "No, no," I cried. "Wait!" For many a time I had known a duck to fly on as if unhurt, then suddenly collapse, stone-dead. And, fortunately for me, this was to prove one of those instances, for before the drake had reached the borders of the encircling fog, all at once his wings folded to his sides, and darting downward through the air, he splashed, lifeless, into the sea.

"Go to the Gig, Burford, and Bring Me My Gun."

The captain gazed at me as if uncertain whether it was luck or skill that was aiding me, and would, I think, have tested me yet again, but as he handed the gun to his subordinate, a flock of about twenty scaup ducks, closely massed, passed overhead, but well out of gunshot. With a sudden exclamation, he stooped, seized my rifle from the ground, leveled it and fired. I fairly held my breath; if he made a shot like this, then in all probability my doom was sealed. And for a second I thought he had been successful, for one of the flock started to fall, then, to my intense relief, recovered and flew strongly on after his companions, while through the clear, transparent air a single feather floated down.

The captain pointed upward, not, I felt, without pride. "A feather, at least," he exclaimed. "Can you better that, my young cockerel?" And he handed me my rifle.

I felt that it was now or never. What might be the humor of this strange man I knew not, but I sensed instinctively that he was inordinately vain of his skill, and that whatever might be the object of this difficult test, he was most eager to prove that he was a finer shot than a mere country boy. Yet, strangely enough, so keen in most men's minds is this desire to excel, that even now, while my life hung on the result of the next shot, and while I was of two minds whether it would be to my advantage to win or lose, still, illogically enough, while I felt my better chance to be to humor the captain's pride by missing, and thus perhaps continuing to live, I nevertheless stood ready to do my best, and if I must die, at least to die with the memory of a shot well sped to lighten my pangs.

I had not long to wait. Again a whistle of wings, and a half dozen red-heads emerged from the fog. They took no notice of us, but passed directly over our heads, at almost precisely the same range as the flock at which the captain had fired. Two beautiful birds were flying close together and almost directly in line, and as they passed overhead I sighted at the leader, swung ahead, and pressed the trigger. Never in my life have I felt a keener thrill than when from out of the flock a beautiful drake dropped onto the sand, and lay there, beating his wings in his dying agonies.

"Fetch it!" cried the captain imperiously; and I obeyed. The bird was dead by the time I had reached it, and, bringing it back, I handed it in silence to the captain. Through the dark breasts and out of the back at the base of the neck the ball had sped. The captain looked first at the duck, then at me. "A good shot," he admitted half reluctantly; then, as if realizing that this was inadequate praise, he added, more heartily, "An excellent shot."

I made no answer. It has always been one of my many failings to permit my emotions to show too readily in my face, and this must have been the case in the present instance, for the captain, eying me keenly, abruptly inquired, "Why should you be gloomy? Are you not satisfied with your aim?"

And now, utterly reckless as it was, for no one, I think, could have blamed me for concealing the truth, I had to yield to impulse and blurt it out. "I am gloomy," I answered, "because I missed my bird. They were flying faster than I thought, and they were higher than I thought; the fog deceived me. I held on the leader of the two; this drake was just behind. I deserve no praise! I missed."

Both the captain and his henchman stared at me as they might have stared at a lunatic; then simultaneously they roared with laughter. "In God's name," cried Barclay, when he could speak, "here at last we have Honesty; rampant, roaring Honesty, the greatest handicap to a man in the whole wide world." And yet he did not seem ill-pleased either, perhaps because he felt that his reputation was restored; but in any event, to my great joy, his hand kept clear of his pistol butt. Evidently, for the time at least, my life was saved.

Every moment the fog was thinning beneath the rays of the sun, and now, observing the captain cast a quick glance out to sea, I followed the direction of his gaze and saw, some distance away, a handsome black schooner, hove to. That this was his vessel I had no doubt; and evidently he thought it time to be rejoining her, for pointing to the corpse of his murdered follower, he said curtly: "Set that carrion adrift," and without more ado walked off in the direction of the gig.

With the utmost loathing, I turned to my hateful task, but so huge was the bulk of the dead sailor that I should have fared ill had it not been for the assistance of Burford. Between us, we managed to drag the body to the westerly shore and cast it adrift, I half-sick with disgust, Burford unconcernedly humming a tune. Then, as we turned to retrace our steps, he laid a hand on my arm and made a gesture in the direction the captain had taken. "Capt. Francis Barclay," he said quietly, "is better known, in the Caribbean, as the Black Panther. One of your friends in the tavern was right."

Here, then, was one more surprise in this morning of grim adventures, but by this time, as it seemed to me, nothing in the world could greatly have startled me; I accepted the news almost as a matter of course, and walking on by Burford's side, I found the captain impatiently waiting for us in the stern of the gig.

"Take the stroke oar, Burford," he commanded. "And you, young man," he added with a frown, "shove off, then take the bow oar, and see that you handle it like a sailor and keep pace with Burford, or it may be the worse for you."

I paid small heed, however, either to his frown or his threat, for I could row with the best, and knew it. Shoving off, therefore, I took my place as directed and a moment later we had left the island astern.

CHAPTER III

The Panther Strikes.

For the first few moments I thought only of what I was doing, putting my back lustily into every heave of the oars, and taking care to keep the most absolute time with Burford, who certainly set a lively and dashing stroke for me to follow. But since the captain, after a careless glance in my direction, seemed satisfied with my prowess and paid no further heed to me, I settled down mechanically into the rhythm of the steady sweep, and improved the opportunity to take, as it were, account of stock, and to look ahead to see whither this strange adventure was leading me.

For one thing, it was only too clear that I was among men with whom the life of a fellow creature counted for nothing. A word—a blow—a knife thrust or a pistol shot—that was their mode of life, not so much, perhaps, immoral as absolutely unmoral, without a law of God or man to check their fierce and unbridled passions. If only, by good luck, I could find myself once more armed, then I knew that whether I liked it or not it would be myself for my own hand—my life against that of every other man—and devil take the hindmost.

So much was clear. I could have wished that I had been equally certain of the reasons which had caused the unlooked-for staying of the captain's hand. Who was this "other" to whom they had referred—an inch taller than I, with a scar on his cheek, and a dead shot with rifle or gun? And for what reason was I to take his place, and deliver the captain's enemy into the captain's hands? There was no use in puzzling my tired wits; I must wait and see.

Curiously enough, though I admit it with shame, in spite of the fact that I was in imminent danger, in spite of the fact that I might never see another sunrise, yet so wayward is youth, so avid of adventure and contact with the world, that I was all eagerness to see this pirate ship, and thrilled with excitement every time I looked at the spare, silent figure in the stern, those keen eyes looking straight ahead, those delicate hands resting lightly on the tiller ropes. This man had just committed a hideous murder; had rewarded a follower with the basest treachery; and I felt my whole nature cry out against him in revolt. And yet, explain it as you will, there is something so wonderful in the display of power, something so magnificent in the man who leads, who lords it over his fellows, that now, against my will, I found myself admiring this ruffian for his high and mighty ways, and marveled as I thought of the seas which he had sailed, the rich vessels he had looted, of his prowess as a fighter, and of the almost charmed life that he bore.

So meditating, I paid small heed to the passing moments until a curt word of command told me that we had reached our craft, and the next instant we had shot alongside, and the captain had leaped aboard, leaving Burford and myself to follow in his wake. Before I had time even to cast a glance around her decks, Burford, with extended arm, pointed to the east'ard, to a dense column of smoke on the horizon, and whispered in my ear: "There's what's left of the Eastern Star."

I heard him with a sinking of the heart. This, then, was the fate of the bark I had seen loading only two days before, and the first taste of pirates and their ways made me realize more keenly than ever where I was, that I must keep my wits about me and, until I could find a chance to arm myself, my fists ready to strike. Then, glancing hastily around me, I saw that I was aboard a beautiful craft, schooner rigged, of perhaps two hundred tons, with lines which told any one familiar with the sea that she must be capable of great speed. Once more Burford pointed, this time aloft, and I saw that from her main topmast there floated a white flag, and in the middle a panther, sable, crouched to spring. "Another of your friends," said Burford grimly, "was right;" and with this he left me, giving me my first chance to look forward and see with what material the craft was manned.

Put Faith in Image to Frighten Smallpox

Motoring along a country road in India, the attention of tourists was called to a curious-looking object by the roadside. It was a roughly carved little image, mounted on a small stool, with three legs.

The image betrayed no signs of expert workmanship and was quite clearly the handwork of some rough village carpenter. They eyes and mouth were roughly carved, and vermillion paint brought these into prominence. The little creature had also two wooden arms.

Stopping the car, the tourists waited until some villager came along the road, and questioned him as to the reason why this image had been left by the roadside. He pointed out that it had been placed a few yards over the boundary line of the village, and that it had been there since the early hours of the morning.

It was an image of the goddess of the village temple, so common in south India, and represented the deity who controls smallpox. The scourge had broken out and had laid low a number of people, and it was felt that unless the goddess could be persuaded to transfer the evil more would fall sick.

So the little image was made and removed outside the bounds of the village. Naturally the people in the next village did not appreciate this attention, and the custom is to move it from village to village. Then sometimes it is possible to get a Mohammedan, for a small fee, to destroy it completely.

Thus does the Indian villager deal with the troublesome disease.

TUCKS AND PLAITS ADD CHARM; FLOWERS NOW FEATURE HATS

TUCKS and plaits have formed a union. By doing team-work they are contributing a twofold effectiveness to many a springtime frock. This employing of both tucks and plaits in the styling of dress is characteristic of many of the newer styles. The tucks are usually assigned to the blouse, and the plaits to the skirt, after the manner described by the modish two-tone silk frock in the picture. Sometimes the two are even more intimately interworked, for the idea of tucks plus plaits is being carried out in many intricate ways.

Simple Little Frock.

As to tucking, novelty is the word this season. 'Tis a fact, tucks have departed from the "straight and narrow path." No longer do they follow the course of row-on-row regularity. Rather are they taking to strange and devious curves, zig-zags, scallops, diagonals, and the favored of all is sunburst tucking, the same radiating from a center like spokes of a wheel.

Not even for as simple a little frock as this in the picture do tucks run straight. They sort of loop-the-loop in a series of curves on the blouse and the result is an added touch of artistry to the general effect.

As to the plaits in the skirt, they are the all-around kind, not merely extending across the front as was the fashion some time ago. The very wide inset belt is an outstanding style item in this dress, as is also the self-fabric 'kerchief necktie. This frock also carries out the prevailing idea of employing two tones of silk.

Speaking of the novel use of tucks, very smart is the blouse, tucked from neck to hem, those at the top being quite tiny, gradually widening toward the bottom, until at the hemline the final tuck is maybe two inches wide. The same method of graduated tucks running around-and-around is employed for the long snug-fitting sleeves.

At last, flowers, which have been so long absent from milady's chapeau, have re-entered the millinery picture. When certain little violet toques came sailing across the sea to our shores straight from a leading atelier of Paris, they brought with them a promise of more flowers to follow. So it is, that at this moment, more interest is being shown in flower-trimmed hats than for many seasons.

Violets! Myriads of them forming a cunning flower toque, the same accompanied by a flirtatious nose-veil of malines, that is the way the mode foretells a leading spring vogue. Oh! yes, the shoulder bouquet of violets to match must not be forgotten.

Quite as fascinating are the close-fitting crochet visca hats, as are those of fine milan straw, on which is positioned over one ear a cluster of lovely spring posies, and of course, there must be the accompaniment of a shoulder flower piece, a replica of the one on her "bonnet."

Flower-on-hat answering to flower-on-shoulder bids fair to become a habit with the woman of fashion this season, and the effect is as lovely as springtime itself.

Flat flower work is most charmingly interpreting this season's floral vogue. With genuine artistry, milliners are designing shapely pads made of single blossoms, these applied to the hat so as not to disturb its contour. Particularly is this method carried out when trimming the larger shapes, as illustrated at the top in this group.

Some of the French models bear flower bouquets posed high at the side of the crown as shown on the first hat in the picture. The toque to the right at the top is of wide satin-faced moire ribbon, with two large roses becomingly posed to one side. Lavender hydrangeas trim the straw-with-velvet-crown toque below to the left. Two shades of yellow with black velvet form the side crown of the daisy toque which completes this group.

EASTER

Next Sunday, April 17, commemorates the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

It typifies the transition from the old into the new—from the mortal to the immortal.

It is an occasion therefore of feasting, of budding of spring, the glorification of new and more beautiful life.

It is a day of rejoicing that a Redeemer who died for the salvation of the world has risen again to bid welcome to new hopes, new ambitions, new resolves, and to a better and more consecrated people.

The Easter season is one of glad acclaim, but it is sanctified by all of the sacred traditions of a faultless life, and by the promises of a Divine word It must be so celebrated.

Faith in the risen Christ has withstood the fiercest assaults through a core of centurie, and is today stronger than ever before. The gentle Jew, born in the lowly manger of Bethlehem, this kindly philosopher of the valleys and plains of Judea, this minister of 'ove and service, crucified on Calvary's cross and buried in a borrowed tomb—this risen Christ before whom millions how today in humble adoration lives in the hearts of mankind

The world knows no finer, gentler, more helpful occasion than its annually recurring Easter celebration. It is an event that has been celebrated in some manner by many people of all ages

More people think of religion and larger congregations attend church on Easter Sunday than on any other Prepare to start Easter Sunday right by going to church. The glad hand of welcome will greet you at either of the Klemme churches next Sunday

Summer Furs

More than 100,000,000 rabbit skins are now being annually used in this country. Most of them are made up into sealskin coats to keep our loved ones warm during the trying days of July and August.

ONLY SIX CARS LIVE STOCK DURING PAST WEEK

Bad Roads Have Effect On Shipment Out Of Klemme

Six car loads of live stock comprises the total shipments from the Klemme yards for the past week, a decided drop from last weeks large shipment and about fifty pre cent less than the average winter shipments for the past four or five months.

Five car loads were shipped out Saturday night. The Klemme Shipping Association had four car loads consisting of three car loads of hogs and one car load of cattle. C. A. Larsen had one car load of hogs.

On Tuesday night C. A. Larsen shipped out a car load of hogs, and bringing the total weekly shipments up to six car loads.

Let Us Help You With Your Fence Work

WHETHER you are going to put up boundary, cross or temporary fences see us first. We can save you a lot of hard work and valuable time. We'll show you how one man can do a week's fencing job in one day and get a fence line that will last for many years—one that in the long run gets the most years of service from the fence and proves to be the cheapest investment in fencing that you ever made.

The secret of it is RED TOP Steel Posts—that can be driven into any condition of soil any time of the year—that can be driven at the rate of 200 to 300 a day by one man and aligned perfectly—that cost less in the long run by outlasting 4 or 5 ordinary posts, saving cost, valuable time and expensive labor—that get the most years of useful service out of any fence by holding it in steady security year after year.

Steel Fence Posts

Because we handle nothing but the best merchandise we handle RED TOP posts. We know it to be made of tough, springy, long-lived railroad steel—that none is better no matter how much you may pay for it—that thousands of RED TOPS are giving this extraordinary service today after many years in the fence lines of American farmers. And RED TOPS can be easily withdrawn and re-driven in a new location, making the changing of a fence line comparatively easy.

Come in and let us show you how you can save money on fencing, and make it a quick and easy job.

"Dawn Man's" Relation to the Present Race

The six million-year-old "dawn man," heralded recently by some scientists as "man's first ancestor," cannot rightfully be called such, according to Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, Harvard, geologist.

"Man is an evolved being and so is the monkey," said Doctor Mather. "At some place way back in the dim past, their genealogical trails crossed. The 'dawn man' is a separate offshoot from the common tree, neither man or monkey but related to both.

"The 'dawn man' lived 6,000,000 years ago. The ancestors of man were in existence long before that. True we have no skeletons as yet of older date, but there is evidence of evolution in what we have found. Hence, we logically assume that there was evolution prior to the 'dawn man.'"

Present Age Not One of Formality

William Lyón Phelps has a new name for this age.

"In 1927," he writes in Scribner's Magazine, "men are not yet able to wear doublet and hose, and while the newest dinner-jackets show some startling variations, the evening dress of gentlemen is fairly uniform. But the golf stockings that I am wearing at this blessed moment would have been hooted at in the streets in 1890. Women arrange their hair and their features in public; if a man of the nineties could suddenly wake up and find himself in a modern theater, the audience would afford a more arresting spectacle than the play.

"There is nothing immoral in all this; but it is certainly informal. This universal informality makes the manners and clothes of 1890 seem as remote as the Thirteenth century."

Financier

All winter he has been the envy of Broadway's sheiks and flappers because of his gorgeous overcoat. The other day he made the rounds without it, to the wonderment of all who knew him.

"It cost me $550," he remarked, "and there was a final payment of $100 due, so I decided, inasmuch as spring is near at hand, to do a bit of financing. I hocked the coat for $150 and paid the $100 due and had $50 left for spending money. The coat is in storage for the summer months and by next fall I ought to be able to dig up the $150 to get it out of uncle's shop."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Pictures on the Clouds

Successful experiments in projecting pictures on the clouds, recently carried out at Jena, Germany, may result in the sky being used as a giant advertising board.

By means of this invention pictures may be thrown, giant-size, on the clouds, and during the recent experiments pictures came out with great clearness.

It is thought that in the near future it will be possible to show moving pictures in this way. But what would the proprietors of cinema theaters have to say about such an innovation?

It is sometimes easier to keep out of the matrimonial harness than it is to get out.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Message of Easter

HERE'S YOUR EASTER LILY

CHILDREN ROLLING EGGS ON THE WHITE HOUSE LAWN

SECRETARY DAVIS AND FAMILY HAVE A SHARE IN THE FUN

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

EASTER SUNDAY this year falls on April 17. Last year it was April 4 and the year before, it was April 12. Next year it will fall on April 8. As everybody knows it is a variable date, sometimes falling in March and sometimes in April, but under the present method of reckoning the Easter Sunday date, it cannot come earlier than March 22 nor later than April 25. For the reason that Easter Sunday is a variable date, it therefore does not have the significance as a red-letter date on American calendars that other dates, such as New Year's day, Christmas day, Independence day, Washington's birthday and Lincoln's birthday, have. In this relation it is more like Thanksgiving day or Labor day in being always a certain day of the week, but varying as to the day of the month.

More important, of course, than its significance as a red-letter day on our calendars is the inherent significance of the day itself. To the Christian world it is the anniversary of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. But that does not mean that the essential spirit of Easter means something to one part of humanity, set off from the rest by a religious classification, and means nothing to the rest of the human race. For Easter has a significance to all humankind and the keynote of that significance is the one word "resurrection."

Look at the word itself—Easter. It is derived from the word East, and East is one of the four cardinal points. It is also the cardinal point which has always been most important in all religious ceremonies of all races and creeds. This is because it is the part of the heavens where the sun is seen to rise—the sun, bringer of light and heat, the very giver of life itself! The most primitive intelligence of the most primitive man recognized the fact that the sun and life were inseparably associated and it was only natural that when he came to worship the thing which was greater than he, he should turn to the East whence came that greater and higher thing which he recognized as being the life-giving power.

So each day was to him a cycle of a whole lifetime. In the morning as the sun came up, life came into being. As the sun mounted in the heavens life grew in its lusty youth and increased in power. At its zenith, life, too, was at its highest point. As the sun declined, so life declined into old age, into weakness, until there came darkness, the synonym for death. After a period of darkness, life came again. There was a resurrection and once more, the cycle of a life-time compressed into 24 hours, there was life!

And that, stripped of all the tradition, myth, legend, custom and social practice that has attached itself to Easter, is the spirit and the message of Easter, all concentrated in the one word "resurrection." So Easter has a significance that no other red-letter day on our calendars has and that significance is the significance of one of the fundamental and inevitable facts of existence. It is conceivable that all other red-letter days may be abolished from our calendars, that the calendar itself may be done away with. But, no matter what may happen, so long as human life exists on this earth, the spirit of Easter will survive. When it ends, then ends all hope for mankind, all reason for mankind's struggle to exist.

If "resurrection" is the the spirit and the message of Easter, then the inmost essence of that spirit can be summed up in the one word "Immortality." If man can find an answer to the old, old question that has troubled him through the ages, the question "Does death end all?" he can find it in the message of Easter. It is reassurance that the struggle to live is worth while and that he does not face a hopeless task. Even if he did not have the comfort of his religion to help him arrive at that belief, he finds it in the mere fact of living. Each day, each year and each lifetime he sees the cycle repeated. The sun comes up in the morning and goes down into darkness at night. But he knows that it will come up again the next morning. Each 24 hours he sees the miracle of resurrection. New life is manifest in the animal and vegetable kingdoms with each recurring spring. It ripens in the heat of summertime and mellows into maturity in the autumn, only to die in the cold of winter. But he knows that life will begin against next spring. Each 12 months he sees the miracle of resurrection. A baby is born, passes through childhood, grows into youth, reaches man's estate and then declines into old age. What if the darkness of death is only a matter of a few years away? He has seen the recurring miracle of resurrection every 24 hours and every 12 months. Why should not man, reasoning logically from this evidence of which he is aware every day of his life, believe that the cycle of a lifetime includes a resurrection just as does the daily cycle and the yearly cycle? He does so believe and from that belief comes his belief in the life everlasting, in immortality.

Perhaps it would be more accurate to say he chooses to believe. For few men, if any, have ever solved the riddle of life to their utter satisfaction. They constantly grope for the truth, seeking, always seeking, the answer to the unsolved problems of life. They have the never-ending longing in their hearts for everlasting life and they choose to believe, and take comfort from the belief, that they shall have it.

So whether he be primitive man or modern, civilized man, whether he be Christian or heathen, the essential spirit of Easter, the message of Easter is the same—it is a message of hope, a message of joy and a promise and a fulfillment in one. That message is delivered to man in many forms. It comes to him in the riot of bird songs which greet the sun on every morning in spring. It comes to him in the greenness of the grass, in the swelling buds on the trees, in the flowers which push their way up through the earth when the warming touch of the sun is laid upon it. It comes to him in the softness of the blue sky, in the fleecy clouds floating above him and in the gentle caress of the breezes that touch his face as he goes forth to start each day's work. It comes to him, too, as he watches young animal life about him—lambs, calves and colts wabbling about unsteadily at first and then, as they gain strength, running around in those funny, awkward, stiff-legged little jumps which are always so fascinating to watch.

It comes to him every minute of the day as Nature, in all her forms, cries out exultingly "Spring has come! Spring has come!" Even if she did not tell him in these words, he would know it himself—in the surge of new strength in his own body, in the quickening of his blood after its winter sluggishness. As he hears the call of spring and the message of Easter he feels the desire to pass the message along. He passes it along in as many ways as it comes to him—in the happy note in his voice as he greets his friends, in the little snatches of song which he finds himself singing and in the effort which he makes constantly to put that message into words.

One of those efforts takes the form of writing poetry. Even though the spring poet is a subject for many of our stock jokes, the fact remains that the urge to write poetry is a part of man's effort to pass along the message of spring. For all spring poetry is fundamentally an effort to express the feeling of resurrected life. And Easter, which represents the crystallized spirit of spring, probably brings forth more attempts at poetic expression—and perhaps more real poetry—than any other day on our calendar.

Though the theme of all the Easter poems may vary, through them all runs the thread of rejoicing, rejoicing in the return of new life to the fields and woods, rejoicing in the new hope that springs up in human hearts at the coming of the springtime and more especially at the thought that Easter means the promise of life everlasting. These poems illustrate those joyous thoughts:

At Easter Time

Easter lilies, daffodils,
All the world their perfume fills,
While adown the dim aisles ringing
Hallelujahs. Hark the singing,
Echoed in the far-off hills.

Waiting time is o'er at last;
Finished all the prayer and fast;
Woodland songs are echoing,
Woodland bowers beckoning;
All the waiting time is past.

Hail the glad, sweet Easter Day!
Lifted is the veil of gray.
Christ is risen in His glory;
It is finished now, the story;
Clouds of gloom have rolled away.

Hallelujah! Joyous sound;
What was sought at last is found,
Through the dim aisles hear it ringing,
All through woodlands hear the singing,
Echoing the world around.—Anon.

Easter Day

Words cannot utter Christ His returning:
Mankind, keep jubilee,
Strip off your mourning,
Crown you with garlands,
Set your lamps burning.

Speech is left speechless;
Set you to singing,
Fling your hearts open wide,
Set your bells ringing:
Christ the Chief Reaper
Comes, His sheaf bringing.

Earth wakes her song-birds,
Puts on her flowers,
Leads out her lambkins,
Builds up her bowers:

Corpus Christi

Haste, flaming torches of advancing dawn,
Unto the Tomb, confirm its vacancy,
That every eye in certain day can see
It is no dream of worn centurion,
Nor any parable of Gentile lore,
That Christ hath risen and goeth on before
His very mourners into Galilee,

Passing mid lilies redolent with prayer—
White as the wings which seraphim unfold
In grace above their coronets of gold,
Or as the robes triumphant saints will wear—
He blesseth by his presence in the way
Each creature waking to eternal day;
Ere this God's purposes were but half told.

His flesh was rent apart on Calvary,
Those veins which opened at the spear's mad thrust
Gave priceless blood unto the very dust:
Yet not all hell could change the prophecy
That not a bone of him should mortals break
Nor worldly kings from him his portion take While high above earth's darkness reigned the Just!

And so, though torn by many a man-made creed
The garments of our faith still seem to be,
The firm foundation of our hope is He.
Bruised, but surviving every foe, the seed
Sown by His Word in stanch and fertile ground
Will bloom till all its flowers of Love abound;
For what shall vanquish Immortality?
—Edna M. LeNart.

HOME ORCHARD IS SADLY NEGLECTED

For every apple tree bearing a good crop it is safe to say that more than a thousand have been planted and allowed to die because of diseases and neglect, it is estimated by Dr. H. W. Anderson, associate chief of pomological pathology at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. If any out of the thousand do survive the diseases they are allowed to become a menace to neighboring commercial orchards which are cared for properly, he said. Better by far that all home orchards should be destroyed than that they should be allowed to breed diseases and insects to infest commercial orchards which represent the investment of fortunes, he believes.

"All of our common fruits suffer each year from numerous diseases. These are due to a variety of causes, such as fungi, bacteria and weather and soil conditions. In some years, such as the past, when dry weather prevails during the spring and early summer, the diseases are few, while in a year of normal rainfall or an excessive rainfall in the spring months, fruit crops that are not carefully protected by sprays are a total failure on account of the numerous diseases.

"Spraying is usually effective in controlling diseases, but some of the bacterial diseases such as fire blight of apple and pear have never been successfully controlled. Spraying, however, unless properly done, is of little value and under any condition is expensive. To those having small farm orchards, the cost of spray apparatus and the time required to make the applications render this method of control highly impractical. Farmers and city dwellers with small plantings have realized this, as evidenced by the neglected orchards and small fruit plantations observed in every section of the state.

"Roadside marketing, however, has made it possible for those who have the advantage of such markets to grow small plantations of trees and other fruits and make them pay. Since spraying operations are costly, these growers should make every effort to reduce their expenses by proper attention to other factors which will reduce the amount of injury.

"When the time comes to spray, study the problem of the type of spray apparatus which will be needed not only when the orchard is young but several years after it comes into bearing. Buy only the best type of spray apparatus. On this point you should consult your experiment station experts. Know what you are spraying for and study the varieties. Much expense can be saved in this way, for it will be found that certain of the varieties never scab or blotch or mildew.

"Some plan of co-operation with other growers in the neighborhood can often be put into effect so that a "spray ring" can be formed and much better apparatus can be purchased. This problem should be carefully studied, since spray rings have not proved successful in many cases, due to lack of efficient organization.

"New spray materials recommended by the manufacturers should never be tried without first consulting the experiment station. Many of these are not only more expensive but are less efficient than well-known and tried preparations."

Black Raspberries Are Different From the Red

Black raspberries are different from the reds in more ways than one; different in color and in flavor of fruit; the bush is larger and more spreading in habit; therefore, the plants require more room. Set two and one-half to three feet in the row and rows about six feet apart. The plants each consist of a shaggy bunch of fine roots with a short piece of stem in the center, which is of no importance at all, surrounded by dormant buds which will push up and make fine strong shoots for next year, if—and listen closely to this if or you will surely fail.

These buds must not be buried deeply in planting or they will never appear above ground and you will lose what you paid for the plants plus your time. Cover the roots, of course, but leave the bud center close to the surface covered with not more than an inch of loose soil, or set the whole plant three or four inches below the surface, being careful not to cover the buds too deeply. As the shoots grow, hoeing and cultivating will fill the hole.

Before the end of the season, the shoots, three or four of them, will reach a height of three to four feet, each one dividing into two or more branches. The stronger ones should be staked and tied to prevent breaking by wind or in cultivating.

Repair Grape Trellises

A vineyard chore which should have attention in the early spring is the repair of the grape trellises. Missing staples should be replaced, though not driven so tightly as to pinch the wires, and the wires tightened. Loose posts should be firmed down and rotted ones be replaced. The strain due to heavy cane growth and the pressure of winds is great on the trellis in a good vineyard and much fruit may be saved by caring for it. Canes usually are tied with square or granny knots.

Sanitation Kills All Swine Risks

Use of System Transforms Industry on Many Farms, at Small Cost.

On many farms the hog business has been transformed through the use of the simple system of swine sanitation which the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, has been demonstrating over the state during the past few years in co-operation with county farm advisers and interested farmers, according to E. T. Robbins, live stock extension specialist.

Last year, for instance, 1,213 farmers in 75 counties of the state cooperated in demonstrating the methods and results of the system to their neighbors. Before the end of the year there were 100 written reports sent in by farm demonstrators from 38 counties. These have been summarized to show results under practical farm conditions.

Sanitation Pigs Best.

These farmers raised 94 per cent of the pigs which were saved at farrowing time, and only one runt developed among every 71 pigs on the average, as compared with one runt to each 11 pigs among those raised the old way. With sanitation the litters raised averaged 1.5 pigs more than previously upon the same farms; the pigs averaged 24 pounds heavier when four months old, and they were ready for market at usual weights when they averaged six weeks younger than usual. The sanitation pigs proved to be more profitable than others, and the men plan to continue to use this sanitation system.

Reports from 39 counties indicate that sanitation herds are comparatively free from "serum breaks" and other troubles after vaccination; that they seem to escape "flu" better than other herds, and that they seem to show more resistance to cholera than do herds raised the old-style "wormy way."

Expensive Equipment Not Needed.

The sanitation system does not require expensive equipment nor supplies. The reports show that the size of litters raised to four months old was actually increased by the use of small field houses for farrowing. The size of litters raised was not much affected by the month of farrowing. The average was 6.3 pigs a litter.

There were fewest runts to 100 pigs where no hogs had been on the pasture for at least a year. The percentage of runts was smallest in large pastures. There were also the fewest runts where there was running water to drink.

There was very little loss of sanitation pigs from sore mouth whether their sharp teeth were cut at birth or not. The size of litters raised was not increased nor the number of runts reduced by the use of expensive minerals. The largest litters were raised and there were the fewest runts where the sanitation work was thoroughly done.

With such a splendid showing in health, vigor, uniformity, cheap gains and larger profits in sanitation herds, it is safe to conclude, as many farmers have said, that, "This is the right way to raise pigs in Illinois," Robbins said.

Early Radishes Favored Over Later Varieties

Radishes have been cultivated by men for many ages. In medieval times, barons spiced the feasts in the castles with dishes of the long and very hot varieties now grown for summer use, such as Chartier and White Strassburg. These take twice as long to mature as the early varieties now available to us, such as the earliest White Olive, Twenty Day, Saxa and Scarlet Globe. Improvements in most vegetables run decidedly to the production of varieties which mature earlier, and probably the greatest advantage which we have over our ancestors in the vegetable garden is the possession of more early kinds. The early radishes are more tender and milder in flavor than the late sorts, but at the same time, quick to turn pithy, so they must be eaten as soon as they mature.

Costume Designed to Keep Promise in Mind

The wearing of "promisa" costumes in Santo Domingo is a custom that still holds, despite the opening up of highways and the general use of motor transportation. These costumes are often of vivid patchwork, featuring red, white and blue, and serve to remind the wearer that he or she has made a vow that must be kept.

Such vows are often nonreligious in character and involve the wearing of sackcloth. Suits and dresses of this rough fabric are frequently used. The periods for which "promises" are made vary from three months to a year. Persons of high social standing sometimes vow to wear nothing but silk for a certain period, a promise not so hard to keep as that of women who vow to wear rough liner undergarments.

Bavarian Firewomen

Why not firewomen as well as policewomen, women chauffeurs, elevator girls, and all the rest? The little community of Oberloch, in the Algau Alps of Bavaria, which lies at an altitude of 1,136 meters, is a long way from the larger villages in the valley below and cannot count upon them for help in case of fire. The women and girls have organized themselves into a fire brigade and so well are they trained that when an alarm of fire was recently sounded they beat the men to it.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

FOUR CARS LIVE STOCK LAST WEEK

Lowest Number Cars Shipped Out In Several Months

Only four car loads of live stock were shipped out of the Klemme yards during the past week, which is the lowest number which has been shipped out of here since last fall.

The Klemme Shipping Association had three car loads Saturday night consisting of 1 car load of hogs, 1 car load of cattle, and 1 car load mixed stock Wm. Stille had a car load shipment of hogs last Thursday.

The bad roads have had a bad effect on stock shipments the past two weeks.

With good weather and roads again put in good shape it is expected that stock shipments will again increase in number.

For several months stock shipments here have averaged better than twelve car loads a week. Several weeks the shipments have been up as high as fifteen to seventeen car loads and very seldom less than ten or twelve.

ATTRACTIONS AT THE IDLE HOUR THEATRE

Manager Barr Has Fine Program For The Coming Week

Hoxie with his wild horse "Scout" and his dog pal, "Rex" appear in a real western play, 'The White Outlaw" Saturday night.

On Wednesday night, April 27th Claire Windsor appears in a fascinating story of railroad life in "Little Journey."

On Monday and Tuesday night, April 25 and 26, Mr. Barr has a big special picture coming. Watch for it.

Next week Saturday Norman Kerry appears in "Lorane of Lions," a story of a girl, a man, a gorilla—the strangest love story ever told.

Coming soon! The most spectacular picture ever shown in Klemme, starring Lon Chaney in "Phantom f the Opera."

Wednesday night the Fox people substituted "Auctioneer" instead f "Marriage License," due to some error in dating at the office of the exchange.

Basket Social

There will be a basket social at Twin Lake Dist. No. 2, known as the Tanner school, on Friday evening, April 22. A four act play, entitled, "An Arizona Cowboy," will be given. Ladies please bring baskets. Mabel Beier, Teacher. 1wc

Old Speed Laws

The first American speed laws were enacted at Fredericksburg, Va., in 1787, according to a recent magazine historian. The law stated that anyone who galloped his horse on Main Street, if a free man, should be fined, and if a slave, should be given 29 lashes at the public whipping post. It would appear that excessive speed is a relative matter.

ORCHESTRA TO GIVE CONCERT APRIL 29

FINE PROGRAM HAS BEEN ARRANGED FOR CONCERT

Will Be Last Public Appearance For Some Of Orchestra Members

The high school orchsetra will be ready to give their annual program on Friday night of next week, April 29th Klemme has perhaps, the best school orchestra it has ever had, and since Mr Gary, their leader, with several of the Seniors will not be heard here next year we urge parents and friends of our school to take advantage of this opportunity to hear them in this final splendid program Their program will be a varied one which we feel will be enjoyed by all music loving folk

Sophs and Freshies Have Party

The Sophomores and Freshmen met at the school house lawn and gymnasium on last Saturday evening for a social time. After several minutes of play on the lawn they retired to the gymnasium and ate a tasty lunch After an hour or more of games they were ready to wend their way home All seemed to enjoy themseleves and we believe are better for the time thus spent together.

Only Four More Weeks of School

Only one month of our school year remains and we should see to it that it is concluded in good shape, that there be no needelss failures. Students with poor grades should make a supreme effort to remove conditions which are indicated by E's and try to get ready to advance to higher grades or years in school.

Other News Of The School

The minature photos taken by a stranger a few weeks ago came last week and several purchases were made Few would acknowledge they were true likenesses. Some we know were not.

The weather has not yet permitted any serious work in base ball.

There are eleven candidates for graduation this year and all very good students. We believe every one of them will go out into the world and make good.

MORE TEACHERS SIGN CONTRACTS

THREE MORE TEACHERS GIVEN CONTRACTS BY BOARD

Vacancies In Klemme Schools Are Being Filled Rpidly

Three vacancies in the faculty of the Klemme schools have been filled during the past week, and contracts have been signed up to that effect.

Miss Lena McGinis, who has been an instructor in the schools at Swaledale the past three years as nstructor of Domestic Science, has signed a ontract to fill that position here the coming year.

Miss Wilma Trumbell, of Belmond who has taught two years in the Swaledale high school has signed a contract with the Klemme Schools as principal of the high school.

Mr Carl Heiden, of Dennison, Ia., has signed a contract with the Klemme schools as athletic coach and manuel training instructor for the coming year.

All of the above teachers made a personal application before the board. They are well recommended and their appearance was likewise satisfactory.

There are other applications before theboard for other vacancies, and no doubt contracts will be made at an early date.

Improved Conditions

There is a vast difference between conditions of farm life today and those in the old days, when a trip to town was a laborious and infrequent journey and when between trips all communication with urban centers was virtually out off. The farmer is often, and naturally enough, possessed of advantages that once seemed the prerogatives of city residence alone, while he has at the same time retained the advantages of his country residence.

The rural free delivery service is one of the several improvements in rural conditions that have elevated the lot of the farmer in most appreciable degree. Others are good roads, the automobile, the telephone and the radio.

The House Beautiful

No wonder the White House s considered the most desirable place of residence in the country. The very ground on which it stands is appraised by Uncle Sam at more than 10 million dollars. The original price was $15,000, so that as an investment it was a peach.

Fifteen men in the United States carry $4,000,000 in life insurance. There are between 200 and 300 policies for $1,000,000 or more in force.

FOREST WEEK

This year will mark the seventh annual observance of American Forest Week, April 24-30, President Harding in 1921 having issued the first proclamation, which brought the federal government behind the movement.

Of the numerous weeks observed in the country, this is the only one to which the government has given recognition and support.

In proclaiming forest week, President Coolidge emphasized the importance of farm forestry as a means of lessening agricultural surpluses and meeting the problem of agricultural overproduction, and the resulting depression in the farming industry.

When we consider that our forests are the backbone of agriculture, the cornerstone of lumbering and the heart of industry, it is no wonder we all need to pay heed to the call of reforestation.

LARGE CROWD ENJOYS EASTER SERVICE AT M. E. CHURCH

Special Program Held In Evening By Young People

A packed house greeted the pastor Sunday morning for the Easter Service, at both the Klemme and the Liberty churches.

Three babies were baptized in the town church, a baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Johnson, a baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Leitziuger, and a baby son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brouwer. Five persons were received into membership of the church.

The services at both churches was interspersed with special Easter singing and was greatly enjoyed by all.

Two babies were baptized at the Liberty church. A baby son of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Riddor and a baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Spitler.

Three persons were received into membership at the Liberty church.

A special Easter Cantata was enjoyed at the town church Sunday evening and was in charge of Mrs. Gauger. It was one the most beautiful cantatas enjoyed here for some time. In the afternoon the girls in the chorus went about town singing Easter songs to the shut-ins who were greatly pleased with having a part of the Easter services brought to them.

During the absence of Rev. Gauger he has made arrangements to have outside speakers fill the pulpit Next Sunday Harry Webb, f Belmond will conduct services.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Gary entertained the teachers of the Klemme schools and the members of the high school orchestra at their home last Thursday evening. Delicious refreshments were served following a social hour, and all report a good time was had.

FUNERAL OF YOUNG WOMAN SUNDAY

MRS. ROBT. GOBELEI DIED AT FORT DODGE YESTERDAY

Funeral Services Will Be Held Here And At Meservey Sunday

Mrs Robert Gobelei died at the Bowlder Sanitarium at Fort Dodge Wednesday morning, April 20th, of tuberculosis.

The remains were brought to this city Wednesday by Mr. Wellemeyer and taken to the G. Gobelei home, parents of Mr. Robert Gobelei

Mrs. Robert Gobelei, nee Lela Carter, was born at Persia, Tennessee, September 8th, 1899, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Carter. She was born and raised on her ents farm and received her e tion in the schools at Persia. L in life she joined the Baptist church where she was a consistent and a faithful member and found great comfort in her religion during the latter months of her illness.

On December 31st, 1922, she was united in marriage to Mr. Robert Gobelei and came to Iowa to make her home. To this union two children were born, an infant preceding her in death, and her little three year old son, James Frederick survises her. Besides her husband and son she is survived by her parents and four brothers and five sisters, and other immediate relatives.

Deceased was always more or less frail in health and last October it was found advisable to take her to the sanitarium in an effort to benefit her health, but the grim hand of death won the struggle and ended her comparatively young life of only 28 years.

Funeral services will be held at the G. Gobelei home in Klemme on Sunday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock p. m and the remains will then be taken to the Evangelical Church at Meservey where her pastor, Rev. A. K. Henning will conduct services beginning at 2:30 o'clock. Interment will be made in the Meservey Cemetery.

The sincere sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved relatives at this time.

Thirty Cents

They say that a dollar is now worth a trifle more than 60 cents The way they take it away from you one would think it isn't worth half that much.

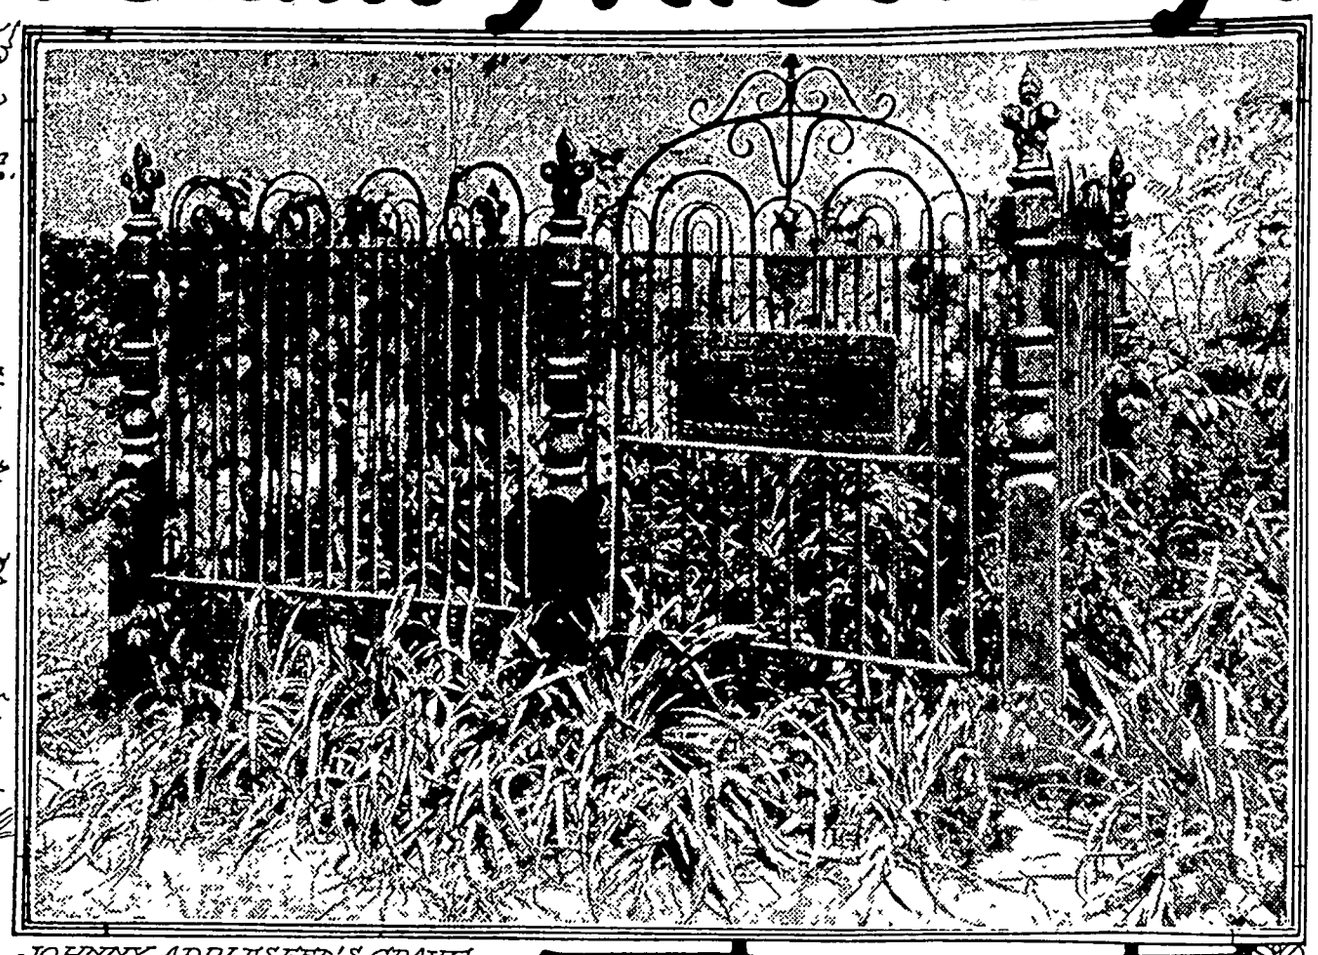
Reports concerning John Baumgartner, who was severely injured at Mason City about a week ago when he was struck by a car, are not encouraging. Blood poisoning has set in in one of his limbs, and in addition to broken ribs, a broken arm and severe head cuts, our former townsman is having a siege to recover. His many Klemme friends hope that he will make rapid progress toward a recovery.

Rev. Gauger, accompanied by Rev C. H. Van Metre, of Garner, left Tuesday morning for Rochester, Minnesota, where Rev. Gauger will undergo an operation for ulcers of the stomach. Mrs Gauger took the men as far as Mason City in the car where they then took the train. The many friends of Rev. Gauger hope for a successful operation and that he may again enjoy good health.

Miss Adella Schroeder, who has been attending college at Ames for the past two years, has been elected to instruct in Domestic Science n the Keswick, Iowa schools for the coming year. Keswick is but a short distance from Miss Stoner's home town, North English. Keswick can feel fortunate in securing this fine young lady as an instructor in their school.

JOHNNY APPLESEED, Patron Saint of Arbor Day?

"JOHNNY APPLESEED"



JOHNNY APPLESEED'S GRAVE, FORT WAYNE, IND.

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF EVER America adopts a patron saint for Arbor day, which is being observed in many states this month (the date is set by governor's proclamation in each state and therefore varies), that saint undoubtedly will be the picturesque figure who went up and down the land in the early part of the Nineteenth century as a personification of the spirit of Arbor day—"Plant trees!" Johnathan Chapman was his name, but the early settlers knew him as "Johnny Appleseed," or "Appleseed Johnny." For Chapman, the first exponent of Arbor day, made it his life work to plant apple trees, and the settlers who came into new territory and were welcomed there by the sight of apple trees laden with fragrant blossoms were given to exclaiming, "Johnny Appleseed has been here before us!"

Johnny Appleseed was not only one of the most picturesque figures in the history of the American frontier, but he was also something of a man of mystery. Around his name there has gathered such a maze of myth and legend that it is difficult to determine just how much of the information about him is fact and how much is fiction. There is one romantic story which professes to give the reason for his devoting his life to planting apple trees. According to this story, Chapman as a young man on the Ohio frontier was engaged to marry a beautiful young girl who lived with her father in "a cabin in the clearing" in the Ohio wilderness. Once during Chapman's absence the girl fell ill. The only hope for her recovery lay in the juices of fresh fruits, but in all the forest which surrounded her father's cabin there were no fruit trees. So the girl died. When Chapman returned to find his sweetheart dead he was grief-stricken and enraged against the cruelty of the wilderness which had withheld the only thing that would have saved her life. In the bitterness of his sorrow he plunged into the wilderness resolved to plant apple trees so that no one should ever lack for the fruit that had meant so much to his happiness.

Now, this is a very pretty little story, but unfortunately there is little foundation of fact for it. The known facts about Chapman's life are these: He was born in Springfield, Mass., 1775. In 1794 he established a farm at Pittsburg Landing, Pa., and planted an apple orchard. To emigrants on their way west, who stopped at Pittsburg Landing, Chapman became a familiar figure. He would invariably present each family with a package of apple seeds and urge them to plant the seeds as soon as they had found their new homes in the west. As there were not enough seeds on his place to supply all the pioneers, Johnny went from farm to farm to buy more. His farmer friends regarded him as somewhat "queer," but the emigrants were glad enough to receive his offerings. In 1799 Johnny appeared as a wanderer in the valley of the Potomac. In the summer of 1800 he was again in western Pennsylvania.

In the fall of 1800 a woman living on the banks of the Ohio river near what is now the city of Steubenville saw a crazy-looking craft floating down the river. It was made of two canoes lashed together and heavily laden with bags. On top of them sat a wild-looking man, clad in ragged clothes and wearing a broad brimmed hat. John Appleseed was setting forth upon his great adventure! For the bags contained apple seeds which he had gathered from the cider presses of Pennsylvania, and he was starting out as the advance guard of the wave of pioneer settlement which was then just beginning to pour into the fertile valleys of Ohio. Johnny's idea was to plant his apple seeds so that the trees would be growing there when the settlers arrived.

The chronology of Johnny's life from this point on is somewhat uncertain. It is known that he established a nursery at Marietta, Ohio, and that he used this place as the base for his operations. He wandered from place to place in Ohio, planting his seeds and caring for the trees already growing. His travels carried him into Indiana, and even to Illinois, where, on a road leading into St. Louis, there still stands an orchard which he planted. Frequently he revisited the cider mills of Pennsylvania and Ohio to get more seeds which he would wash free of pulp, sort and sew into deerskin bags. These bags he presented to emigrants as they continued to pour into the farther regions of the rich Mississippi valley and some of these tiny bags are still the treasured possessions of descendants of the pioneers who profited by Johnny' bounty. Occasionally word drifted back to Marietta that the trees which he had planted were not doing well, or that the settlers, busy with putting in their food crop, were neglecting to plant the apple seeds which Johnny had given them, so he would set out again on his career of "Horticultural Evangelist."

CHARLES LATHROP PACK

Johnny started four nurseries in Ohio. They were situated near the present cities of Mansfield, Ashland, Salem and Delaware. He is said to have established more than a hundred subnurseries in various parts of the Ohio valley and there is no way of telling how many thousands of fruit trees he started during the course of his forty years of wandering. As Ohio began to settle up he spent more and more of his time further west in Indiana and Illinois, and it is more than likely that he crossed the Mississippi into Missouri and that some of the orchards in that state owe their origin to this queer genius.

With nothing more than an ax, a hatchet and a hoe he would seek out a protected spot among the trees near a stream and there dig up the soil until it was thoroughly pulverized. Then he would plant thousands of apple, peach and pear seeds and build a brush fence around the infant nursery to keep away deer and other grazing animals. When the settlers arrived they had only to dig up the apple seedlings and replant them, when they had established their homes, to start an orchard. Johnny planted other things besides apple trees in the wilderness. Small fruits such as grapes and berries he scattered through the forests.

Planting trees was not the only activity in the Odyssey of Johnny Appleseed. He was always a welcome visitor in the log cabins of the settlers for he always carried a Bible and some books from which he would read and preach to them as they sat before their blazing fireplaces in the evening. Johnnie practiced his teachings of humility and kindliness. He never killed anything for food. He carried a kit of cooking utensils, including a mush pan, which he sometimes wore as a hat. Usually he wore a broad-brimmed black hat, but this was about the only article of clothing in which he bowed to convention. He was clad in a ragged shirt which, loosened about his waist, served also as a traveling bag in which he carried various articles. He usually wore two or three pairs of trousers, one over the other, so that the holes wouldn't show, and his cloak was a common gunny sack with holes cut for the head and sleeves. Most of the time he went barefoot in winter as well as in summer. No wonder the white men called him "queer!" But the Indians said "He has been touched by the Great Spirit," and he was as welcome in their lodges as in the cabins of the whites.

This fact made Johnny Appleseed an especially important figure in the early history of the Ohio valley. He frequently gave the settlers warning of Indian raids and in this manner doubtless saved hundreds of lives. During the War of 1812 when the British and Indians were overrunning Ohio Johnny repeatedly warned the Americans of approaching danger. At one time the Indians killed a man in Richland county and the residents of Mansfield fled to the block house in the town public square. The danger of a general massacre seemed imminent and it was imperative that some one go to Mount Vernon, several miles away, and summon the troops which were stationed there. Johnny Appleseed volunteered to make his way through the Indians who were swarming around the place. Barefooted and bareheaded, he set out in the night for Mount Vernon and arrived there safely after visiting several cabins en route and warning their inhabitants of their danger. When he returned to Mansfield it was with a sufficient force to overawe the Indians and prevent the attack.

Johnny Appleseed ended his days on the soil of Indiana. He died at the home of a friend in Fort Wayne in 1847, and was buried in what is known as the Archer cemetery near that city. For many years his grave was neglected, and Johnny Appleseed, himself, was almost forgotten. However, a few years ago the Indiana and Ohio Horticultural societies decided that something should be done to recognize his services to mankind. As a result of their investigations his grave was located and an iron fence built around the spot. A monument to his memory was also erected in one of the principal parks of Fort Wayne. Ohio also has paid him tribute in a monument which was erected at Mansfield by the Ohio Horticultural society, and the organization of the John Chapman Memorial Association of Ohio, devoted to marking places where Johnny's apple seeds served as the basis for establishing farm centers. Illinois also has honored him. Last year the Johnny Appleseed Sesquicentennial committee, composed of representatives from thirty-six different organizations, set out an orchard of one hundred and fifty apple trees in Thatcher woods in the Cook county forest preserve, near Chicago, at which time special exercises in honor of Johnny Appleseed were held. One of the tree planters was Mrs. Ada Chapman Atchison of St. Louis, a descendant of Johnny Appleseed, and another was Mrs. Florence Ketchum Colbert of Chicago, a descendant of Elder William Brewster of Mayflower fame, who is said to have planted the first apple tree in New England and from one of whose trees Johnny Appleseed is said to have obtained his first seeds.

Johnny Appleseed is dead these many years, but truly his "soul goes marching on." His memory is unconsciously recalled each year when school children do for future generations what Johnny did for them—plant trees on Arbor day. If Johnny Appleseed has a modern counterpart it is in the person of Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree association, who for many years has been going up and down the land preaching the gospel of "Plant Trees!" Day and night he has hammered away on the need of a national forest policy. He has called on timber land owners and foresters everywhere to get together on a fire protection policy as the first step and to replace our vanishing forests by planting more trees, more trees, more trees. Mr. Pack's pioneer work has resulted in the observance of American Forest week each year. The seventh annual observance of this week has been proclaimed by President Coolidge for April 24 to 30, and all Americans are called upon by their President to join in celebrating it by recognizing the need for us to take the steps now which guarantee for future generations the perpetuation of our forests. So far as we do that we can all be Johnny Appleseeds and leave posterity in debt to us.

For the Children!

CODDLED APPLES

EVERY ONE in the family will enjoy these Coddled Apples—one of the recipes from Mrs. Allen's new book on better cooking (see coupon below). Just follow this recipe using your old favorite, Karo Syrup:

8 medium sized red apples
1¾ cups boiling water
¾ cup Karo
3 cloves
Small piece stick cinnamon

Wash the apples, place in a rather flat saucepan with the water, Karo and spices. Cover and simmer gently on top of the stove or in the oven for about two hours, turning the apples occasionally so they will not burst. When done they will be almost translucent. Remove from the pan and pour the syrup over. When chilled, it will be thick enough to "jell."

KARO contains a large quantity of the essential, energizing food element—Dextrose. Dextrose supplies the "fuel"—the energy and vitality of your body. Serve all the KARO your children desire—they will thrive on it.

FACTS about used car allowances

MOST new car sales now involve the trading-in of a buyer's used car. More and more people are asking: "Why should my used car seem to have several values?... Why should dealers in different makes of cars offer me allowances differing materially?... Does the largest allowance offered mean the best deal for me?"

Here are basic facts:

1 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value: what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 The largest trade-in allowance which is offered on your used car is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; but sometimes it is not.

4 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

5 Judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

When you are ready to trade-in your present car, remember that after all you are making a purchase and not a sale. You are buying a new car and simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of the new car.

Increased Crop Yield is Shown

Generally Rising Trend Is Indicated by Survey Recently Made.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A generally rising trend in yields per acre of leading crops over the last forty years in the United States is indicated by a survey concluded recently by the Department of Agriculture.

The average yield per acre of corn has increased 18 per cent since 1885, wheat 17 per cent, oats 14 per cent, and potatoes 39 per cent. The total area of the four crops expanded about 52 per cent, but the total production has increased 77 per cent.

Increased production due to higher acre yields alone amounts to 440,000,000 bushels of corn, 120,000,000 bushels of wheat, 165,000,000 bushels of oats, and 115,000,000 bushels of potatoes, a total of over 800,000,000 bushels of the four crops.

Outstanding Increases.

The outstanding increases in yields have been in the North Atlantic and the northern portion of the South Atlantic states, with somewhat lesser increases in the East North Central states. Similar changes have occurred in many portions of the West North Central states where pioneer agricultural methods have disappeared.

Corn yields in the North Atlantic states have increased from 6 to 10 bushels per acre during the 40 years, in the East North Central group from 6 to 12 bushels, and in the northern section of the South Atlantic states from 9 to 14 bushels. Yields average about 8 bushels per acre higher in Iowa, and 6 bushels in Minnesota.

Wheat yields have increased 5 to 6 bushels per acre in the northeastern portions of the country, but a decrease is shown in Ohio and other states in the Ohio valley for the period 1920-24, due largely to unfavorable weather. Despite the expansion of the wheat area in Kansas into semi-arid regions, yields there have remained practically stationary. Yields in Missouri in a considerably expanded wheat area have remained low and practically stationary.

Statistics of wheat yields per acre suggest that the southern part of the corn belt, as represented by Missouri and eastern Kansas, has lagged behind the northern portions as represented by Iowa and Illinois, in the development of agricultural practices and soil management methods that tend to raise the acre yields of important crops.

Pioneer Methods Used.

Continuance of pioneer methods in the spring wheat region and the expansion of wheat production into drier areas have prevented a rise in the state averages. Moreover, the economists point out, since moisture is commonly the limiting factor in crop production in the semarid portions of the plains states, it appears probable that this part of the country will not experience as much rise in acre yields as is shown for the northeastern states and for northwestern Europe.

Department economists declare that developments in coming decades with regard to acre yields will depend, as in the past, to a great extent on prices of agricultural products. Rising values normally would result in increasing intensification and a higher level productivity through the wider use of better cultivation methods, development of suitable rotations, including the growth of legumes, more efficient use of crop residues and animal manures, greater use of commercial fertilizers, and the more common use of selected seed.

Full details of the department's study have been published in Department Bulletin No. 1458-D, entitled "The Trend Toward a More Effective Use of the Land as Shown by the Yield Per Acre of Certain Crops," copies of which may be obtained upon request to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Agricultural Facts

Sharp shares on the plows mean a better and cheaper piece of plowing.

If the weather never changed, some folks wouldn't have very much to talk about.

Many a poor crop stand in spring can be traced to poorly protected seed in winter.

Seeds are a small part of the cost of raising a crop. Cheap seeds are often expensive at any price.

Bank credit costs only from one-half to one-third as much as credit given by feed dealers and store keepers.

The idea that no trip at sea is complete without a storm might well be applied to life in general—on some days.

They say the boll-weevil was a benefit to southern agriculture. Since the corn borer can't stand good farming, maybe it will have a good effect on the North.

The nature of farm manure is such that large losses of the plant nutrients may occur, so in view of this fact it is necessary to adopt a system of handling manure on the farm which will cut down this loss.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

Napoleon "the Little"

FIRST, Napoleon the Great, and then—more than a quarter century later—a man whom his enemies termed "Napoleon the Little." In other words, Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, nephew and step-grandson of the first Napoleon. A man who inherited all his uncle's ambition, unscrupulousness and charlatanism, with not one per cent of his greatness, his genius, his power of swaying the destinies of the world. Yet this later and lesser emperor served one splendid purpose: He cured France permanently of the "Napoleon idea" that had broken out virulently at intervals for more than fifty years.

Louis was the son of the first Napoleon's brother, Louis, king of Holland, and of Hortense, daughter of the Empress Josephine by her first marriage. He was born in 1808. After the fall of the empire, Hortense had fled with her son to Switzerland, where the lad received a military education.

In 1830 Louis conspired to win back for himself his uncle's former dominions. For this he was arrested and, without trial, was packed off to the United States. He lived here for a year or so, and is said to have made his home for a time in the New Jersey suburbs. He went later to Europe and in 1840 joined a new conspiracy against the French government.

He crossed from England to Bologne, and as he stepped ashore a huge eagle (emblem of the Napoleons) swooped down from the skies and perched upon his head. This was regarded as an omen of victory until it was learned that the eagle was a tame one which had been trained to eat daily a piece of meat from his master's hat. The trick failed. Not a single city rose to welcome the young aspirant. Instead, the government condemned him to life imprisonment, and he spent the next six years in jail. In 1846 he escaped and suceeded in reaching England.

But in 1848 France revolted, overthrew its fat "citizen king," Louis Philippe, and declared a republic. The "Napoleon idea" cropped out once more. Louis was allowed to come back, and was elected to the assembly. In December of the same year he was elected president and took a solemn oath to preserve and defend the republic. By way of fulfilling his oath he put his personal adherents in the high offices and so successfully pulled wires that on December 2, 1851, he was able to accomplish the famous "coup d'etat." In other words, he put an end to constitutional government, overawed the Parisians with his troops, dissolved the assembly, had himself made practical dictator, and shot down such malcontents as objected to the new order of things. A year later the empire was re-established, with Louis as emperor under the title of Napoleon III.

Realizing that he had his uncle's great reputation to live up to, the new emperor at once entered on a military career. Russia, in the Crimea, had long menaced Turkey. It was to the interest of the western European powers that Turkey remain intact and that Russia's growing power be checked. So when (because of the invasion of the Danube provinces by a Russian army) Turkey in 1853 declared war, France, England and Sardinia joined forces with her against Russia, and the Crimean war began. Napoleon III was its leading spirit.

Sebastopol, on the Black sea, was Russia's strongest Crimean fortress. The allies landed a large army thirty miles to the north in September, 1854, beat the Russians in a fierce battle on the banks of the Alma and laid siege to the stronghold. At Balaklava and later at Inkerman they won two more decisive victories against a superior Russian force, and at last captured Sebastopol itself, ending the war and, incidentally, enhancing Louis Napoleon's fame.

"Give France a war every four years and the people will be content!" was the emperor's maxim, and he proceeded to put it into effect in 1859 by joining King Victor Emmanuel of Sardinia in a victorious campaign against Austria, both sovereigns taking the field in person and dividing the profits. Two years later Napoleon joined with England and Spain in an expedition against Mexico to punish that country for injuries inflicted on French, English and Spanish subjects. Suspecting the French monarch of duplicity, England and Spain withdrew from the alliance, leaving him to play the game alone. His general, Bazaine, conquered Mexico, and Napoleon made Archduke Maximilian of Austria its emperor, backing the latter's authority with French troops. Later he withdrew these troops, and Maximilian was deposed and executed.

All this deepened the distrust Europe was beginning to feel for Napoleon the Little. In 1866 Austria and Prussia went to war with each other. Napoleon demanded a slice of territory from the victorious Prussians as the price of non-interference. This led to ill-feeling that was to culminate in 1870 in the Franco-Prussian war. This latter war left France temporarily crushed and Napoleon the Little without a throne. He fled to England, where (1875) he died in exile, his only son being killed soon after by Zulus.

So ended the Napoleonic dynasty and the life of the man who had crawled into power by the help of a [illegible] he was unworthy to bear.

This modern age discriminates—and smokes Camels

THIS age is the hardest to satisfy—it's the most discriminating age ever known. That's why it goes to Camel for cigarette enjoyment. It takes real tobacco to satisfy modern smokers and Camels are made of the choicest tobaccos grown, marvelously blended. Smokers of today are right in demanding Camels; no better cigarettes are made, regardless of price.

To seek a real smoke is to find Camel—the choice of the modern world. Camels are a revelation of goodness, always mellow, smooth and mild. This age shows the way to smoke contentment—"Have a Camel!"

Weeds Looked On as Reservoirs of Wealth

At a recent meeting of distinguished botanists the opinion was voiced that great reserves of wealth are lying untapped in what we now regard as weeds. Though there are 500,000 known species of higher plants, the world's needs in food, fiber and timber are at present supplied by less than 100 species.

Another interesting fact that was brought out at this convention of botanists was that the cells of plants can be regarded as the most powerful forms of suction pumps in the world. As the result of research into the way in which plants draw water from their roots to their topmost leaves through fermentation that is taking place in their cells, an estimation was made that pumping power sometimes equals 500 pounds to the square inch.

Lack of Hospitality Toward "Poteen" King

Accused of manufacturing "poteen," the famous Irish moonshine, the king of the bootleggers of the Galway region was sentenced recently to pay a fine of $50 or spend three months in the jail. On the day appointed for his choice he appeared at the gates of the prison and announced that he would serve his time, as he was unable to pay the fine.

He had not, however, complied with the rule of the prison to provide himself with a police escort and a committal warrant. Admittance to the prison was refused. The following day he again applied for admission, with the same result. Vowing that he would pay off the fine by distributing more of his troublesome "poteen," he turned away from the inhospitable prison and went back to Connemara.

Sex Loyalty

Advocates of women's rights are always delighted with every indication of co-operation among the sex and every incident that shows the sympathy of one woman for the problems of another.

A few evenings ago Mr. B. came home and found that his wife was not there. He called to the colored servant girl, who was washing the dinner dishes in the kitchen and asked her where Mrs. B. had gone.

"Don't you know where your wife is gone at?" came the unexpected reply. "I heerd her tell you at the supper table where she was goin', and if you cain't remember what she done told you, I ain't goin' t' tell you."—Indianapolis News.

Takes Movies of Plants

The slowest motion pictures ever made are those of the United States Department of Agriculture which portray the growth of plants. This is done by the use of a "time-lapse" machine, invented by Howard Greene, that exposes only one frame of film at a time and regulates the time between such exposures. These periods usually are about 20 seconds, so that in an hour only about 180 pictures would be taken.

Bill Says:-

"Folks, I have been looking into this Electric Company's 7% Preferred Stock as I have a few dollars that have just been laying around lately not doing much of anything and I've decided that they are going to work and earn decent wages. This Electric Stock I find is the best place for these dollars because not only will they be safe but will be kept out of mischief by working 24 hours a day, and, I don't mind that because each $100 will be earning the good wages of $7.00 a year payable on 4 pay days during the year."

Bill has the right idea and any Employee will be glad to handle his order.

Seems to Be True That World Loves the Poet

A Peruvian court recently sentenced the poet Santos Chocano to three years' imprisonment for the murder of a fellow bard of lesser fame. Whatever the motive alleged in the legal proceedings for the light sentence, the real reason must have been the conservation of poetry. For Latin peoples and tribunals have much tolerance for even the graver delinquencies of poets and other artists. Thus a prominent chef was lately sentenced in Paris to a year in the local bastile for skewering a dishwasher who had cast slurs on his sauces.

To cite earlier examples, Francois Villon, he of "the Vagabond King," was a desperado and a thug, ancestor of the modern "apaches" of his city, and probably escaped hanging only by virtue of his poetry. Perugino, the great painter, was a common disorderly, and Benvenuto Cellini escaped punishment for his crimes only through the intervention of noble cardinals, for whose tables he fashioned immortal golden chalices. In later times Verlaine, most melodious of modern French poets, was steeped in all the baseness of the stews of Paris, and, like Santos Chocano, was charged with the murder of a fellow poet.

All of which recalls an incident told of the last flight of Carranza from the City of Mexico. The pursuers were about to bring down a follower of the fallen President, who had ignominiously climbed a tree alongside the route of retreat. With guns leveled at his head he shouted the magic words: "Don't shoot; I am a poet," whereupon the soldiers lowered their rifles and gave vent to a chorus of lusty "vivas."

The columnist, says that he felt grateful to the tailor for not adding:
Owed for by "Chanticler."

In Bad All Around

Descending from a tramcar in Vienna, an English visitor threw away his ticket. In Austria's capital it is a misdemeanor to litter the streets with rubbish. A policeman fined him two schillinge (28 cents) on the spot, giving him an official receipt for the amount. Rather annoyed, the Englishman crumpled up the receipt and cast it from him. The policeman again fined him two schillinge! The Engman used an expletive mildly indicative of his opinion on Vienna's police regulations. The policeman understood English and promptly fined the visitor ten schillinge for "using bad language!"

Discard Veil in East

Possibly inspired by the feminine revolt in Turkey a group of Moslem women in south India have decided to discard the traditional veil (purdah) imposed upon them by custom and religion.

The wife of the prime minister of Mysore presided at a meeting at which more than 1,000 women agreed to abolish the old restrictions. She challenged the orthodox religious authorities to quote textually from the Koran anything enjoining the wearing of the veil.

This the religious teachers could not do; and as a result no veils will henceforth be worn in Mysore.

English Courtesy Titles

Courtesy titles are given by custom in England to persons really having no legal claim to them. Thus, the eldest son of a duke is styled a marquess. The holder of a courtesy title is not a peer and he can, therefore, sit in the British house of commons, if elected. but as soon as he succeeds to the legal title he forfeits his seat in the house of commons.

"Fireprof" Film

After fourteen years of experimenting a British inventor claims to have perfected a fireproof moving-picture film. It is said that the film cannot burn, yet will produce as satisfactory pictures and at as low cost as the standard film now used. The invention promises to do away with the costly precautions against fire in projection rooms of theaters.

But Measure Was Filled

The weather was cold and the oil ran very slowly. Floyd Vanderhoef of Boonton, N. J., became impatient and went into the house, intending to come back later when the quart measure was full. That was Christmas morning. Two days later Vanderhoef went to his garage. The quart measure was full, but the 50-gallon barrel of oil delivered the day before Christmas was empty.

Pipe Gas From Mines

A plan for supplying Germany with coal gas direct from the mines is being considered. The suggestion is to make coal into gas at the pithead and convey it to the consumer by pipes.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Powers Demand Reparation From Cantonese—Chen Proposes Inquiry.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CHINA continued to hold the center of the stage during the week. Identical notes were handed to the Cantonese government at Hankow by the consular officers of the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, demanding apologies and reparations for the Nanking outrages.

Each note demanded punishment for the commanders and the Nationalist troops responsible for the Nanking murders, injuries, and property damage; an apology by the Nationalist chief commander for the outrages, including a definite statement covering guarantees against similar occurrences in the future, and complete reparations for personal injuries to foreigners and for the property damaged Seven foreigners met death and "nameless outrages" were committed against foreign women during the Nanking rioting.

In his replies Foreign Minister Chen proposed an international commission to investigate the Nanking "incident," not admitting the responsibility of the Nationalist troops for the outrages. In the replies to America and Great Britain he stated those nations bombarded the defenseless city of Nanking. In the French and British replies he charged those nations with shelling the defenseless Shameen district of Shanghai. Otherwise the replies were practically identical.

Soviet Russia, as was expected, severed diplomatic relations with the Peking government because of Marshal Chang Tso-lin's raid on the soviet embassy buildings. But the Russians laid the chief blame on the "imperialistic powers" and disavowed any intention of declaring war on the Chinese. They simply demanded the withdrawal of troops from the embassy property, the release of the arrested officials and the return of all documents and property seized. Large concentrations of soviet troops on the Manchuria frontiers were reported, but it was believed Russia would make no real demonstration against the Chinese until her troubles on her western borders are settled. The evacuation of Americans from Peking and Honan province continued, many of them being removed to Japan and Corea. The families of Minister MacMurray and his staff have left the northern capital.

Meanwhile matters were not going well for the Cantonese. The split between the radical and conservative wings widened and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, the conservative generalissimo, had his troops raid the headquarters of the Red labor unions in Shanghai and other centers. The workers fought back desperately and more than one hundred of them were killed in conflicts with the soldiers, and many others were wounded. Chiang was determined to break up the radical unions, but the immediate result of his raids was the calling of a general strike in Shanghai. The general went to Hankow for a conference in which he hoped to establish the control of the moderate party over the Nationalist government.

Cantonese armies that had begun the advance northward from the Yangtse met with severe reverses and were driven back to the south side of the river, losing Pukow, opposite Nanking, though later reports said they had retaken that city. The northern troops succeeded in crossing the Yangtse at Kiangyin, threatening the route between Chinkiang and Shanghai.

ORGANIZED labor in the United States was aroused by an important decision of the Supreme court in the case of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' association which had instructed its members not to handle the product of 23 Indiana stone quarrying companies because they employed nonunion labor. The companies had asked an injunction and the lower courts had denied it, but the Supreme court reversed the finding, declaring that the refusal of members of a union to handle or work on material made by nonunion labor is an illegal restraint of interstate trade and a violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Justices Brandeis and Holmes dissented. The former in his opinion said: "If, on the undisputed facts in this case, refusal to work can be enjoined, congress created, by the Sherman law and the Clayton act, an instrument of imposing restraints on labor which reminds us of involuntary servitude."

SACCO and Vanzetti were sentenced to death in the electric chair by Judge Webster Thayer in Dedham, Mass., and protests and appeals are coming in from all over this country and from many foreign lands. It is assumed that Governor Fuller of Massachusetts will review the case carefully and it is not unlikely that he will at least commute the sentence. The feeling is widespread that the defendants were entitled to a re-trial. When called up for sentence they made really eloquent appeals, asserting their innocence and bitterly attacking Judge Thayer for prejudice against them during the trial. Among those who have protested against the execution of the two radicals are British members of parliament, eminent French authors and American educators, as well as labor organizations almost everywhere.

BY ORDER of the directors of the Chicago board of trade, the Armour Grain company, the largest grain-trading concern in the world, was suspended from the board for dishonest acts. The drastic order by the directors of the grain exchange was taken after two years of investigation into the organization and the wrecking of the Grain Marketing company, a venture which, if it had been successful, might, it is said, have put the Armours and the Rosenbaums in control of the grain markets of the world.

The suspension of the company was recommended by a special committee of grain brokers which reported that the testimony it had taken clearly showed wrongful acts for which it deemed the Armour Grain company responsible The acts alleged against the Armour Grain company were that in 1924 it had doctored its books so that in conveying its property and its grain into the Grain Marketing company, it showed greater quantities than actually delivered, and showed that good grain was in the elevators whereas in reality the Armour Grain company had on hand several million bushels of spoiled grain that was listed as of good quality.

NAVAL disarmament, if and when obtained, is seemingly up to the conference proposed by President Coolidge and scheduled for next June in Geneva. The League of Nations preparatory commission that has been struggling in the Swiss city to get ready an agenda, has failed to reach any agreement, the viewpoint of the French and the British being admittedly irreconcilable. The commission will merely report the points on which the delegates were able to agree, and these are not enough to be of any avail. The French sought limitation on a basis of total tonnage, while Britain, with the support of the United States, sought limitation by classes of ships, which was the basis for limitation agreed upon at the Washington arms conference. The French proposal was that l tation should be by tonnage, but that one year's notice would have to be given before any nation shifted tonnage from one class to another. Italy had a plan that was similar to that of the French but even less strict.

Before the commission adjourned Hugh Gibson, American delegate, served notice that the United States refused to accept any treaty for international or league control, not only because the United States is not a member of the League of Nations, but because it believes the efficacy and value of treaties depends entirely upon the sincerity of the signatories.

He stated, however, that "if the other states, members of the league, are able to reach an agreement among themselves on measures for the utilization of the league's machinery, and believe they will be efficacious, America would not stand in the way of their adopting measures deemed desirable, no matter how impracticable they seemed to the United States."

STORMS, floods and heavy snows afflicted the West and Middle West last week. The most serious of the disasters was a tornado that utterly destroyed the town of Rocksprings, Texas, Tuesday evening. About sixty of the residents were killed and nearly two hundred were injured. Red Cross and volunteer relief workers and cavalrymen from Fort Clark were soon on the ground and cared for the survivors.

As the week closed the lower Mississippi valley was threatened with one of the worst floods in its history, though the big government dikes were still holding back the rushing waters of the Mississippi into which were pouring the rain-swollen tributary streams. Conditions in Arkansas were most critical, and the town of Columbus, Ky., was menaced with destruction. In the Rocky Mountain states there were heavy snowfalls which interrupted traffic and endangered live stock, though they were regarded as an aid to crops and ranges. The snowstorms moved eastward, the highways being completely blocked in western Kansas and Nebraska.

Chile and Argentina experienced a severe earthquake in which twenty-one persons were killed and many hurt.

Dispatches from Madrid say bitter cold prevails in southern Spain and scores of poor persons are perishing from exposure.

PROSECUTIONS for dry law violations brought against the crews of vessels seized under anti-rum running treaties on the high seas were upheld by the United States Supreme court in a decision affirming the conviction of the captain and crew of the British ship Quadra, seized off the California coast in 1924.

The court held that the men could be punished for criminal conspiracy as soon as they came within jurisdiction of the United States, and that the whole purpose of the rum-running treaty with England would be defeated if contraband liquor could not be confiscated and the crew punished.

Prohibition enforcement in southern California is stirring up a fine row. Prohibition Administrator McReynolds has charged the customs officials with hampering and resisting the enforcement of the dry law, and now Sheriff Byers of San Diego declares conditions along the Mexican border are deplorable and appeals to Secretary Mellon for an efficient and effective customs service there.

BERT ACOSTA and Clarence D. Chamberlain, American civilian aviators, set a new mark for endurance flights by staying in the air 51 hours and 12 minutes. The previous record for continuous flying made in 1925 in France, was 45 hours, 11 minutes and 59 seconds. Starting from Roosevelt field, Long Island, in a Wright-Bellanca monoplane, the two Americans flew most of the time over a triangular course and landed at Mineola aviation field with all records broken. On the basis of the Alcock-Brown flight from Newfoundland to Ireland, they had been in the air long enough to have flown almost thrice across the Atlantic. They traveled far beyond the distance of a flight from New York to San Francisco and return.

Frank Lockhart, a young Los Angeles motorist, attained a speed of 171.02 miles an hour, the greatest ever made by an American driver, on a dry lake bed at Muroc, Calif. He was attempting to equal or better the record made by Major Segrave, English pilot, at Daytona Beach, Fla.

SENATOR McNARY of Oregon, after a breakfast and conference with President Coolidge and several Republican leaders of congress, went to his home state, stopping long enough in Chicago to tell the reporters that he was trying to work out a farm relief measure that would be acceptable to the President. He added, in effect, that no man can hope to be elected President of the United States who is hostile to agriculture, and unless a relief measure satisfactory to the farmers of the country is worked out between now and 1928, Calvin Coolidge will have bitter trouble, first to get enough delegates to nominate him and then to get elected if nominated.

PETER AT THE TRANSFIGURATION

LESSON TEXT—II Peter 1:16-18; Mark 9 2-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—And a voice came out of the clouds saying, This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Shows Peter His Glory.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Beauty and Glory of Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Peter Saw and Heard in the Mount

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Majesty and Glory of Christ.

I. The Meaning of the Transfiguration (II Peter 1:16-18).

These verses are an inspired interpretation by one who was present and knew all that transpired. The hope of the disciples was crushed. When Christ announced His death which was to take place on the cross, they were unable to see how victory could issue from death. Jesus took with Him, Peter, James and John, and they went into the mountain by themselves. Before going into the mountain He declared that there were some standing in His presence who would not taste of death till they had seen the kingdom of God come with power.

Two men from the upper world were sent to converse with Jesus about His approaching death at Jerusalem—the very thing about which the disciples refused to talk. Then, too, God's own voice was heard in words of approval of Christ's course, directing them to hear the Master.

II. Jesus Christ Glorified on the Mountain (v. 2, 3).

He took the disciples "by themselves" and was "transfigured before them." This shows that the purpose of the transfiguration terminated upon the disciples and not on Christ. Christ's rebuke of Peter for his unwillingness to hear concerning His death apparently for a time estranged the disciples from Him. His appearance on the mountain typifies His visible appearance on the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4, 9).

III. Peter, James and John Represent Israel in the Flesh in Connection With the Kingdom (v. 2).

Christ is peculiarly the King of Israel. According to Ezekiel 37:21-27, the Israelites are to be the central people in the kingdom. This people shall be gathered from among the nations and united as one in that kingdom, in their own country.

IV. Moses and Elijah Appeared in Glory With Jesus (vv. 4-13).

These men in the glorified state are typical of the saints in glory. Moses who was once denied an entrance into Palestine appears now in glory representing the redeemed of the Lord who shall pass through death into the kingdom. Elijah represents the redeemed who shall pass into the kingdom through translation. Some shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come and they without dying shall be changed and thus pass into the kingdom (I Cor. 15:50-53; I Thess. 4:14-18).

1. Peter's proposal (vv. 5, 6).

So definitely was the method of the kingdom unfolded before Peter that he proposed to erect tabernacles for Christ, Moses and Elijah. It is true that the unveiling of the majestic person of Christ and the panoramic display of the kingdom somewhat disconcerted Peter, yet he grasped its central meaning and proposed to celebrate the advent of the kingdom which had been prefigured in a tangible way.

2. The divine voice out of the cloud (vv. 7, 8).

God declared Jesus to be His Beloved Son in whom He was well pleased. If one would know what is pleasing to God, let him study Jesus Christ who perfectly did His Father's will.

3. Jesus' charge (vv. 9-13).

He charged them that they should tell no man concerning the things which they had seen until He had risen from the dead.

V. A Demonstration of the Purpose of the Establishment of the Kingdom (vv. 14-29).

When they descended from the mountain of transfiguration they witnessed a great multitude in a state of perplexity. The immediate cause of this state was the grievous condition of a young man possessed with a demon (v. 18). This young man's state is representative of the nations who are oppressed by the devil. Just as this young man was grievously oppressed, causing him to cast himself into the fire and into the waters, so the nations today in their great perplexity are doing the things which will result in their own destruction.

"A Schoolgirl in Spirits" is Fort Madison Matron

After whole year of ill-health, Mrs. W. G. Ashlock was rundown, weak and listless. Now in sparkling health, puts on 10 pounds, is spry and cheery as a girl. Thanks Tanlac for change

Mr. W. G. Ashlock is a railroad man living at 1302 Avenue J, Fort Madison, Iowa. He tells a convincing story of his wife's rapid recovery from a year-long illness.

"She was so played out that even a short train ride exhausted her," he said. "The lightest housework weakened her so that she had to lie down. Her nerves were all frazzled and the daintiest food nauseated her. Nothing seemed to agree with her and all the discomforts of indigestion followed. Severe headaches and dizzy spells were quite frequent. Gas, sour stomach, palpitation and backaches combined to wear her down. After a year of that she was in sorry shape.

"Today she has the health and spirits of a school girl. Her appetite is keen, she sleeps like a log, and goes through her housework singing. Tanlac alone is responsible for the change. Thanks to that wonderful tonic, her health is something to be proud of.

She gained ten pounds while taking it. We both endorse Tanlac heartily."

If ill-health has slowed you up, try Tanlac, nature's own tonic, made from roots, herbs and barks. Your druggist has it. Get your trial bottle today. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Druggist Gave Her Advice

Miss Ruth Horowtiz, Bronx, N. Y., writes: "Having been troubled with indigestion caused by constipation for several months, my druggist advised me to try CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS. He said they are good for a hundred different ailments, if people only knew the value of them. I can safely say that since I am taking them, and only one each night, I feel like myself again and can eat most anything."

Those who suffer from sick headache, indigestion, biliousness tired-out and achey feeling, when due to constipation, will find relief in taking CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS in red packages, 25c. and 75c Try them to-night—To-morrow refreshed—All druggists.

Progress Made in Caring for Sick

There are fifty more hospitals in this country now than there were a year ago, according to a statistical survey of hospitals recently completed by the American Medical association. The 6,946 hospitals now in operation in the United States have a capacity of 859,445 beds and the increase over last year is sufficient to take care of an increase in population of 5,000,000 people, association officials say. The growing importance of the hospital as an educational agency is indicated by the figures showing the number of hospitals that include nurses' training schools. The total number of schools comes to more than 2,000, of which Pennsylvania has the most in any state, though New York has the largest number of nurse students. There are slightly fewer than 28 registered nurses for every 10,000 people of the whole population of the country, the survey shows. The lowest supply is in Georgia and Mississippi, which have only seven for every 10,000 people.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his markmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered. The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther. The three go aboard.

What I saw gave me no great impression of the discipline on board a pirate ship; for I could think only of animals gorged and glutted with slaughter as I observed the score of villainous figures sprawled about the decks, drinking and carousing, and shouting snatches of ribald sea songs. To my relief, all traces of carnage were absent; whether they had butchered their victims outright, or had imprisoned them in the cabin of the bark before setting her on fire, I could only conjecture. From the looks of these men, with their colored handkerchiefs bound round their heads, their savage unshorn faces, their clothing an odd mixture of rags and tattered finery, I could see, unless the captain gave me his protection, that I should have small chance of surviving the first drunken brawl.

Walking off, the captain, as he passed me, indicated by a gesture that I should follow him. After what I had seen of the state of affairs forward, I was only too happy to obey, and had reached the companionway when the captain turned to Burford with the curt command, "Bring McAllister below."

A moment or so later, when my eyes became accustomed to the altered light, I perceived that the captain's cabin was much in keeping with the man himself, adorned as it was with silks and satins and the skins of magnificent wild beasts. One thing in particular, as I remembered afterward, caught my eye at once, and that was an ugly looking whip, hanging near the door of the cabin and suggesting all sorts of tortures to my mind. Yet all of this I saw, as it were, mechanically and without comprehension, my thoughts all lying in the direction of my own affairs and of what I felt might well be my impending fate. Meantime the captain, somewhat to my surprise, stepped to a cupboard and with his own hands set out upon the table a huge slab of beef, a loaf of bread and a great flagon of wine. Then, absent-mindedly, he seated himself, motioned to me to do likewise, and waited, his eyes brooding, as if busy with thoughts which took him far from the Black Panther and her savage crew.

Presently the companionway was darkened and Burford entered, followed by a taller figure with his arms strapped securely behind his back. I looked up as they advanced; then, forgetting all else in my astonishment, I fairly leaped from my chair and stood staring at the newcomer, while he, in equal amazement, stared back at me. And now indeed much of what my captors had said became plain as day, for barring the fact that this youth was a trifle taller than I, and that he had a crooked scar an his left cheek, I might almost have been looking at my reflection in the glass. He was, to be sure, better dressed, as befitted a station in life evidently somewhat above my own; but otherwise, as far as face and figure went, we might have passed not only for brothers but for twins.

The voice of the captain broke the silence, and little as I care to pay him compliments, I must acknowledge that the entrance into his cabin transformed him, at least for the time being, into a courteous and considerate host. "Mr. Robert McAllister," he said slowly, "I wish to introduce to you Mr. Richard Lindsay. Mr. Lindsay, Mr. McAllister. Burford, kindly release Mr. McAllister's arms. Thank you. Gentlemen, I pray you to be seated and to accept my humble hospitality."

Completely puzzled, and yet with a great dread of what was to come, I again seated myself at the table, was helped to a generous portion of meat and bread, and being by this time exceedingly hungry, I improved the occasion to the utmost and I dare say proved myself the best trencherman of the four. Presently the captain poured us wine, and bowing in turn to the three of us, said courteously, "To your good health, gentlemen, and to your continued prosperity."

As he spoke, his face was grave; no sneer curved his lips; yet I could have sworn that he was amusing himself, as a cat does with a mouse, and that beneath his words lurked a meaning now hidden from us, but which we should shortly understand.

We set down our glasses, I, for my part, feeling a slight revival of courage with the welcome draught. The captain, I remember, leaned back in his chair, one hand toying absently with the flagon before him. It was a strange scene. I knew, from the gentle motion of the vessel that outside the waves were dancing in the sunlight and that the seagulls were soaring aloft in the blue; yet here, by some whim of Fate, this other youth and myself, who had only a few hours ago been free and happy, were now sitting in this cabin, our lives depending on the mood of this dark-faced, inscrutable captain, this "Black Panther" of the deep.

My meditations came abruptly to an end as I realized that the captain was speaking, and that as he spoke he looked at me. "Mr. Lindsay," he observed, with what seemed to me an ironical politeness, "I must needs venture, with Mr. McAllister's permission"—and now I felt that this ironical politeness included the other young man as well as myself—"must needs venture to tell you something of his personal affairs. Letters, you must know, though carefully dispatched, do not always reach their mark. They may sometimes be intercepted, and much information of value may come into the hands of those for whom it was never intended."

He paused, moistened his lips with wine, and continued, with the air of a man who feels certain of the attention of his audience, "Such a misfortune has happened in the case of Mr. McAllister. And although I was never meant to know it, I am now aware that Mr. McAllister has an uncle who lives on the island of Jamaica, that this uncle is named—let me see"—he affected to think, as if this process somehow gave him pleasure—"Ah yes, now I recollect; the uncle's name is Capt. Andrew McAllister. He is a man of wealth, of position, of large interests; like the centurion in Holy Writ he saith to this man 'go' and he goeth, and to this man 'come' and he cometh." He paused again; then added with a sharp and stern fierceness, "Am I not right in what I say?"

The young man, somewhat unwillingly, I thought, and as if aware that the captain was somehow trifling with him, admitted that he had an uncle in Jamaica by this name, and that he understood that he was a person of some consequence there.

The captain smiled blandly. "Too modest," he cried. "Too modest by half. Your uncle himself, with all his modesty, would scarcely rate himself so low. And why, then," he went on with a sudden change of manner, "why then, under such circumstances, should not Capt. Andrew McAllister be happy and free from care? Alas! no man is entirely blest. It seems that he has an enemy, cruel and vindicative, who seeks to do him harm. He does not write this to his nephew, but from other sources I know it to be so. Thus it is his misfortune to live in dread on an island, in what is practically a fort, garrisoned by a little band of devoted followers. And alas! since none of us can stay young forever, Andrew McAllister has the further misfortune to grow old, and hearing of the talents of his nephew in America, he writes to him to come and join him. He hears"—and he bowed low to the young man—"much good of him; that he is young, strong, brave, and—your pardon—save for a scar upon his cheek, a handsome youth. He hears also that he is a wonderful shot with rifle, pistol or fowling piece. Also Captain McAllister has an adopted daughter of rare beauty; perhaps the nephew and she may wed and succeed to the wealth of tho uncle. And thus Mr. Robert McAllister, hearing of all these things, and having seen the young lady's picture, decides—perhaps unfortunately for him—to try the venture. He starts out, but scarcely has he begun his voyage when he has the ill luck to fall in with pirates, and is captured. I believe, Mr. McAllister, I state the truth."

"Yes," the young man assented, and it seemed to me that he bore himself manfully and with dignity, "that is the truth, except that, as you say, I had no knowledge of an enemy of whom my uncle lives in fear. Of that I know nothing, for in his letters he has made no mention of it."

The captain smiled a sardonic smile. "Doubtless," he answered with suavity, "your uncle had the best of reasons for not communicating the fact. And now," he added, again turning to me, "having explained these facts with regard to Mr. McAllister, I fear that I must trespass still further on your kindness, and tell you something of an incident in my own life."

Again, with that same hateful irony, he paused, looking around him as if tacitly begging our permission to proceed. And yet all the time he must have known that we would hang breathless on his every word. Since, in spite of his talk of hospitality, we were virtually his prisoners, it was only too evident that he was not talking to amuse us, but that his words bore directly on our fortunes, and in all probability on our lives. And thus we sat staring while he, quite casually, turned and glanced at the door leading from the cabin. The movement was so unstudied that at the time I paid no heed to it; but later I was to remember and understand.

At length he resumed: "Do not fear that I shall weary you with my adventures; it is of one incident only that I shall speak, and that, believe me, not because its memory is pleasant to me, for it is the blackest in my life; but rather because, as you will shortly see, you have a right to know of it. Three years ago I ranged these seas in the company of another vessel, whose captain I called my friend. Like two gray wolves we harried our prey, one on either flank, and lucky was the merchantman who escaped our fangs. Ours, of course, was the fortune of war; sometimes we made rich captures; sometimes our gains were not worth the loss in killed and wounded, and only the sharks would profit by our enterprise. But on one great day we captured and sacked a real treasure ship, a prize as rich as those which fell to the lot of the old buccaneers. There was spoil and to spare——for once our crews were glutted with gold—but of the bulk of the treasure and of the jewels only four persons really knew, the captain of the consort ship and his mate, and I myself—and one other—"

He paused, and over his face stole an expression I had never before seen there—a yearning, I would have said, for something that had gone from his life forever, but of which even the memory could almost bring back to him past joys. Then the light faded from his eyes again, and he went on: "A lady sailed with me in those days, the most beautiful lady in all the world. Not a lady of the court, too fine to soil her dainty fingers or dirty the tip of her silken shoe, but a daughter of the sea and of the storm, one who could wield cutlass and pistol, one who was all life and fire and daring and who feared not man nor devil—no, nor God Himself!"

Onco more he paused, and his hand went to his throat as if to ease its constriction. I would have said that he had forgotten us, and that for the first time I saw the man's soul laid bare. But in another instant he had recovered himself, and went on: "There was trouble aboard my vessel at the time—a grumbling mate who dreamed of commanding in my place. He may indeed be commanding, but if so it's in another world. Yet just then he was in my way, and the captain of my consort persuaded me and my lady to board his vessel while we gave my mate his head and sent him away, proud of his chance, to capture another prize. His prize was a knife thrust in the throat. And in the dark of the night, near a lonely island in the Antilles, far off the track of vessels, the four of us rowed ashore and over that heavy chest we vowed to keep faith with one another, to come back as soon as might be in a vessel of our own, and then to leave the sea and spend the rest of our lives at ease. Thus we started to bury the treasure, and then—a mighty roaring in my ears, and all was dark. It was the sun on my face that wakened me, to find that I lay on the islet in a great pool of my own blood, and by my side my dear lady looking up at the sky with sightless eyes, shot through the heart. Why they had not made sure of me, I do not know. Doubtless they thought my wound was mortal, and left me for dead. And indeed I should have died, by rights, but I found strength to plant a stick with a rag on it; some fishermen, passing, found me raving for water, and took me with them and nursed me back to life."

Again he moistened his lips with wine, and again went on: "One thing in the world is stronger than love, and that is hate. Hate made me live, was medicine for my body, meat and drink for my soul. To live to revenge myself on that false-hearted craven; to make up to him one-tenth of what he has made me suffer; to feel, if possible, his breath going out in his throat under my grasp—that is what is left of my life. If I could go through hell with him side by side, suffer each pain that he suffered till they wrenched my heart apart—every second of that agony would be like balm, if only I could see his every torment, watch his every pang."

There was no mistaking his terrible earnestness; the man was talking from the depths of his being. Yet why, I wondered, did he tell all this to us, for he did not give the impression of one who would reveal affairs so private even to those whom he knew best, much less to strangers so youthful and so unversed in the ways of the world. But my unspoken question was to be answered far sooner than I imagined. "That," he said, "is my story, save for one detail. I have not told you the names of the captain and the mate. The mate is a bald-headed scum of the earth named John Shively; the captain's name"—he turned to the youth beside him, then distinctly and with deliberation added—"the captain's name is Andrew McAllister."

In spite of myself, I started as though I had been shot; now, indeed, the whole affair became startlingly plain. But the effect on Robert McAllister was even more pronounced, for it was his own uncle whom he heard accused; and half-leaping from his seat, with crimsoned face, he cried boldly, "You lie!"

I drew an involuntary breath of dismay at the words, for I deemed them his death warrant, and indeed, for an instant, the captain's hand sought his belt; but immediately he mastered himself, and with shrugged shoulders muttered to himself the one word, "Youth!" There followed an ominous silence. Then the captain spoke again. "You would naturally defend your uncle, but I speak the truth. Now I shall ask you one question, which I presume you will answer in only one way; but I must ask it in fairness to you, for on your answer depends your future."

There was purpose in his words; to me it seemed that they were a threat, scarcely veiled, of death. Yet young McAllister, whatever his feelings, carried himself manfully, and sat motionless, with no sign of flinching upon his face, awaiting the question. At last it came.

"Will you, believing that I have told the truth, become an inmate of your uncle's household, learn his secrets, and at the proper time deliver him and his treasure into my hands?"

There was not a second's hesitation. The young man's quiet "Never!" betokened inexorable resolution.

Issues of Stamps or Purposes of Charity

Portugal was the first country to make use of a charity stamp. In 1889 a Portuguese postal official concluded that various scientific organizations existing for public benefit and for the spread of knowledge and kindliness, should be freed of the financial burden of paying postage upon their correspondence and literature. To segregate this form of mail from other mails, a stamp was devised possessing pictorial characteristics unlike any others in use. In color it was rose and black and in the center a rose cross gave the world-wide Red Cross organization its introduction into postal history. The idea attracted little attention outside of Portugal and not until 1897 was an established precedent taken advantage of and carried further by other lands. In that year Queen Victoria, ruler of the British empire, issued a set of two postal stamps, one of them bearing a small cross, to be sold at a rate higher than the cost of ordinary stamps, the excess receipts being contributed to charity. From that time on, charity stamps were adopted in various countries for a variety of purposes. Mexico went so far as to collect funds in this manner to fight grasshoppers.—St. Nicholas Magazine.

Coveted Decoration

On January 29, 1856, on the close of the Crimean war, the Victoria cross was instituted in Great Britain. The cross is awarded for conspicuous bravery. It was extended in 1911 and 1920. This decoration is worn before all others, on the left breast, and consists of a bronze Maltese cross 1½ inches in diameter, with the royal crown surmounted by a lion, and beneath is the inscription, "For Valour."

NECKLINES FEATURED BY MODE; SOLID COLOR TRIMS DRESSES

NECKLINES tell a story of fascinating interest this season. Collarless, flat, with keen rivalry between square and V-shapes, this is the important style message they convey. Bows of every description or else colorful bouquets are doing splendid work in the way of achieving becomingness for the new flat necklines.

Especially does the sports-frock depend upon the contour of its neckline for smartness. The models in this picture interpret both the square and the V-effects as indorsed by Dame Fashion

No doubt the possessor of the trim tailored gown to the left will not lose much time in acquiring a handsome ribbon bow to pose at the left of the square neck which marks its styling.

In lauding the square and V-necks one should not lose sight of the fact that the flat, round and boat necklines with bow or flower to one side are also in good form.

Mothers can afford to spend much time and thought in the making of their children's ginghams, for gingham is considered an exceedingly "classy" fabric this season. Such entrancing things are being done with it, not only for the "kiddies'" clothes, but for those of grownups as well.

One of the likable qualities about gingham is that it always comes out of the tub looking fresher and prettier than ever. That is because gingham is never printed—the threads used for it are always dyed before they are woven. This makes it absolutely sun-fast and tubfast—which, of course, is just what is wanted in materials for children's wear.

Just by way of emphasizing gingham's tones, tints and designs to their utmost advantage, designers have taken to adding trimmings of solid color. The picture gives some idea of how effectively this compose scheme is being worked out in the matter of frocks for tots.

This lovely little dress of rose and white gingham is collared and cuffed with a plain rose color. There is a cunning applique of the solid rose fabric, which disposes flower motifs encircling a wide hemline. The knee-strap bloomers are bound in a plain color to match the dress.

It may not sound practical, but it really is, and a trial will convince—that of finishing the neckline and the sleeve edges, and also the bottom of the gingham dress with a narrow organdie ruffling. Have the organdie picot-edged. It is surprising how exquisitely it irons out. A blue and white checked gingham with delft blue organdie ruffling, an orange and brown gingham with an orange colored frilled edge, are suggested.

There is a marked trend toward small checked and tiny plaided patterns in the newer ginghams.

Colored pearl buttons are a favorite trimming for the gingham frock. A pretty idea is to outline both collar and cuffs of the solid colored material with tiny bright washable flat buttons. The buttons are also attractive sewed on the ends of a self-fabric tie, or across a wee belt. A scalloped hemline also adds charm, especially if it be piped with a contrasting color or white.

huge flower posed so becomingly adds the finishing touch.

Now that kerchief squares and scarves are so fashionable the flat necklines of the new frocks are doubly appreciated, for there is no interference of the collar. It is quite the proper thing to tie a big silken square in sailor fashion about one's neck these days. Indeed the vogue for the surah silk neck-kerchief is outstanding for spring.

OBITUARY OF FORMER KLEMME WOMAN

Harriet E. Robbins Elder, daughter of Amanda S. Robbins and Moses K. Robbins, was born at Apple River, Illinois, July 19, 1855.

In early childhood she moved with her parents to Clear Lake, Ia., where she resided until her marriage.

On December 25, 1876, she was united in marriage with Marion Elder and the couple began housekeeping on a farm near Klemme, Ia.; later moving to Belmond, Iowa.

In 1887 the family moved back to Klemme and settled on a farm two miles southeast of town. Here they took a prominent part in community affairs and reared their children to maturity.

They lived near Klemme until January 1915, when they moved o Eagle Bend, Minnesota. Since the death of her husband, four years ago, she has lived with her daughter, Mrs. Edward Palmby, of Vernon Center, Minnesota.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Elder: Clarence, who died at the age of two years; George R., of Eagle Bend, Minn.; Ralph W., of Klemme, Iowa, and Amy, now Mrs. Edward Palmby, of Vernon Center, Minnesota.

She died at the home f her daughter on April 18th, 1927, at the age of 71 years, 8 months and 29 days, following an illness of several weeks due to dropsy. The end came speedily and without warning, when she passed to the Beyond from a deep sleep.

One brother and one sister, her three children, six grandchildren and a host of relatives and friends mourn her death. She will be remembered by all as a woman who loved her home. Her bravery and cheerfulness throughout her life and especially during her last illness will remain a long time in the memories of those with whom she came in contact.

Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Hoffert of the Methodist. Episcopal Church at Vernon Center at 1:00 o'clock last Wednesday, and interment was made in the Vernon Center Cemetery.

K. H. S. CONCERT TOMORROW NIGHT

HIGH SCHOOL PLAYERS WILL GIVE VARIED PROGRAM

Real Musical Treat In Store For Lovers Of Good Music

The High School Orchestra members have been working hard for the last few weeks on the selections to be given in their annual Concert. They have been doing exceedingly well at rehearsals, in fact much better than was expected, and will undoubtedly have their numbers well in hand by Friday evening. The Concert will be much better than the one given last year and the people of Klemme and vicinity have a real musical treat in store for them. It is hoped that they will take advantage of it and that the Orchestra will have as large an audience as was had at the basket ball games last winter.

The program which has been arranged is of a varied nature and should please everyone as the numbers range from very difficult Classical selections to simple songs which everyone knows. There are enough solo numbers with orchestra accompaniment to break the monotony which one often finds at an orchestra concert. Almost all types of music excepting popular jazz are represented.

The members of this years group are, Violins, Ethel Wellemeyer, Ruth Bailey, Gertrude Johnson, and Gracka Quandt; Piano, Gladys Wilson; Trumpet, Donald GGibbs; Trombone Wm. Gauger; Horn (Mellophone) Clarice Wellemeyer; 'Cello (Alto Saxophone) Vernon Turgasen; Oboes (C Melody Saxophones) Donald Turgasen and Harvey Nelson; drums Orville Stokesbary; and E. G. Gary, Director.

The program to be given Friday evening appears elsewhere in this issue.

Attends Funeral Of Sister At Des Moines Saturday

Mr. Gottlelb Gobelei and son Lester, left Saturday morning in their car for Des Moines to attend the funeral of Mr. Gobelei's sister, Mrs. George Beatty.

NINE CAR LOADS STOCK SHIPPED

NINE CAR LOADS OF LIVE STOCK SHIPPED THE PAST WEEK

Stock Shipments Are Again Picking Up After Sudden Slump

Live stock shipments from the Klemme yards last week were again coming up close to the average set for weekly shipments during the past five months, when shipments had averaged approximately twelve car loads a week.

Stock shipments last week mounted to the nine car mark, a sudden rise over a week ago when shipments from here were only four car loads.

The Klemme Shipping Association held the center of the stage with 4 car loads, consisting of three car loads of hogs and one car load of cattle.

C. A. Larsen shipped one car of hogs and one car of cattle.

The above were all consigned to the U. S. Yards, Chicago.

C. O. Evans, an outside buyer, shipped out three car load of cattle, consigned to the yards at Omaha.

FARM BUREAU PICNIC TO BE HELD IN JUNE

Picnic Will Probably Be Held At Eagle Lake State Park

Arrangements are being made for the annual Farm Bureau picnic to be held the fore part of June. It is very probable that the picnic will be held some time during the week of June 13. The exact date has not been set. The place of the picnic has not been definitely decided, but it will probably be at the Eagle Lake State Park.

The Farm Bureau hopes to secure Mr. W. F. Schilling of Minnesota, who spoke at the annual meeting, to give the main address. Plans are also being made to develop the pageant, Iowa, the Garden Spot of America. This pageant will certainly be well worth seeing.

The tomato industry is looking for a good year. Watch it catsup with prosperity.

LITTLE SON OF MR. AND MRS. WADDINGHAM BURIED SUNDAY

Passed Away Following Operation At Mason City Hospital

Robert Raymond, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Waddingham was born on the 17th day of May, 1923, and passed away from this earthly life to the Great Beyond early Friday morning, April 22 at the Mercy Hospital at Mason City at the tender age of 3 years, 7 mo., and 5 days.

Last week Monday little Robert became suddenly ill and on Wednesday the parents took the child to the Mercy Hospital at Mason City where it was found necessary to operate for a case of ruptured appendix in order to attempt to save his life but in spite of skilled medical and surgical attention the child passed away on Friday morning. While at the hospital Robert was baptized.

The funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon. At the home at 1:00 o'clock Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch conducted a beautiful and very impressive service and as a prelude and a part of the service he administered the Sacrament of Holy Baptism to the six Waddingham children. It is one of the most beautiful and impressive services of the Church. After a short talk by the pastor on what the symbol of Baptism means, and after each had taken the solem vows Rev. Grosshuesch administered the rites to each in turn at the same time giving each a beautiful Bible verse which shall be their guiding verse through life and to be memorized. Eyes were moist among the friends assembled and many recalled just such a beautiful service in their own life, perhaps many long years ago.

After this beautiful home service the remains were then brought to the Methodist church in Klemme where a beautiful service was given by Rev. Grosshuesch and assisted by Rev. Harry Webb. A beautiful and impressive part of the service was the singing by the choir of the church.

Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Besides his grief stricken parents, Robert Raymond leaves to mourn his death three brothers, John, Roy, and Virgil; three sisters, Belle, Doris and Lucile; his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Janke, of Klemme, and Mr. and Mrs. Waddingham of Oregon, besides many other relatives and little friends.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to all who so kindly assisted us in any way during our recent sorrow. We especially want to express our appreciation to the choir for their beautiful singing and also thanking all who contributed flowers. Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Waddingham and family.

OUT OF TOWN RELATIVES HERE FOR FUNERAL SUNDAY

Mrs. Robert Gobelei Buried At Meservey, Sunday

Funeral services for Mrs. Robert Gobelei were held here Sunday afternoon at the Gottlieb Gobelei residence and were conducted by Rev. Harry Webb, of Belmond. The remains were then taken to Meservey by Andrew Wellemeyer who had charge of the services which were held at the Evangelical church conducted by Rev. A. K. Henning at 2:30 o'clock. Interment was made at the Meservey Cemetery.

A number of relatives, and friends from out of town, were here to attend the services, they being: Mr and Mrs. Robt. Gobelei, of Lidderdale, Iowa; Jake Wickersheim and family, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and Miss M. Kriggens, head nurse of the Bowlder Sanitarium of Fort Dodge.

Mrs. Gobelei's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Carter were reported o be in the flood and storm district at their home at Persia, Tenn, and it was difficult to get word to them even by wire and after they did hear of the sad news it was impossible for them to come to Klemme on account of the flood and storm conditions.

Congressmen have nine months vacation to think up new laws.

WEAVER TO SPEAK TO '27 GRADUATES

PROMINENT ATTORNEY WILL DELIVER ADDRESS HERE

Rev. Lease, of Algona, Will Give Baccalaureate Sermon

Two very fine speakers have been engaged for the graduating programs this school year. Rev. Lease, District Superintendent of the Methodist Church, from Algona, was the class's choice for the Baccalaureate Sermon, which will be given on Sunday evening, May 15th.

Mr. James B. Weaver, a prominent attorney from Des Moines will be here for the Commencement address ou Thursday evening, May 19. Attorney Weaver has a splendid mind, is a splendid fellow, and is very easy to listen to. The people of Klemme, we are certain, will like his address. We feel we are fortunate to get both these men for our school programs.

Seniors Smile For Photographer

Our Seniors were excused on Tuesday of this week to make the trip to Mason City where they had their class pictures taken. Kirk's, who did the work last year, and did it well again took them.

Orchestra Program Friday Eve

We wish to call the public's attention again to our High School Orchestra Program on Friday evening of this week. Considerable work has been done on this program and we believe those who like music will enjoy it immensely.

Seniors To Teach Next Year

Some of our Senior Girls, we understand have been promised schools for next year and will attend school at Cedar Falls this summer in order to qualify for them. One other tells us she will not teach but be enrolled next year in a course in commerce or business. We are right proud of our young people who are so early getting ready for earning their living and expenses.

Raymond Schuldt, a member of our eighth grade, has been absent several days owing to an attack f appendicitis. We are sorry this attack could not have been postponed until after the school year was over. We are hoping he may yet be able to be back for some of the closing days of school.

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU LADIES MEET

Ladies Study Making Of Pillow Tops And Decorative Lamp Shades

The ladies of the Liberty Township Farm Bureau met at the home of Mrs. John Goll last Wednesday, April 20th to further take up work in their Home Furnishing Project.

The lesson was on making of lamp shades and pillow tops and was in charge of Miss Ramer, project leader for Hancock County. This was an all day meeting and a hot dinner was served at noon. The attendance at this meeting was rather small on account of the unpleasant weather and the bad condition of the road however, the following ladies were present and greatly enjyed the meeting: Mrs. W. G. Lenz, Mrs. C. A. Schmidt, Mrs. Rhine Schlawin, Miss Sadie Schlawin, Mrs. Henry Greiman, Mrs. John GGoll and Miss Freida Schuldt

CONTEST WINNER TO APPEAR HERE FRIDAY EVENING

Taalkeus Blank, of Estherville, winner of the final State Declamatory Contest in the Humorous section, will read his winning selection, "Levinsky at the Wedding," at the Klemme High School Orchestra Concert Friday evening, April 29th. This is an added attraction which should interest all of those who like declamatory work. Mr. Blank is also well known to many Klemme people, and this will also be Klemme's only chance to hear a State Contest winner in person.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of St. Joseph, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness, their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

Old Pictures May Be Work of Egyptians

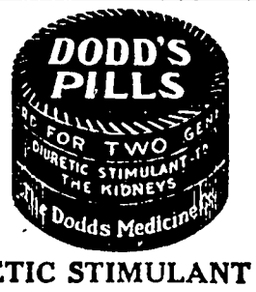
According to a report from South Africa, two men searching for cattle in Rhodesia found some queer-looking pictures painted in a shallow cave under a boulder. They sent photographs of the pictures to Dr. S. P. Impey, a South African authority on rock paintings, who pronounced them specimens of Egyptian art. "There are hundreds of crude bushman paintings in caves all over South Africa," declared Doctor Impey, "but these are clearly of a different technique from anything discovered before. There are 11 figures, apparently minstrels, playing stringed instruments unknown to bushmen. In the cave is a large rock where the artist must have rested, using a long brush to reach the roof. The painted figures wear Egyptian costumes, while bushmen's figures are always unclothed."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Fossil Plants Found to Be Very Much Alike

The weird forests of the Coal age that grew in the widely separated swamps of what are now the states of Rhode Island and Missouri were strikingly alike in the plants that composed them, according to Dr. Eda M. Round, writing in the Botanical Gazette. Doctor Round has made a close comparison of fossil plant remains from the sandstones and shales of these regions, and states that more than 50 per cent of the plant species of the two localities were identical. None of the species that grew there those many millions of years ago survives into the present time, but the nearest relatives of some of them are now represented by ferns, slub-mosses and scouring rushes or horsetails. Two classes of plants, in some way the most interesting of all, are now totally extinct. These were a group of trailing or vine-like plants related to the ferns, and another group with leaves like ferns but bearing seeds, which are unknown among modern ferns.

Pocket Health Machine

So small that it can be slipped into an overcoat pocket, a portable artificial sunlight generator weighing only two pounds, has been invented by a German scientist. The generator, which resembles a toy phonograph, can be plugged into an ordinary electric light socket. It consists of a little nickel-plated horn fitted to a circular metal case. Inside the horn are two specially prepared carbons, across which passes a spark giving out ultraviolet rays. A person sitting two feet away may have the whole body bathed in the rays.



DIURETIC STIMULANT TO THE KIDNEYS

Mrs. A. L. Crawford, Medfield, Mass., writes: "When the doctors pronounced my case Bright's Disease, I was in such a serious condition that they could not do anything for me. I kept getting worse. My limbs from my ankles to my knees swelled and my eyes were so swollen that I couldn't see. As a last hope I thought I would give Dodd's Pills a trial. I gradually improved and kept on taking them. I was greatly benefited.

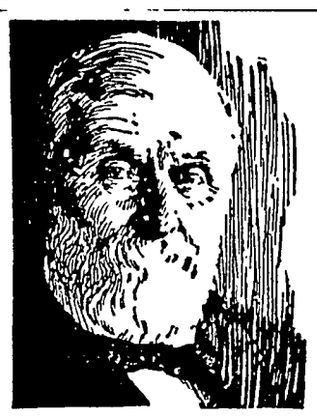
Thoughts While Falling

Thoughts came thick and fast to a man in Hove, England, recently when he slipped while standing in a bathtub. While falling, he said afterward, he had the following thoughts: (1) Will I break my neck? (2) Will there be an inquest? (3) Will my wife be put to any inconvenience giving testimony? (4) Will foul play be suspected, by a silly jury? Fortunately all his questions were answered in the negative.

Connecticut will have 16 women in its 1927 legislature. Wyoming, the first state to grant woman suffrage, will have only one.



DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

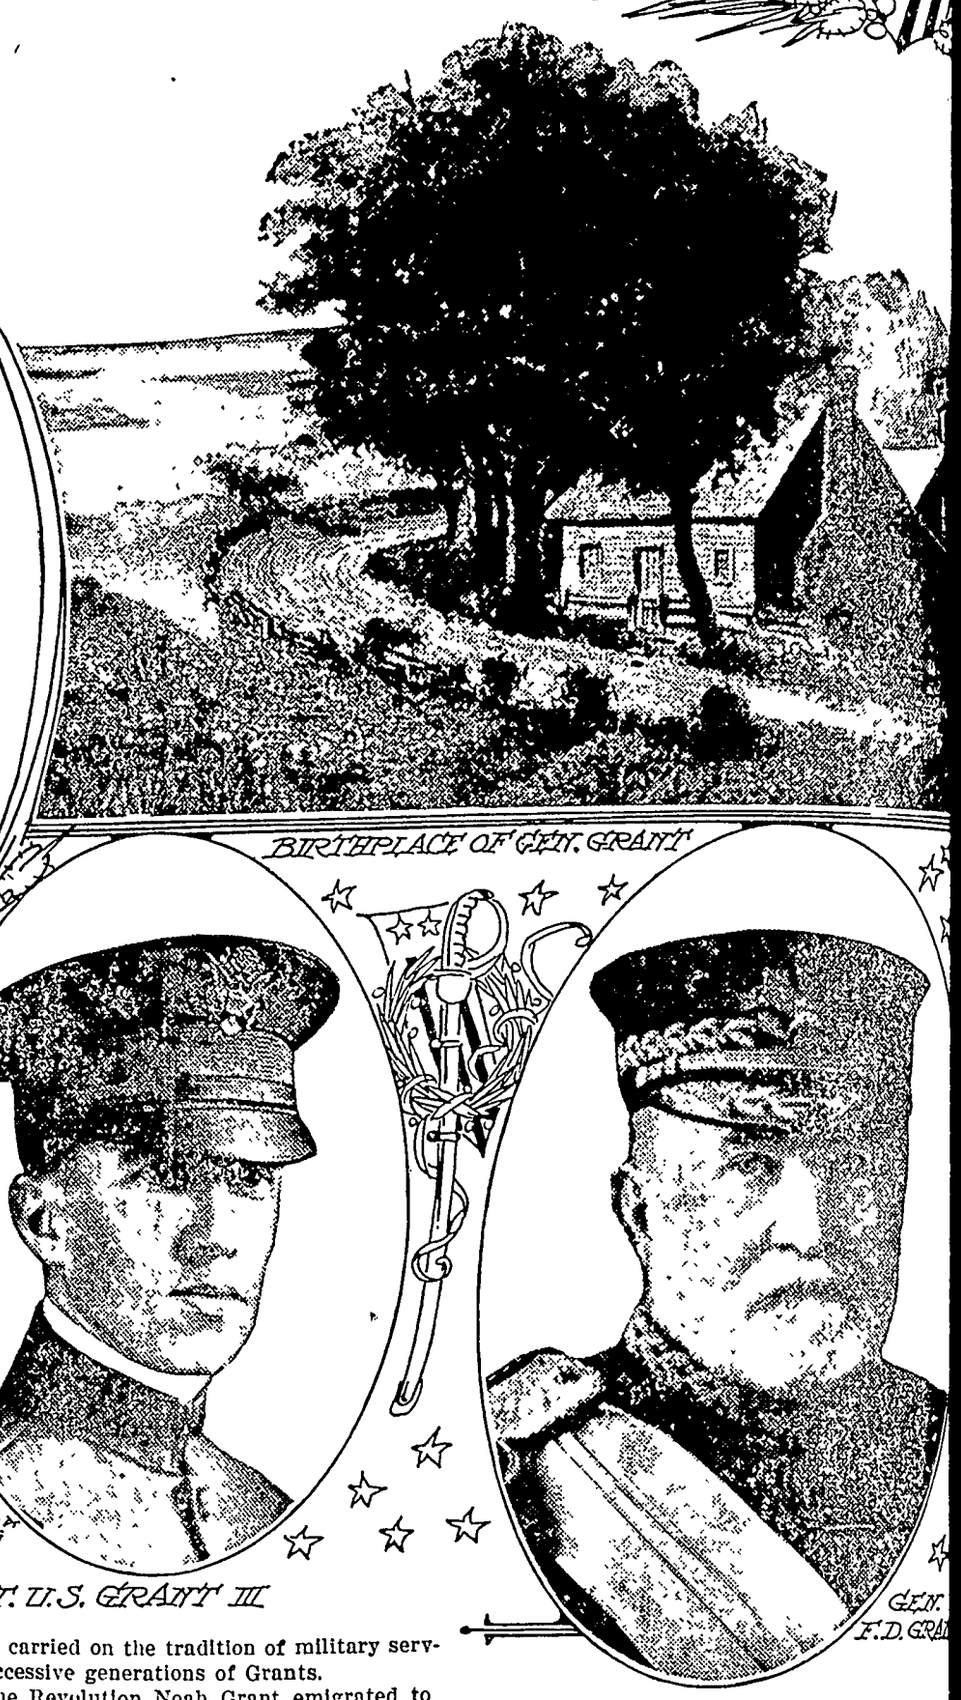
While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

Dr. Caldwell's SYRUP PEPSIN

Grant—Successful Failure



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

APRIL 27 of this year marks the one hundred fifth anniversary of the birth of a remarkable American. He is remarkable in the sense that his life story is the paradox of a failure who succeeded, not once, but many times. W. E. Woodward, author of "George Washington: The Image and the Man," recently announced that he is at work on the "reconstruction of another great American historical figure, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant." From other statements of his it is evident that he is approaching his subject from the "successful failure" angle.

"Grant's career was one of the most dramatic in our history," he says. "At the age of thirty-eight he was an obscure and beaten man, sitting silently around the stove in a country store. His opportunities were all apparently behind him. He had left the army under the charge of drunkenness and had found himself unable to make a living in business. Who would have dreamed, at the beginning of the Civil war, that this seedy, discouraged failure was to become the great leader of the Union armies and to be President for two terms?"

It is because Grant's career was a dramatic one and because his life story has in it so many dramatic elements that he is such an interesting figure. There is the "farm boy who became President" element and, despite the failures in his career, it has, in its general outlines, all the elements of the "success story" of which Americans seem to be particularly fond. As a military genius it is doubtful if he was the equal of half a dozen other generals in the Union and Confederate armies. But Grant, the soldier, was a picturesque character and it is easy to understand how the picture of this stocky, dark, taciturn man, chewing upon the inevitable cigar, would appeal to the imagination of a people so soon to become wedded to a gospel of efficiency and a tradition—intensified, albeit, by the movies—of a "strong, silent man" as an ideal.

Then there is the matter of epigrammatic utterance. We Americans are fond of laconic speech, of our "great sayings by great men," catch-words, slogans and the like. So why should we not remember the man who said "Let us have peace!" and whose brief "unconditional surrender" message to the general of an opposing army could by an identity of initials make it easy to read "U. S. Grant" as "Ulysses Simpson Grant" or "Unconditional Surrender Grant" or "United States Grant." One other element is the fact that the manner of his becoming President followed historic tradition so closely. The tradition was established when the new Republic made the victorious George Washington its first President. The tradition was perpetuated after the war of 1812 in the gift of the Presidency to Andrew Jackson, hero of the Battle of New Orleans, and a little later to William Henry Harrison, the "Old Tippecanoe" hero of another battle in that conflict. Zachary Taylor, the "Old Rough and Ready" of Mexican war fame, was similarly rewarded by his country. So why should not the victorious general of the war between the states be elevated to the Presidency as soon as the opportunity offered? That question was answered in 1868 when General Grant became President Grant.

Grant, the President, is rather a dim, vague figure in our minds. It is Grant, the soldier, who is remembered, and for 300 years those two words have been synonymous. Ulysses Simpson Grant, was eighth in descent from Matthew Grant, who came to Massachusetts in 1630 and was surveyor of Connecticut for more than forty years. Although there is no direct evidence of the fact, it is not unlikely that Matthew Grant had a part in the Indian wars in New England and thus established the line of military Grants. At any rate the soldier strain cropped out early for Noah Grant, Ulysses' great-grandfather, and Solomon Grant, his great-granduncle, held British commissions during the Seven Years or French and Indian war (1756-1763) and both were killed in the same campaign. Noah Grant, his grandfather, joined a Connecticut company in the Continental army and served throughout the Revolution from Bunker Hill to Yorktown.

Whether or not a Grant of this line served in the War of 1812 is not recorded, but Ulysses S. Grant, who served in the Mexican war and the Civil war, his son, Gen. Frederick Dent Grant, who served in the Indian campaigns, in the Spanish-American war, and in the Philippines, and his grandson, Capt. Ulysses Grant III, who served in the World war, were true to their soldier heritage and carried on the tradition of military service by successive generations of Grants.

After the Revolution Noah Grant emigrated to Pennsylvania and in 1799 he continued westward to Ohio. General Grant has recorded in his memoirs that "Noah Grant was not thrifty in the way of laying up stores on earth" and financial reverses as well as the death of his wife in 1805 broke up the family. Jesse Grant, the father of the future President, was given a home by Judge Tod of Ohio and he remained with Tod until he was old enough to learn a trade and strike out for himself.

At Ravenna, Ohio, Jesse Grant established a tannery and later moved to Point Pleasant, Clermont county, Ohio. There, on April 22, 1822, a son was born and given the name of Hiram Ulysses. Grant was appointed to West Point in 1839 and it was at that time that "Hiram Ulysses" became "Ulysses Simpson." In the course of making the appointment, Congressman Hamer of Ohio was obliged to give the full name of his protege. Knowing that the boy's name was Ulysses and his mother's maiden name was Simpson, at a venture he wrote it down "Ulysses Simpson Grant." And so it remained through the remainder of Grant's life. While his career at the military academy cannot be called a failure, at least it was far from a success. The fact that his classmates distorted "Ulysses" into "Useless" has some significance. Except for his superior horsemanship, and proficiency in mathematics, he was never squarely at either end of the class, front nor rear. Mediocrity is perhaps the most fitting characterization of Grant, the West Pointer. His class standing was so low that he served his fourth year as a private and at the age of twenty-one he was graduated with a ranking of 21 in a class of 39.

His interest in horses, both as a boy in Ohio and as a cadet at West Point, had crystallized into a desire to obtain a commission in the cavalry upon graduation. Instead he was appointed a second lieutenant in the Fourth infantry. If this was not Grant's first "failure," it was at least his first frustration, which is so nearly the same thing. He was ordered to Jefferson barracks in Missouri and while there his dissatisfaction with army life became so pronounced that he determined to resign and seek a professorship in mathematics in some college. He applied for an appointment as assistant professor of mathematics at West Point, but again he was frustrated. There was no such position open then. Before one occurred, the Mexican war broke out and Grant was a soldier on active instead of academic service. And this young lieutenant, "fed up" on garrison life and seeking an escape, was the man who a few years later was to become commander of the greatest army ever assembled on American soil and the first American officer to be given the rank of general after that grade was created by act of congress!

During the Mexican war Grant was promoted to first lieutenant for gallantry at the battle of Molino del Rey and brevetted captain for his conduct at Chapultepec. In 1853 he was commissioned a captain, but by this time he was convinced that he could not support his family on a captain's pay.

So in 1854, much to the consternation of his family and his friends, he resigned from the army. In the words of one biographer:

The next seven years of Grant's life were anything but rosy and satisfactory. Having a wife and child to support, it was necessary to get to work as quickly as possible after quitting the army. His father-in-law helped him out by putting him on a small farm he owned in Missouri. Here Grant plowed and harrowed, fed and curried his horses; built, with his own hands, a log house for his family; cut down trees, and converted them into cordwood, and then hauled it to the nearest village where he tramped around the town hunting up customers, who usually purchased on credit—which proved eternal. Upon these wood-hauling trips, the man who later became greatest military figure of the world, and P dent of the United States, was dressed in a shabby old felt hat, a patched blouse coat, pants shoved in the tops of the boots that seen much wear. Not being able to make a li at farming and wood cutting, Grant next tried hand in an endeavor to sell real estate and lect rents in St. Louis. This venture was no successful than the previous one. From St. L he moved to Galena, Ill., where he became a c in a leather and hardware store owned by father.

Thus a failure as a farmer and a business was added to his record.

The opening guns of the Civil war brought out of his obscurity, but again he seemed dest to failure. He offered his services to the gov ment, but, despite his West Point training and Mexican war record, no one in authority much attention to him. Finally Governor Yate Illinois offered him the colonelcy of the Twe first regiment of Illinois infantry, and on J 15, 1861, he assumed command of that regim From then on his rise was rapid until the came at Appomattox, and, as the successful eral in one of the greatest conflicts the world ever known, he reached one of his grea triumphs.

If Grant, the soldier, was a great succ Grant, the politician, was equally a great fai His two terms as President proved that. Alth there was much that was commendable in record as the Chief Executive, in the memor most Americans this is overshadowed by scandals, resulting from misplaced confidence his friends, which marred his eight years in White House. But through it all Grant, the emerged with reputation unsullied. From failure he went to the second great triumph his life—his trip around the world during w he was honored by other nations as few before or since have been honored.

He returned to this country in 1880 to find name proposed as a candidate for the Republ nomination for President and he was not unwilling candidate. During the exciting day the Republican convention the greatness of Gr the man, and the weakness of Grant, the tician, flashed forth again. There was a d lock with neither Grant, Blaine, Sherman Garfield able to muster enough votes to get nomination. Then the Sherman supporters posed to throw their strength to Grant if would agree to make Sherman a member of cabinet. This was Grant's reply, "It was intention, if nominated and elected, to ap John Sherman secretary of the treasury. Now may be certain that I shall not. Not to President of the United States would I con that a bargain should be made." So James Garfield became the nominee and Pres

Spring Tints

(Copyright 1927)

Gaily colored frocks this Spring! Underthings in soft shades to match. Dye them in ordinary water—but with Diamond Dyes. Dipping will do it—in ordinary cold water—but you must have Diamond Dye to get a smooth, perfectly even tone.

Diamond dye powder is fifteen cents at any drug store; so why do half a job with something not half so effective? And when you want the tint to be permanent, just dip in boiling water instead of cold!

The druggist has color cards and simple directions for doing perfect dyeing of all sorts of material; silk or wool; linen, cotton goods; mixed goods, or any goods at all; and exquisite tinting of dainty things. Or, write for a marvelous book of suggestions in full colors. Ask for Color Craft! Address DIAMOND DYES, Dept. N31, Burlington, Vermont.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

LEAVES NEEDED FOR ONE APPLE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The leaf area of an apple tree is capable of manufacturing sufficient food material for a given number of apples of good size and quality. On heavily loaded branches and trees there is often less than 20 or 30 leaves per apple, and under these conditions the fruit is small and of poor quality. Although some orchardists have practiced removing a few apples to increase the leaf area per fruit, until recently there were no experimental data available to indicate the exact number of leaves required per apple. Thinning has been more or less of a guessing operation.

M. H. Haller and J. R. Magness, horticulturists of the United States Department of Agriculture, in a series of tests made at the Arlington farm, near Washington, found that different varieties vary in the relationship between the leaf area and the size and quality of the fruit. For the Grimes and Ben Davis under the conditions of the tests at least 30 to 40 medium-sized leaves per fruit were necessary to obtain apples of good size and quality, and as many as 50 for the Delicious. When a smaller number of leaves was present, the fruit was not only smaller in size, but was low in dry weight, low in sugar content, and of poor dessert quality. It was found also that apples grown with a large leaf area ripen slightly earlier than the same variety having fewer leaves per fruit.

These determinations were made by ringing or "girdling" the bark of a twig to isolate the fruit and leaves from the rest of the tree. Other investigations had shown that ringing largely prevented the passing of nitrogen and carbohydrates in either direction past the ring, thus making the fruit beyond the ring depend only upon the leaves with which it was isolated. By ringing and thinning the leaves to a definite number at varying distances from the fruit it was found also that apples can draw food material from adjacent leaves and leaves at a distance of 2 to 4 feet with almost equal facility.

Conference Pear Makes a Favorable Impression

Among the many pear varieties being tested by the Michigan experiment station, one, the Conference, has made an unusually favorable impression. This variety is one of the standard pear varieties of England, where it is grown extensively for the fresh fruit market and for canning. After a number of years on probation, it seems to be worthy of more extensive trial among commercial pear growers and amateur gardeners. Its season is about the same as the Bosc. In common storage it can be kept until late in November, in cold storage much later. The fruit is quite large and is shaped somewhat similar to the Bosc, although the neck is not so pronounced. In color alone the Conference falls somewhat short of its other splendid characteristics, the color being a greenish russet. However, when ripe enough to eat the fruit is very attractive. As to quality, the Conference, when properly ripened, is the superior of any of our commercial varieties. The tree of this variety is fortunate in having about as many good points as the fruit. It is medium in size, very productive, and it enjoys more than the average resistance to blight. The Conference is being distributed for trial and should be found in the collection of every admirer of pears.

Horticulture Notes

Orchard trees may be pruned on warm days in late winter.

Study the disease and insect problem before ordering your plants. A good bulletin or book on this subject should be secured.

After the trees come into bearing all old fruit and dead wood should be removed from the orchard each season.

The reason that the average home orchard and berry patch fails to pay is because they don't receive enough attention to make them produce.

In pruning see that dangerous crotches and crowding of limbs are eliminated from young trees to avoid breaking down when the trees come of age. The earlier this shaping is done the less shock to the tree.

As soon as the cold weather is over peach trees should be pruned, say Pennsylvania State college horticulturists. As a rule young peach trees receive too severe pruning, while the old trees are not pruned enough.

When the leaves are out it is too late for the dormant or winter spray. Lose no time in preparing for a dormant spray if your trees and fruit bushes show indications of the presence of any of the various scale insects.

Increase Potato Yield Per Acre

Farmers Do Not Make Efficient Use of Knowledge in Growing Spuds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Last fall a firm of California's potato growers harvested an average of 1,000 bushels of potatoes per acre from nine acres. The rest of the country, if previous production records are a reliable index, harvested approximately 113 bushels to the acre. Farmers in Great Britain have been producing an average of 200 bushels per acre for a number of years. It is evident, says William Stuart, potato specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture, that the general run of farmers who grow potatoes in the United States do not make efficient use of the available knowledge on increasing acre production.

Cause of Low Yield.

Of the many factors causing a low average potato yield in this country, poor seed is one of the most important, says Mr. Stuart. The American potato grower, generally speaking, pays too little attention to the quality and quantity of the seed used. The California record was due in part to the use of 40 bushels of seed per acre, almost twice the quantity generally used even by the most progressive growers.

Perhaps the best way for the average grower to be assured of good seed is to purchase "certified seed." Certified seed is being produced by groups of growers in twenty or more states, who give special attention to the production of seed that will pass state inspection as to yielding ability, uniformity, trueness to name, and freedom from disease.

Improved Seed.

There is abundant evidence that certified seed is improved seed, and that it will yield much more than common or "grocery store" seed. For instance, the average yield in Michigan last year was 122 bushels per acre, while the average production from certified seed was 256 bushels per acre. This represents a gain of 134 bushels on each acre planted with certified seed. In comparative tests made last year by the Tennessee state experiment station certified seed produced an average of 183 bushels to the acre, while the yield from uncertified seed was but 102 bushels per acre.

Soy Beans One of Easy Crops to Grow on Farm

Soy beans will grow on all kinds of soils. Soy bean hay is more nutritious than cowpea hay and stock like it better. As a milk-and-butter producer, they are equal to alfalfa and superior to cottonseed meal. A bushel of soy beans is worth more for feed than two bushels of corn. They can be hogged down without any harvesting expense. When cut at the proper stage of growth, the hay is equal to alfalfa for dairy cattle. Drought and excessive rainfall effect them less than cowpeas.

It is one of the easiest crops to grow and harvest. They make a fine hay pasture. They can be grown with cowpeas to hold the pea vines off the ground, and will improve the quality of the hay and make it easier to cure. They increase the yield of the following crop. They make a rich and nutritious hay and one of the cheapest. One can always find ready sale for both beans and hay. They are one of the most economical of soil improvers. They require no fertilizers except acid phosphate. Plant more soy beans.

In Spring Cut Out and Bury Raspberry Canes

The way black raspberries propagate is this: Late in the season, September and October, some of the new shoots bend over until they touch the ground and the tips take root, forming new plants.

These may be left where they grew until the following spring, when the parent cane is cut off just a few inches above the new plant and you have a new stock of plants. The old fruiting plants never sucker, but a sufficient number of new shoots, later called canes, come up each year to form a new bush.

As soon as the berry season is over or the following spring, cut out and burn all canes which have borne fruit. These are all through, will never bear again and if not removed will stand as dead brush. Many growers leave them until spring to help hold up the new canes during heavy snow, ice or windstorms. Not a bad idea. There is not much more to be said.

Agricultural Facts

Bugs and fungi wait for no man.

Legumes and lime are the gold dust twins of agriculture.

The best sort of "farm relief" comes from intelligence, energy, and thrift.

Farming is hard work, but the biggest waste in farming is the waste of time in an unbalanced farming plan.

Canadians Were Slow to Take Liking to Skis

Skis were in use in Scandinavia long before the Christian era, and Xenophon relates that ancient Armenians even had their horses trained to walk over the deep snow on a similar device.

Their introduction in America, however, was comparatively recent. Lord Frederic Hamilton, who traveled widely in the interests of the British court, related: "I can claim to be the pioneer of the ski on the American continent, for in January, 1887, I brought over to Canada the very first pair of skis ever seen in America. I used to coast down the toboggan slides at Ottawa on them amidst universal derision. I was told that however useful skis might be in Russia, where I had learned to use them, they were quite unsuited to Canadian conditions, and would never be popular there as the old-fashioned 'raquettes' were infinitely superior."—Kansas City Star.

Oldest Protestant Church

J. Kirby Brown writes to the Church Forum asking whether the Fee Fee Baptist church, organized in 1807, at Pattonville, St. Louis county, should not rightfully have the title of "the oldest Protestant church west of the Mississippi river." Current reports have cited the First Presbyterian church, which is about 110 years old, as possessing this first distinction as to age. The point seems to be made, in behalf of the claim of the First Presbyterian congregation, that it held continuous services, while there appear to be times at Pattonville, perhaps during the Civil war, when the Fee Fee church was closed. The classification is made, "having continuous existence."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Soft Answer

Supporting the hollowness of London's "smart" night life, we are able to relate an incident reflecting upon its spontaneity.

It concerns a substantial, middle-aged man who was given a seat beside the dancing space in one of these dens of rather pale iniquity. During the show one of the vivacious young women skipped out of line and, by way of making things livelier, pulled loose the man's tie and playfully rumpled his hair. When he showed signs of being annoyed, her expression of gaiety relaxed for a moment.—London Tit-Bits.

Demand for Rubber Shows No Diminution

Christopher Columbus, on his second voyage, found the natives of the island of Haiti playing with rubber balls and reported the discovery of the elastic and resilient substance, which since then has been adapted to many uses. But it was not till the last century that rubber was utilized extensively, when Goodyear, after long years of patient and costly experiment, found a way to overcome its stickiness when subjected to heat.

Since then the demand for it has increased steadily and greatly, and at the present time the supply is so far short of the demand that companies are organized to cultivate rubber trees in all parts of the world, and speculation in the shares of the companies has frequently been a sort of craze.

More than one-half of the rubber production of the world is used for automobile tires. As the supply is inadequate, the price has continually increased. Even rubber of a poor quality sells for a good price.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Garibaldi

A STOCKY, bearded man was arrested on a charge of so-called treason. He was Giuseppe Garibaldi, son of a poor Italian fisherman, and himself a sailor by occupation. In 1834, when only twenty-seven, he joined the "Young Italy" society, was implicated in a plot to free his country from the Austrian yoke, and was condemned to death.

"This ends your career, my friend," remarked one consolatory jailor.

"You are mistaken," retorted Garibaldi, coolly. "My destiny is not fulfilled. Italy's not yet free. I shall live."

He made good his words by escaping from prison. He found his way to South America, where he plunged at once into the warfare that convulsed that continent, and repeatedly won fame by his efforts in behalf of the weaker side. He was taken prisoner by the Brazilian government, escaped, eloped with a beautiful Creole, successively picked up a living as cattleman, ship broker and teacher of mathematics, organized an Italian legion and served as naval commander for Montevideo in the latter's war with Buenos Ayres. Then he returned to Italy and, raising a body of irregular troops, again harried the Austrians.

Italy was divided into a number of independent and semi-independent principalities, including a group of states under the direct temporal rule of the pope. But the northern part of the country was in Austria's hands, while nearly all of it was more or less under Austrian domination. Austria bullied and oppressed the hapless land cruelly. As a result, Mazzini and other patriots formed a horde of secret societies with the hope of freeing their downtrodden fatherland and joining its separate states into one strong union. In 1830, 1834 and at other times revolts sprang up, only to be crushed with an iron hand.

The Carbonari, "Young Italy" and similar patriotic leagues continued their efforts, and in 1848 Garibaldi and his fellow revolutionists captured Rome, forcing the pope to fly to Gaeta, They formed a republic in which Garibaldi and Mazzini were supreme. But Napoleon III (who had earlier pledged his support to the revolutionists) sent a French army to the pope's aid. Garibaldi gallantly held Rome against the stronger foe for thirty days, but was at last forced to evacuate the city. Again Garibaldi was forced to flee from Italy. He now came to New York, where he remained for over a year, working as a candle maker and living on Staten Island. Later he was captain of a Pacific merchantman. In 1854 he returned to Italy and bought a farm on the island of Caprero, off the Sardinian coast. But he was not allowed to remain long in seclusion.

Charles Albert, king of Sardinia, had striven to shake off the Austrian yoke, but was beaten, 1849, at Novara. Heartbroken, he abdicated on the field of battle in favor of his son, Victor Emmanuel, duke of Savoy (grandfather of the present king of Italy), a man of simple tastes, who preferred mountaineering and hunting to the pomp of state. Italy was now at lowest ebb But for Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi it might still be in semi-slavery to foreign power. But in 1859 Victor Emmanuel, refusing Austria's command to disarm his little kingdom, made an alliance with Napoleon III. Together at Solferina, Magenta and elsewhere they inflicted terrific defeats on Austria, and won the war, the great province of Lombardy being ceded to Sardinia, while Victor Emmanuel, in payment, turned over his own ancestral duchy of Savoy to France. The tide had turned. Other principalities—Bologna, Tuscany, Parma, Modena and Romagna (the last-named being one of the "papal states")—annexed themselves to Sardinia. The pope promptly excommunicated everyone concerned in the reform.

Garibaldi left his seclusion and, with 1,000 "red-shirt men," invaded Sicily. In less than three months he had freed the island. He was acclaimed a hero on his return to Italy, but refused all gifts and honors and went quietly back to his farm. The freeing of Sicily and lower Italy by Garibaldi caused the fall of the king of Naples, an oppressor and foe to liberty and lopped off more papal provinces. Thus by 1861 all Italy, with the exception of Venetia and the few remaining papal provinces, was a united kingdom under Victor Emmanuel's rule.

In 1866, when Prussia and Italy fought Austria, Venetia was ceded to Italy; and in 1870, when the Franco-Prussian war caused the withdrawal of French troops from Rome, Victor Emmanuel annexed the last of the papal states, guaranteeing spiritual independence to the pope and himself becoming first king of the free and united Italy.

Garibaldi, meantime, had won fresh fame by invading the Tyrol in the war of 1866, and had fought gallantly in the Franco-Prussian war. Still declining the office, ranks and honors tendered him, he returned to his island farm, where, crippled and broken in health, he died in 1882.

This man of the people was the central and most picturesque figure in the long struggle for Italian liberty, and was also the Nineteenth century's highest type of disinterested patriot.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Floods and Tornadoes Work Havoc in Middle West—Atrocity in Mexico.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WIND and water wrought havoc throughout the Middle West during the week. Scores of lives were lost, many thousands of persons were driven from their homes, and immense damage, as yet impossible to estimate, was done to property. All down the lower Mississippi valley the river levees were giving way and the waters, increased by heavy rains and driven by high winds, were rushing through towns and submerging farm lands. Refugees by the hundreds were gathered, often unsheltered, on higher ground awaiting succor and in some of their camps, notable along the St. Francis river in Arkansas, measles, whooping cough and mumps broke out.

In southwestern Kansas the rivers were fed by cloudbursts and rose to record heights, inundating vast areas and isolating many towns. The Neosha, Verdigris and Cottonwood rivers were out of their banks. In the region surrounding Kansas City the high waters of the Missouri and Kansas rivers caused extended floods.

Monday and Tuesday a series of tornadoes swept across north Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, parts of Kansas and through central Illinois. About fifty lives were lost in these storms, twenty-two of the fatalities being in Illinois, and hundreds were injured. Property losses in towns and on farms were severe.

Relief for the flood and storm sufferers was swiftly started by the Red Cross and by state and municipal governments. The War department supplied tents and the soldiers and medical officers of the National Guard in the states affected gave efficient aid.

MEXICAN bandits broke all records for atrocity in that country when they attacked a passenger train near La Barca in the state of Jalisco. The cars were filled with people returning from the Holy week holidays at Lake Chapala and a guard of fifty soldiers was aboard. The bandits, numbering about 500, derailed the train, killed all the soldiers with gun fire, slaughtered many of the passengers and then locked the cars, saturated them with gasoline and set them afire. The scene that followed was horrible beyond description. Scores of persons, mostly women and children, were burned to death and many of those who broke out of the cars were shot down or clubbed mercilessly. It was believed that more than 100 were killed, in addition to the military guard. Only the passengers who were in two steel Pullman cars escaped death or injury. Among the victims was Donna Refugio Obregon de Ponce de Leon, eldest daughter of General Obregon, former president of Mexico. It was believed the bandits were under the command of a chieftain named Jesus Barajas.

President Calles issued a statement charging that the massacre was perpetrated by rebel bandits under the leadership of Catholic priests and that the latter "received instructions from the episcopate." He said the military escort put up a three-hour resistance against the attacking band, which was headed personally by the priests Vega, Pedraza, and Angulo, the lawyer Loza, who was a member of the League for Defense of Religious Liberty, and a bandit known as "El Catorce" (Number 14).

MODERATES of the Chinese Nationalist party formally established their capital in Nanking, with Gen. Chiang Kai-shek in control, and the split between them and the communists at Hankow seemed definite. The moderates impeached the Hankow group, and the latter in turn deposed Chiang as commander in chief and ordered his arrest and punishment; Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang, formerly called the "Christian general," was named to succeed Chiang. The moderate leader continued his efforts to drive the Red labor unions out of business in Shanghai, Canton and elsewhere. His new commissioner of foreign affairs, Quo Tai-chi, stated his belief that the "real Kuomingtangists," including Mrs. Sun Yat-sen, Tan Yen-kai, Sun Fo, and others, shortly will desert Hankow for Nanking. He does not expect armed clashes between the Nanking and Hankow factions and declares General Chiang will immediately continue the campaign against Gen. Chang Tso-lin and Gen. Chang Chung-chang along the Tientsin-Pukow railway.

Respecting the future attitude of the Nanking government toward the powers, Quo declared: "There is absolutely no change in the Kuomintang party's program respecting the foreigners. We will treat those nations as equal which accord Nationalist China equal treatment."

The sudden shift of Nationalist headquarters from Hankow to Nanking was rather embarrassing to the powers, which were gathering war vessels at the former place apparently for the purpose of enforcing their demand for reparation for the Nanking outrages. The British press in Shanghai thought the forming of the new government was a scheme to avoid responsibility for the Nanking incident.

Marshal Chang in Peking announced that examination of partly burned papers found when the Russian military attache's office was raided revealed a document from the Third Internationale at Moscow giving directions for the massacre of all foreigners in order to bring about intervention in China as a preliminary to a world revolution. The Peking government sent word to Moscow that the raid was not on the embassy proper but on other buildings in the compound; that while diplomats enjoyed special immunities, they did not have the right to carry on illegal practices.

In carrying out the defense program of the legation quarter in Peking, with consent of the Chinese authorities, it was found the gates of the Russian compound were locked. American marines scaled the wall and forced the gates, after which the guards of the other powers entered and took control of the wall.

Northern troops still were holding Pukow, on the Yangtse opposite Nanking, and firing between the two cities was carried on daily. Several times the northerners fired at American and British vessels that were passing and the latter returned the fire effectively.

It was reported in Shanghai that Marshal Sun Chuan-fang, formerly overlord of Shanghai and five rich provinces, and who recently defeated the Nationalists along the Yangtse, had joined that party and had been made defense commissioner of northern Kiangsu, the chief salt revenue area.

JAPAN is experiencing a financial crisis which already has brought about the temporary suspension of several banks, although the Bank of Japan is aiding the smaller financial institutions. The Bank of Formosa also was in trouble, following the failure of the great exporting and importing house of Suzuki, and the cabinet planned to assist it. But the privy council did not approve so Premier Wakutsuki and his ministers resigned. Baron Tanaka was made premier and formed what was agreed upon as a strong cabinet, himself holding the portfolio of foreign minister. The public felt reassured but the financial troubles were not over, for on Wednesday the Fifteenth bank, one of the largest in the country, suspended for three weeks.

IN THE course of the week's desultory fighting between the government forces and the liberals in Nicaragua the latter several times fired on detachments of American marines which were guarding railways. The marines, who suffered no casualties, dispersed the attackers with machine gun fire, killing a few of them. It is the impression in Managua that the rebels are making attacks on the marines in order to force the American government to take charge of the country. Henry L. Stimson, investigator for President Coolidge, is holding conferences with various officials and business men, and there is a good chance that what he recommends will amount to active intervention for the restoration and preservation of order.

FEDERAL DISTRICT JUDGE G. M. BOURQUIN at San Francisco has ruled that the seizure of the steamer Federalship on the high seas, the arrest of its captain and crew and the confiscation of its million dollar cargo of liquor by coast guard vessels was illegal and a "sheer aggression and trespass" by the United States authorities, contrary to treaty. He also declared that, "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind, national honor, harmonious relations between nations and avoidance of war requires that the contracts represented by treaties shall be scrupulously observed, held inviolate and in good faith, precisely performed—requires that treaties shall not be reduced to 'mere scraps of paper.'"

WHEN the "White House spokesman," in reply to rumors that Secretary of State Kellogg was to resign and was to be succeeded by Secretary of Commerce Hoover, declared that Mr. Kellogg had no intention of quitting his post and that if he did, Mr. Hoover would not be given it, a lot of people assumed that this was meant as a slap at Mr. Hoover. To counteract this impression a warm tribute to the secretary of commerce was made public at the White House. It explained that President Coolidge rather assumed in denying published reports that Mr. Hoover was slated to succeed Mr. Kellogg that it was unnecessary to make mention of his high regard for Mr. Hoover's abilities. The President recognizes that Mr. Hoover's reputation is so well established both in this country and abroad that he doubts very much if he would be able to shake it even if he wished to do so. Mr. Hoover has achieved big things, the President realizes, and the public everywhere has confidence in him. The President regards Mr. Hoover as possessing the ability to fill any position in the cabinet which he might be willing to accept.

STOCKHOLDERS of the United States Steel corporation at the annual meeting ratified the proposal of the directors by which the outstanding share capital will be increased from $868,583,600 par value to $1,071,904,000. Of this $203,321,000 in common stock will be passed along to stockholders in the form of a 40 per cent stock dividend.

Actually the stock dividends, the first distribution of the kind in the corporation's history, is worth to the stockholders $294,815,450, which is the market value of the additional shares on a "when issued" basis. The entire outstanding share capital of the corporation will have a market value when issued of approximately $1,671,000,000. The new stock will be placed on the same 7 per cent annual dividend basis as the original common shares.

GOV. AL SMITH'S eagerly awaited reply to Charles C. Marshall's article in the Atlantic Monthly is printed in that magazine and is about what his admirers hoped for. He stands, as "an American Catholic," for complete separation of church and state. His answer embodies a creed that recognizes no power in his church superior to the Constitution of the United States and holds all churches equal before the law and the public school "as one of the cornerstones of American liberty."

UPON motion of defense counsel, Judge Raymond at Detroit granted an order of mistrial in the million-dollar libel suit of Aaron Sapiro against Henry Ford. The reason for this action was that Mrs. Cora Hoffman, one of the jurors, had granted an interview the substance of which appeared in the Detroit Times. Judge Raymond expressly cleared Mrs. Hoffman of allegations made in a series of affidavits by Ford detectives and other employees that she had discussed a $10,000 bribe with one "Kid" Miller, and that she had wrongly stated she was a qualified juror, and asserted disbelief that Sapiro had indulged in any misconduct as asserted in the affidavits.

PETER'S DENIAL AND REPENTANCE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:53, 54; 66-71; Luke 22:61, 62.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Grieves Jesus and Is Sorry.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Peter's Disloyalty.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Jesus Is Denied Today.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Danger of Sudden Temptations.

I. Peter's Downfall (Mark 14:29-71).

This began when he refused to hear about the cross and ended when he, with a foul oath, declared: "I know not the man." When the disciples would no longer hear Christ's message about the cross, they not only ceased to grow in knowledge, but they began to deteriorate in moral discernment and were exposed to the possibility of the shameful denial of their Lord. Steps in Peter's backsliding:

1. Overweaning self-confidence (vv. 29-31).

His unwillingness to face the cross alienated him from Jesus and when apprized of the fact that the disciples would all forsake Jesus, Peter declared that Jesus was certainly mistaken, saying: "Although all shall be offended, yet will not I." Our condition is most perilous when we are most sure of our safety.

2. Sleeping at the post of duty (v. 37).

In one short hour the very one who was so confident of his self-sufficiency had fallen asleep instead of watching. The only way to escape from backsliding is to watch.

3. Lack of prayer (v. 38).

The legitimate inference from the Lord's words "watch and pray" is that He had commanded them to pray as well as to watch. The reason there is so little prayer is due to the lack of the sense of need of God's help.

4. Misguided zeal (v. 47).

Peter drew a sword and cut off an ear of a servant of the high priest (John 18:10) when they came to arrest Jesus. He was thus zealous for the Lord. He was trying to make up in outward service his conscious lack of communion.

5. Followed Jesus afar off (v. 54).

Christ's rebuke for taking the sword and the awkward position in which his act had placed him, caused him to follow afar off. He keenly felt Christ's reprimand. Following Jesus afar off got him into trouble.

6. Warmed himself at the enemy's fire (v. 67).

This fire was built by those who had come unsympathetically to witness the crucifixion and even to mock in this tragic hour. For Christ's disciples to try to get comfort from the things prepared for the satisfaction of His enemies is sinful. Many professing Christians are living a life of compromise, even attempting to get pleasures out of the things which the enemies of Christ have prepared for themselves.

7. Open denial (vv. 66-71).

Step by step downward Peter went until the words of a servant girl provoked open and blasphemous denial. This even by one who had said: "If I should die with thee I will not deny thee in any wise." Peter's trouble began when he shrank from the cross. It was that shunning which separated him from contact with God. It should be remembered that there can be no backsliding until there be established a position from which to slip. Many of the so-called backsliders have never been born again.

II. The Repentance of Peter (Luke 22:61-62).

1. The look of Jesus (v. 61).

This was a most wondrous look. It was doubtless filled with pity and pain. Christ knew the trials through which Peter and the other disciples would pass and He prayed for them. This look brought to Peter the full consciousness of his cowardice and disloyalty and his blasphemous words of denial, and yet it displayed His pity and forgiving love.

2. Peter's bitter tears (v. 62).

The look of Jesus brought conviction of sin. It called to mind his boastfulness and cowardice. How awful must have been his condition as he went out that night into the darkness, little suspecting that there would be found a way to get back into communion with his Lord. Doubtless the message from the women as they came from the tomb brought the first good cheer to his heart. Christ said to them: "Go and tell my disciples and Peter." This encouraged him, no doubt, as it indicated Christ's particular consideration and love for him.

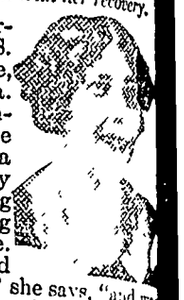
Tanlac a Treasure Says Des Moines Lady

Low in health and spirits, Mrs. Darnall felt discouraged till Tanlac built her up. Now, in glowing health, she calls Tanlac a "household treasure" and credits it with her recovery.



Mrs. S. L. Darnall lives at 1021 S. E. Lacona Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa. From a sickly, run-down woman she has changed to a happy, hearty housewife, working hard and enjoying her everyday life. "I felt tired and lazy all the time," she says, "and was all played out, sluggish and nervous. I had no desire to eat and lost interest in reading, sewing and shopping, which I used to enjoy. After the slightest exertion I had to lie down and rest. Life was dreary then.

"Tanlac helped me in a surprisingly short time. Now I'm my old happy, hearty self again and take a keen interest in everything around me. I'm cheerful and clear-brained all the time, and enjoy life hugely. I can't praise Tanlac too much. I keep a bottle in my medicine chest and call it a 'household treasure.'"

Mrs. Darnall's experience is that of many thousands. Tanlac is nature's own body building tonic, made from roots, herbs and barks. Your druggist has it. If you're rundown and weak, get a trial bottle today. Let it build you up as it built Mrs. Darnall. Over 52,000,000 bottles sold.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his markmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered. The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther. The three go aboard. Lindsay meets there a youth to whom he bears a remarkable resemblance, Robert McAllister, whom Barclay captured on his way to his uncle's plantation in Jamaica. Barclay has sworn to kill the elder McAllister. Bob is asked to act as a spy in his uncle's household. He refuses.

The captain gazed at him grimly. "You would die first?"

The answer came like an echo. "I would die first."

There fell silence. Instinctively my eyes sought Barclay's face, and I seemed to read there, not only inflexible resolve, but something besides—resentment, perhaps, at meeting an adversary as steadfast as himself, and withal, a reluctance to force a crisis. And when at length he spoke, it was evident that my conjectures were correct, for he did what was for him almost unheard of—he chose deliberately to repeat himself, and thus to make his meaning crystal clear.

"Once again," he said, "I assure you, on my honor as a gentleman, that Andrew McAllister is unworthy of consideration at your hands. For any fate that may befall him, he has but himself to blame. You need waste no pity, no sympathy, no act of self-effacement, upon him. And once more I repeat that if you choose to disbelieve me, and to cast your lot with your uncle, then for you that means but one thing—death!"

As he finished speaking, I glanced quickly at McAllister, and instantly hope died in my heart, for he sat gazing at the captain without the tremor of an eyelid, and with an air of half-amused contempt, as if this pirate, despite his power and force of character, were far removed from the other's world. He did not even deign to speak; a faint, half-tolerant shake of his head was his only reply.

The result was immediate, for he could not, I think, have chosen surer means to antagonize and enrage the captain. Like a flash Barclay was on his feet, his face livid with wrath, and turning to me, he uttered the curt command, "Go on deck!"

I rose slowly to my feet; then paused, irresolute, striving desperately to think of some expedient by which I might aid McAllister. Yet the case seemed hopeless. We were two striplings without weapons; our captors were picked fighting men, in the prime of life, and not merely immensely our superiors in strength, but slayers by profession, and armed to the teeth. Again my eyes sought McAllister's, and he seemed instantly to divine what was passing in my mind, for once more he shook his head, and with his hand made the slightest possible gesture toward the companionway. There was no time for more, for our interchange, brief as it was, had not escaped the captain. His face, as he glared at me, was like a storm cloud, and I perceived that his hand had dropped, threateningly, below the level of the table. He snarled, rather than spoke the words, "On deck!"

Wholly against my will, therefore, I yielded, and reluctantly ascended the companion, step by step. But at the top, moved by an impulse that I could not resist, I turned and cast one final glance below. In these few moments the whole scene had changed; Captain Barclay had lost no time. The door leading forward from the cabin was open, and from my outlook the space beyond loomed like a dungeon, black as night. Through this door McAllister was in the act of passing, but whether of his own free will, or whether, as it appeared to me, through the compulsion of Burford and the captain, I could not say. Then, realizing that I was powerless, I turned once more and regained the deck. Yet in the moment that I stood there, without moving, I heard, or seemed to hear, the scuffling sounds of a struggle, and then one shrill, high-pitched scream. For an instant I think my senses actually deserted me, for when I became once more conscious of my surroundings, I stood gripping the after-rail, gazing fixedly at our foaming wake. And for the first time in my life I realized that I was talking aloud to myself. "You heard no scream," I was saying, half angrily. "You heard nothing. Nothing at all."

CHAPTER IV

Another Man's Shoes

Presently, as I stood gazing blankly forth over the blue waters, I felt a hand upon my arm, and wheeling about with a start, I found Burford at my elbow. Instantly I searched his face for some sign of what had happened, only to find that his expression was as inscrutable as ever. Yet almost with his first words I was to learn the truth, and, as he spoke, I perceived, further, that Barclay himself had also come on deck, and stood by the weather-rail nonchalantly surveying the receding land.

"The captain wishes speech with you," said Burford, and added, not unkindly, "Do what he asks, no matter what it is. I know him well; I know his moods. If you cross him now, you die before an hour is past. And"—he added significantly, "you will not die as speedily as the other lad; you will pray for death a score of times before it comes to you."

I felt my heart sink at his words. "Then McAllister—" I cried, and did not complete the question.

His nod was sufficient answer, and without more words he led the way. We were standing out to sea, and the schooner, well heeled over, was bowling along at a great rate. The captain, back to us, stood leaning against the rail, gazing out at the broad expanse of sea and sky. He turned at our approach, with one gesture dismissed Burford, and with another bade me take my place at his side. "You are learning," he said, "something of Fate's revenges; something of the tangled threads that make up the pattern of life. Doubtless you consider a man's life of great importance—a sacred thing. Perhaps it is in your village; but here"—and he indicated with a sweep of his hand the ship and the sea and the sky—"a man's life is no more precious than a flea's. Take yourself. You are nothing to me—less than nothing. Save for a chance resemblance, you would this instant be snugly tucked away on the sand spit yonder, with a great hole in your forehead, and sand for your blanket, and the ooze of the tide for your bed; sleeping for all eternity—"

"The Captain Wishes Speech With You."

In spite of myself, I shuddered at the picture, for though no scholar, this swaggering captain had a marvelous knack of using words. Presently he continued: "And young McAllister was nothing to me. You have the proof of that. And you see what happens to stubborn young men. I am warning you. You doubtless think there is right in the world and wrong in the world, and that you must do what is right. But I tell you that on this schooner there is no right or wrong except my word. What I wish is right; what I do not wish is wrong. You are not, I think, an over-bright young man, but I hope that at least you can see that."

Now I did not take this conclusion kindly, for though the world in general has, I fear, seemed to share that idea of my abilities which the captain had just expressed, I myself have always felt that I was brighter than supposed, barring perhaps, as I admit, a certain slowness at times in grasping a situation quickly. Yet mindful of what Burford had said to me, I kept my temper and answered quietly enough, "Yes, I understand that."

He looked at me with that curious gleam in his eyes which was often there, and which I hated—a kind of amused, contemptuous glance that made you feel his delight in his cleverness and his scorn for your stupidity—and then all at once he said: "Well, Mr. McAllister—"

He stopped with these words, as if to see if he could catch me napping, but for once he did not, for though I own that for an instant I thought he had made a slip, the next second I perceived first that he was too clever a man to do that, and secondly that if it was not a slip there was a purpose in it. And what that purpose was it was not hard to guess. And so, to surprise him, and to show him that he had underrated me, I answered roundly, as he paused: "Yes, Captain, that's my name."

And indeed he was surprised. At first I think he could not believe the quickness I had shown, but presently, perhaps from a smile which I could not restrain, he saw that I understood him, for he laughed and fetched me a clap on the back, crying, "Well, well, I thought you were simple, and here I find that you are deep and subtle—yes, a d—d dangerous rogue."

Now, although this should not have pleased me, I own that it did, and after a little he went on, "Now then, as man to man"—and I own that I liked this too—"I am going to tell you my whole plan. There is that black-hearted Andrew McAllister, rich and prosperous with the treasure that was half mine—and what has he done? He has bought a great plantation on the southern coast of Jamaica, and there he is raising sugar cane and growing richer still. Where does his labor come from? Why, it's slave labor, of course. And he doesn't have to buy his slaves from others; he has a ship that does nothing but trade, back and forth, in a kind of circle, and every port she touches makes him richer. Look now, while I make it plain to you. Two vessels he has; one a brigantine, the Shark, that sails the Caribbean, a pirate out and out. But it's the other that's his steady, respectable trader; she's the bark Ashantee. That bark he loads in Jamaica with sugar and molasses, and up the coast she goes to New England. What happens to that sugar and molasses? It's made into rum—the best New England rum. And where does that rum go? It goes out to Bonny and Calabar. And what is loaded in exchange for that rum? Some gold and some ivory, but mostly niggers—prime niggers, worth fifty pounds a head; and back comes the bark to Jamaica, and the slaves are landed at Andrew McAllister's plantation, and they raise more sugar and molasses, and that makes more rum, that brings more slaves to Jamaica again. Around and around in a circle; can you improve on that for a damnable way of getting rich? Isn't that a game to make the devil rub his hands and laugh?"

I could only nod assent. And I could not help thinking what my father would say if he could hear of this wicked trade. Of the horrors of the "middle passage" I had heard him tell, of the dead bodies flung over to the sharks; aye, and sometimes, when winds baffled and food and water ran low, of live men hurled to their deaths under the shadow of the midnight sky, with no one to know of their murder and avenge it. Surely, as the captain said, this sailing in an evil circle was a game to make the devil laugh.

So vividly, indeed, did he present the picture to my mind, that I must own that for the moment I did not see the incongruous side of a man of his profession thus condemning McAllister; for it was a case of the pot calling the kettle black, and while the captain's fine show of indignation would have come well enough from the mouth of another, it fell oddly from the lips of a professed pirate, a murderer, and a plunderer of the seas. Yet, as I have said before and as I may say again, Capt. Francis Barclay was the strangest mixture of a man I have ever known—at one and the same time, though it sounds, and doubtless is, incredible, a rascal and a gentleman, a murderer and a philosopher, a cruel sneering brute and a man who could yet charm you, with his subtle speech, into thinking that black was white. And so now, as doubtless he intended, he managed to fill me with resentment against Andrew McAllister and his nefarious trade.

Undoubtedly, indeed, he could see by my face, which I am told too openly reveals my emotions, that I was justly indignant, for he continued, "And who runs his plantation for him? That bald-headed spawn of Satan, Jack Shively, his precious mate. Which is the worse of the two, you ask me"—though I had not asked him at all, and had not studied hard enough at school to appreciate his rhetorical skill—"Well, that's hard to say. But I'd answer you this way. Give me McAllister for wholesale villainy, for working out schemes on a big scale. But for downright petty cruelty there's no one to beat Shively. I've seen him torture a prisoner to death, and laugh while he was doing it. And he's the man, if you can imagine it, who has full charge of McAllister's great plantation. Why, boy, it's a very kingdom of the damned. There's only one rule—the rule of the whip—and whether he has cause for it or not, whenever the whim takes him he singles out a slave and has him—or her, he treats the women the same as the men—lashed to a tree, and flogs away till the poor nigger's back streams blood. Whether they die or not he doesn't care, so long as he has his fun. He's a coward at heart; he wouldn't meet you in a fair fight; but he's brave as a lion with those poor defenseless blacks. A missionary went to Shively once, and begged him to treat the slaves with more consideration, to give them some time to learn religion, some hours for recreation and play. And what was Shively's answer? That he had his master's interests to look out for, that religion and recreation paid no dividends, that wiser men than he had figured it out, and that it was cheaper in the end to drive slaves to death in a few years and then fill their places with new ones than to let them live out their allotted span in health and some kind of happiness. Treats them like brutes, you may say. Why, the meanest brute that ever skulked and cowered in the depths of the jungle is a king beside those poor black slaves."

Certainly, as he put the matter, I felt a hearty hatred for both these men—the plot-making master and the brutal mate—and the captain, doubtless perceiving the impression he had made, hastened to drive it home.

"Well, enough of Shively," he continued. "Let me tell you something more about McAllister. You imagine, of course, that he lives on his plantation. But he doesn't. His conscience is too black for that. He's picked the spot where he lives on purpose. The plantation borders on a beautiful river, with a narrow outlet to the sea, but a little ways inland the river broadens into a kind of lagoon, and in the middle of it is an island, and on the island McAllister has built his house, or, as you might almost say, his fort, for that's what it really is. He has a garrison, I understand, a dozen men, good fighters, and there the old fox lives, never stirring from his den unless he has to. And there he hoards and plans and adds to his treasure. A coward, a skulker—" and he made a gesture of contempt too deep for words.

There fell silence, while he gazed over the rail into the sunshine with a fierce and eager gleam in his eyes. It was some time before he turned to me again. "I called you McAllister just now," he said, "and you understood my reason. That young man was true to his uncle; you cannot blame him; he did not know what Andrew McAllister really is. And so—you become Robert McAllister. We have the chests with his clothing and all his effects; we have the letters from his uncle; we are bound to make a success of our plan. No one on the island has ever seen you; no one had ever seen him; and the resemblance between you is so strong that if we could bring back young McAllister from the dead, and dress you alike, it would take a wise man to tell you apart. I've given you the outline of the scheme; now for the details. I land you near his home; you make your way to that cursed bald-headed mate, and make yourself known, and he brings you to the island. All you have to do is to play the dutiful nephew, to get McAllister's confidence, to find out all you can about the island and its garrison, to find out, above all, where he keeps his treasure. Then, in a fortnight, you will meet me again, and we shall talk things over. What will happen next depends on what you have learned. It may be better to storm the island, or it may be that you will have to kill him yourself. But no"—he broke off suddenly, and much to my relief—"that wouldn't do unless it was the only way! I want to have his skinny throat between my hands. But we can settle that later. There's only one thing to do now, and that is for you to give me your solemn word of honor that you will be faithful to me, and that you will undertake this venture as I suggest. If you refuse"—he turned squarely toward me, and his tone was hard as steel—"then much as I regret it, I'll have you stripped and tied to the foremast before five minutes are gone, and I'll rouse my gentle darlings from their d—d drunken sleep and have them pelt you with empty rum bottles till they've let out every drop of blood in your veins. So make your choice, once and for all. Will you die like a dog or live like a man?"

Introducing Mr. Gush, the Great Salesman

I'd like to have you meet Mr. Gush. Mr. Gush is a salesman.

At any rate, that is what Mr. Gush tells people and that is what he wrote at the top of his income-tax return.

I just know that Mrs. Gush thinks her husband is a big business man. She's heard him confess as much so many times.

Mr. Gush has a fine address. As he says, so many salesmen aren't good talkers. He might easily have gone in for after-dinner speaking. He has just that effect on you.

No one can ever say that Mr. Gush refused the gauntlet. He is always ready to do battle with the biggest customer in his territory. "They can't bluff me and the bigger they are, the harder they fall," he so originally puts it.

Mr. Gush has found it difficult to get an attractive arrangement; you know what the rest of us call a good job. Speaking before the Happy Hour club the other day, he announced, "The greatest trouble I have is in letting my boss keep up with me."

A willful group of men have petitioned for an open season on just such babies as Mr. Gush.

"Just jealous," says Mr. Gush, dropping his dime into the pocket with the other one where it can make more noise.—Boston Globe.

Real Toy Town

The real toy town of Britain is London. Wooden toys such as rocking-horses and doll-houses come in thousands from factories in south London. In the old days wooden toys were mostly made by home workers, each of whom devoted his or her time to the production of one particular article. But the pay was poor, and the increasing competition from Germany practically killed this sort of work.

Unproductive Land

Pontine marshes form a part of the district known in Italy as the Campagna di Roma, which is situated between Rome and the coast. Efforts have been made to drain the district, but without much success, and at the present time the district is used almost exclusively as a grazing ground for cattle.

It is not always the head of the family that foots the bills.

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

"SAYING it" with ribbon, that is what the mode is doing this season. Not only are ribbon bows trimming everything they can find an excuse to trim, but hand bags, belts, as well as the hats we wear are expressing themselves in terms of ribbon.

A gay striped ribbon belt and purse to match have a wonderfully enlivening effect on a somber tailored dress or jumper frock. To buy "ready made," well, that is one way of doing it, that is, if your allowance is a generous one—but think of the fun and satisfaction one gets out of making these pretty things at home.

In choosing ribbon for an envelope purse with a belt to match, the stylish thing to do is to ask for the newest bayadere stripes, for striped ribbon is "it," according to latest fashion reports. Of course it is necessary to buy two widths, the narrow for the belt, the wide for the purse. For a few pennies any shoemaker will clamp several brass eyelets in the belt length of ribbon. Then all that remains to do is to attach a suitable buckle and there you have it, a belt as handsome as one could wish. As to the envelope purse, cut a piece of stiff canvas or pasteboard so it will fold in three panels, one for the flap, the other two for the sides of the pocketbook. Insert gussets at each end and line a belt is added, as the picture shows.

The silk square in the picture can be made at home by hemstitching a plain border as shown.

Not rumor but fact says we are due to witness a revival of the upturned brim. Many of the little shapes from Paris are now showing that tendency.

Sometimes in the newer hats the brim rolls up very shyly as if timidly announcing a coming innovation. Then again it adopts a bold course frankly declaring a decided cuff or flare.

The group herewith, which includes both straws and felts, presents an interesting study from the standpoint of the brim which rolls off the face. Note the handsome leghorn at the top; its upstanding brim gives something "different" from the face-framing ripple brims which for so long a time we have had with us.

The first little hat to the left, which is a crochet visca, gives a naive little roll to its ribbon-bound brim.

One of the latest whims of fashion is to dip the brim at the back, in contrast to a saucy uplift at the front. The nobby felt in the lower left corner illustrates this new movement.

The felt to the right above boasts a cuff directly turned from the face. This is interlaced with narrow felt strips which are in contrasting color.

Hats for Early Summer.

Because the last hat in the group is banded and trimmed with velvet, it is very stylish, for hats are showing a considerable use of velvet, ranging from tiny narrow ribbons to very broad softly folded, draped and knotted effects. It is an interesting observation in regard to this shape that while the brim rolls, it also hints at a bonnet trend, and "they say" the cloche is considering a return engagement.

everything with silk. At a glove-repairing counter one can get a snap fastener put in or one can be sewed on. If the ribbon is not as wide as the length of the panels, piece it, concealing the seams under a metal beading such as is used to finish lamp shades.

From the outlook we are going to stage a revival of that vogue which waged at such a fast and furious rate some years ago. We refer to the making of the hand bag of handsome metal brocade ribbon, only this time

HANCOCK COUNTY COURT ORDERS

Louden Farm to be Sold

An action was started in the March term of the district court in Hancock County asking the appointment of a referee to partition and divide equitably between the Louden heirs the 217 acre tract of land just at the northeast corner of the town of Klemme. It being impossible to divide the land the court appointed the undersigned as referee to sell this farm at private sale to the best possible advantage of the heirs. This being a forced sale it is probable that the land will sell at an exceedingly favorable price from the standpoint of the buyer. The land is going to be sold. Anyone looking for a real bargain in an A No. 1 Iowa farm close to a good town should get in touch with me at once, at Belmond, Iowa. Phone numbers 386 and 16. During banking hours you will find me at the State Bank of Belmond.

Y PAVE WILSON GHWAY THIS YEAR

LD NOT COST TAX PAYERS ANY MONEY

ssible Condition Of Road Is Repsonsible For Agitation

rner Leader, Tues. May 3rd)

e impass ble condition of the on Highway, primary road No. during the past couple of months caused a great deal of agitation favor of paving that stretch of . The insufficiency of gravel on road has been pretty well demrated this spring. Thus far this , this county has expended an rage of $136 per mile for upkeep repairs of its primary roads, fully three-fourths of this a- nt has been expended upon the on highway.

he fact that No. 15 can be paved s Hancock county without y's expense to the taxpayers of county, should have a tendency make boosters for the project. To e this highway from the Wright nty line, on the south, to the nebago county line, on the north ld mean the coverage of apximately 24 miles. County Enneer Chas. Merten estimates that ould cost approximately $23,000 mile for this paving, provided same route is followed as the son now traverses. All of No. 15 been graded, tiled and the bridinstalled, and it is upon these provements having been made t Mr Merten bases his estimate cost.

Just how this project could be ficed, is a question that may arise the minds of our readers, so for ir information, we turn back the es of Hancock county road buildhistory In the year 1919, this nty voted to authorize the board supervisors to issue $1,000,000 bonds for primary road paving. Of s amount, $630,000 in bonds have n issued, leaving $370,000 of the ginal $1,000,000 authorization, issued With May 1, last year, the irement of bonds began on that e each year, until the outstanding nds are fully paid, $75,000 will be plied. With the $75,000 retired t year and another $75,000 which s paid by County Treasurer Suurle May 1, this year, there remains tstanding $480,000 in Hancock nty primary road bonds.

If the county board saw fit to do it could at this time, authorize e issuance of $520,000 in primary ad bonds, which amount would ing the issue to the maximum of ,000,000.

Under the new state road control , it is possible for the state highy commission to advance 40 per nt of the cost of construction, and the event that body would do this, would be necessary for our county issue only $325,000 in bonds to ve the Wilson. The highway comission has done this in other parts the tate, and if funds are availle, would undoubtedly do the same ere. The fund from which this 40 r cent could be drawn is known as e "development fund." Under this me law, the state highway comission is charged with the retirement of all primary road bonds, and e payment of all interest charges, d this provision of the law exains how the Wilson could be pavd without added expense to the tax yers of this county. The state ghway commission, however, has authority to call for the issuance bonds by any county. In this inance, the Hancock county board ed issue the bonds and the retirent and interest charges would be ken care of by the commission.

There are many arguments in fav of paving Primary road No. 15 at could be advanced, but it is not e Leader's thought to set up a con ntion one way or the other, but ther to publish the facts as they e found and explain how such an provement could be made, and fianced, if it is the will of the peole, the board of supervisors and the tate highway commission.

E. G. GARY SIGNS CONTRACT AT ROCKFORD SCHOOLS

Will Have Charge Of School's Large Orchestra And Other Work

The Rockford schools have secured Mr. E. G. Gary of the Klemme high school as their musical director for the coming year. The position is a desirable one and carries a good salary.

The Rockford school directors may indeed feel fortunate in securing Mr. Gary as their instructor in music and other high school subjects he may teach. As an orchestra director Mr. Gary is outstanding and is without a doubt one of the best directors in North Iowa. He is an able teacher in high school and devotes much time to his work.

Mrs. Gary is also greatly interested in music and is very talented as a piano instructor. Recently she gave a recital in Klemme which showed her pupils had made wonderful progress under her instruction.

Both Mr and Mrs. Gary are always willing to enter into school, church and town activities and are valuable citizens in that way. Parents and friends in Klemme will be sorry to have them leave.

The people of Rockford are fortunate in gaining them as citizens.

The Rockford high school orchestra this spring won the district contest in their class. Under the able direction of Mr. Gary the coming year we predict they will be in line for state honors.

STOCK SHIPMENTS ARE AGAIN ON INCREASE

Klemme Shipping Association Has Eight Car Loads Of Stock

Stock shipments are again climbing up in the number of cars as is evidenced by the shipment of nine car loads out of the Klemme yards Saturday night.

The Klemme Shipping Association handled eight car loads, consisting of two car loads of hogs, five car loads of cattle and one car load of mixed stck.

C. A. Larsen shipped out one car load of hogs Saturday night.

Stock shipments took a sudden slump a few weeks ago but have again been steadily picking up with better roads. For several months weekly stock shipments averaged around twelve car loads a week from the Klemme yards.

FARMERS PICNIC TO BE JUNE 15

EAGLE LAKE STATE PARK WILL SCENE OF BIG GATHERING

The Iowa Pageant Will Be One Of The Many Special Attractions

The date of the annual Farm Bureau Picnic has been set for Wednesday, June 15th and will be held at Eagle Lake State Park. Mr. W. F. Schilling of Northfield, Minnesota, President of the Twin City Milk Producers Association will be the principal speaker.

Plans are being made whereby the 4-H Club Rally Day will be held in connection with the Farm Bureau picnic. The club members will hold their business meeting and program in the forenoon at which time the annual election of the club officers of the county will be held.

Iowa Pageant To Be Given

The pageant "Iowa, The Garden Spot of America," will be put on in the afternoon. Several hundred people from all parts of Hancock County wil take part in this pageant. The pageant will show the various phases of Iowa farm life which tend to make it the garden spot of America. An ideal American family are in quest of an American ideal home. The resources of Iowa are shown to them through the action of several hundred Hancock County people. At the end, they choose Iowa as an ideal American home.

Aside from this, there will be band music and plenty of amusement for everyone. Eagle Lake is located in the center of the county and can be easily reached by anyone. Special parking arrangements will be made where automobiles will be taken care of.

Baseball Meeting

There will be a Baseball meeting at the Legion Hall at 7:30 o'clock next Monday evening, May 9 and all business men and those interested come. No donations will be requested.

CLUBS WILL ENJOY CLEAR LAKE CAMP

HANCOCK COUNTY GIRLS CLUB TO CAMP AT CLEAR LAKE

Girls From Three Counties Will Enjoy Summer Outing

Arrangements have been practically completed for the three day girls club camp to be held at Clear Lake, June 7, 8, 9. This camp is conducted for the benefit of the club girls of Hancock, Worth and Cerro Gordo counties.

The following rules will be observed:

1. Every girl attending camp should be at least 14 years of age.
2. Club record should be considered in selecting the girl.
3. Every club should be entitled to send two representatives and a leader or chaperone to the camp.
4. Every girl and leader should make reservations for the camp and send one dollar of the fee to the county agent by May 25.
5. Live up to all regulations of local and county club.
6. The camp will be open on the evening of June 6 and close on the evening of June 9.
7. A fee of $4.00 will be charged each girl and leader when she enters camp, besides the $1 which is paid in advance.
8. June 9 will be guest day.
9. Only camp people will be admitted to the dining hall.

This is the first attempt to put on a girls club camp and those interested are very anxious that it be made a success. Every club in the county should get their representatives selected and determine who is entitled to attend the camp.

A good program is being arranged which will include health talks, nature study and home economics.

Miss Arnquist, Miss Forbes and Mr. Bode of the Extension Service will be on the program. The camp will be in charge of Miss Merle Ramer.

Boys Club Camp Also

Word has been received by Mr. Taft of the Extension Department that plans are being made to hold a series of boys camps this year.

The one that will be of interest to our club boys is at Clear Lake on June 10, 11, 12. The attendance in each camp will be limited to 110 boys, equally divided among the counties, in this district. Only farm boys between the ages of 16 and 21 will be permitted to attend.

Any boys in this county who are interested in this camp may get further information at the Farm Bureau office.

"PHANTOM OF THE OPERA" TO BE SHOWN HERE FRI. & SAT.

Is One Of The Greatest Pictures Ever Shown On The Screen

One of the most thrilling pictures ever shown on the screen, and which has just been recently shown at Des Moines and other cities at enormous prices will be shown at the Idle Hour theatre in Klemme this week on Friday and Saturday evenings. As this is a 10 reel production those who want to see it should come early.

Lon Chaney is the star and this picture and those who have seen Chaney is other pictures can expect to see something most thrilling. So painful are Chaney's make-ups in his pictures that he is only able to stand acting five minutes at a time. The make up he uses in this picture required three hours each time to apply. Following are some of the high points of interest:

"The Phantom of the Opera" is Universal's most ambitious production, surpassing in every way even "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

The Paris Opera House, one of the largest and strangest buildings in the world, was completely reconstructed for its making.

The interior of the opera house with five tiers of balconies and boxes, stage 100x70 feet, grand foyer, and the five cellars beneath are among the features reproduced.

A whole army of sculptors, painters and decorators, worked for several months reproducing famous sculptures and paintings.

Three thousand people in brilliant costumes appear in the scenes taken entirely in color.

Five Nubian lions, three tigers, elephants, hyenas and other animals were trained for the mystery scenes.

Seven blocks of Paris streets are reproduced in detail.

Lon Chaney spent three months experimenting with the unusual make up. It requires three hours every day for its application. By his contract, no photographs of it could be published before the release of the picture.

One of the big scenes is the actual fall of a 16,000 pound chandelier upon the audience of 3,000 people. How it was done will remain a mystery forever.

This week Friday and Saturday at the special price of only 10 cents and 30 cents.

BELMOND SUGAR COMPANY WILL LIQUIDATE BUSINESS

Committee Appointed To Appraise Property and Dissolve Company

BELMOND, May 5.—Stockholders of the Iowa Valley Operating Company, at a recent meeting at the sugar company office, appointed a committee consisting of Fred Dutro, of Chaska, Minn., aud A. L. Luick, W. C. Tyrell, E. Beck, M. C. Barry and W. R. Ramsey, to wind up the affairs of the organization. The committee will apraise the property and liquidate and dissolve the corporation.

The company held on April 1, in cash accounts receivable and semiliquid assets, $79,109.03; supplies and other non-liquid assets inventoried at $119,619.33, less a depreciation reserve of $23,830.81, making a figure of $95,788.52. Total holdings are valued at $174,897.55.

The latter figure, less $56,526.73 outstanding obligations of the company, leaves a net worth of $118,370.82, or approximately 80 per cent of the par value of the capital stock outstanding.

ELL TOWNSHIP 4-H CLUB WILL MEET MAY 14th

The 4-H Club meeting will be held at the Fred Greimann, Jr., home in Ell township on Saturday afternoon, May 14th. All the girls are asked to be present as this is the first meeting and an election of officers will be held and other important business taken up.

FARM BUILDINGS SWEPT BY FIRE

BULDINGS ON J. OSTERCAMP'S FARM BURNED TO GROUND

Flames Fanned By High Wind Consume Buildings In Few Minutes

Fire destroyed several buildings on the John Osterkamp farm, tenanted by E. J. Stokesbary and family, two and a quarter miles west of Klemme Tuesday forenoon.

Mr. Stokesbary was at the eas side of the barn loading manure when he first noticed flames shooting up over the roof of tho barn. A terriic wind was blowing from the west and as tho blaze had started on the west side of the barn the flames were fanned and spread into a solid mass and the buildings were burned to ground in the matter of less than fifteen minutes. Help was called and Mr. Stokesbary was able to get most o the live stock out of danger.

The barn, of fair size, a hog house built on the side of the barn, a cattle barn to the north of the barn and a shed were burned to the ground. The crowd which had gathered in a few minutes kept the fire from jumping to other buildings by forming a bucket brigade. In addition to hay and grain in the barn, Mr. Stokesbary lost all of his harnesses, a wagon, five calves which he could not get out on account of smoke, five pigs in the hog house, besides the usual amount of tools and equipment found around barn. The brick silo at the north side of the barn was badly damaged by the blaze and in many places the bricks have holes burned through them.

Both Mr. Stokesbary and Mr. Osterkamp carried insurance and will be reimbursed to some extent.

Had the wind been in any other direction no doubt the entire set of buildings would have been burned as the high wind made fire fighting a losing battle. A call to Klemme brought out the entire male population that were able to leave for the fire. Neighbors from far and near responded to the call or help. Mr. Stokesbary requests the Times to thank all or their assistance in every way in helping him save his property.

MOTHERS' DAY

Affection and reverence sanctify Sunday, May 8, a gold letter day in our country's calendar. It is Mother's Day.

There is no voice like the voice of mother It whispers through all the years of time. It murmurs the cradle-croons of centuries. It carries tender memory of the sweet fragrance of childhood. It sings at twilight. It calls through the night silences. It welcomes the dawning of enhaloded days.

There is no kiss like that bestowed by mother love. It is the balm that soothes all injuries of the moral soul, that lessens the hurt of all mortal physical pain. It is the love that lightens life. It is the message of spirit dreams born in the Heaven of heavens.

The mother kiss dries the tears of childish sorrow and wooes the heart of maturity to sterner effort along all paths of virtue.

There is no smile like unto that of the mother smile. It touches us as a benediction, which it truly is.

And what prayer is like unto the mother prayer? Angels smiling, bear it; God receives it. Only God may know, and understand, its selfishness, the richness of its yearning, the pathos of its passion, for mother love and God love are akin.

And have we lightened and brightened her days, this mother of ours? Have we realized something of the splendor of her devotions to the cross, to the cradle? Have we sent her roses in life, or, mayhap, lilies to rest upon her folded hands, when she has gone to Motherland, which men call Heaven?

Mother! we greet you! There s no other e'er can take your place, from everlasting to everlasting!

The Sepoy Mutiny

A FEW pots of grease cost many thousand lives and nearly $200,000,000 in India, about half a century ago, besides inaugurating one of the bloodiest tragedies ever enacted.

India's history, down to the Seventeenth century, is largely a chronicle of barbarism, internecine wars, invasions and Oriental intrigue, with a growing European influence in the most accessible districts. The vast country was teeming with wealth of a sort that attracted Europe's covetous eye. The Portuguese won a commercial foothold there, only to be driven from power by the Dutch, who in time were crowded out by English and French. Last of all, the French were routed by the English, until, by 1760, England practically ruled India. Clive, Warren Hastings, Lord Cornwallis and other governors brought the whole territory either directly or indirectly under British sway.

The natives were untrustworthy. The Indian potentates whose power was checked and a horde of fanatics whose religious rites had been curtailed by the foreign rule were ever stirring up revolt against their new masters. Hence it was necessary to maintain a large army in India. England could not spare a sufficient force of white men for the purpose, so organized native regiments, under British officers, and trained them along European lines. These native troops were called Sepoys (from the Persian word "sipahi," signifying "soldier"), and proved splendidly efficient in repeated campaigns. Thus, by 1856, all India seemed safe and moderately content under British domination. True, there were countless fanatics and unscrupulous native rulers who waited only the opportunity to rebel; but for a long time they lacked the chance. That same "chance" came about in an unforeseen fashion. Like most misfortunes of this sort, it was brought about and then augmented by blunders on the part of the British government.

Several English regiments had been withdrawn from northern and central India to serve in the Crimean war. Others were away in Burmah. These departures left barely eighteen white regiments available for action. Several of the most important arsenals and garrisons were in charge of the Sepoys. At about this time the Enfield rifle was adopted for use among the Sepoys. In loading the rifle it was necessary to bite off the end of the cartridges. These cartridges were coated with grease. They were also packed in glazed paper. The foregoing facts seem mere trifles, yet they brought on a bloody insurrection.

The Sepoy regiments were made up of Mahometans and Buddhists. As the English very well knew, the Buddhists and Mahometans alike are forbidden by the most sacred laws of their religion from eating or even handling pork. At once it was claimed by native rulers, agitators and fanatics that the fat of swine was used in greasing the cartridges and glazing the paper. To this was added the rumor that the government was seeking to force the native troops to embrace Christianity, by making them violate their own creed. At once fanaticism blazed into furious revolt. A devout Christian could not be more indignant at being commanded to stamp on the crucifix than were these Moslem and Hindu devotees at the order to defile their souls by handling and tasting pork-fat. Several Sepoy regiments refused to receive the cartridges, and even rebelled. They were disbanded, and the government tardily "called in" the hated articles of ammunition.

On May 2, 1857, a cavalry regiment was ordered, by error, to bite the greased cartridges, in loading their guns. They refused and were forcibly disarmed. This was the signal for general revolt. At Meerut, a few miles northeast of Delhi, the Sepoys and townsfolk rose together, massacred the British garrison and white residents and marched to Delhi. They captured the latter city and made it the headquarters of the mutiny. The whole Bengal presidency revolted and Europeans were massacred wholesale amid the most unspeakable outrages. Nana Sahib, maharajah of Bithur, loudly proclaimed his loyalty to the government, but at the first opportunity went over to the mutineers. He besieged Cawnpore. On his solemn promise of safe-conduct the garrison at last surrendered. As soon as they were at his mercy he murdered them, massacring 210 English women and children who had sought refuge in the town. Lucknow and other cities garrisoned by the English were besieged, and throughout northern and central India British rule was nearly extinct.

The government at last awoke to the peril. Armies under Havelock, Outram, Campbell and other generals were sent to stamp out the mutiny. Lucknow was relieved when at the last gasp, and within a year the final sparks of insurrection were quenched Then the British wreaked fearful vengeance on their beaten foes.

The mutiny brought about a radical change in England's mode of ruling her East Indian possessions. In 1876 Benjamin Disraeli, premier of Great Britain, framed the "Royal Titles Act," making Queen Victoria empress of India, and, incidentally, securing for himself the title of earl of Beaconsfield by way of reward.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Flood Loss Tremendous—Hoover in Command—Beveridge Dies.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THREE hundred lives lost, two thousand men, women aud children driven from their homes, material damage running up into the hundreds of millions. That, roughly, is the price paid by the Mississippi valley this time for the failure to establish flood control.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover, at the instance of President Coolidge, took personal charge of the situation at the beginning of the week, going to Memphis, thence down the river to New Orleans. On Thursday, he thought, the worst was over for the region north of Vicksburg, but conditions south of there were growing more serious as the crest of the flood passed on south. The return waters from the levee breaks in Arkansas, northern Mississippi and northern Louisiana were getting back into the river and the peril of New Orleans with its 400,000 inhabitants was so great that Mr. Hoover and Major General Jadwin, chief of army engineers, also on the ground, recommended that the levee be cut near Poydras, ten miles south of the Crescent city, to relieve the pressure. The War department gave its consent to this radical action and the break was made. The immediate consequence was the flooding of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes by the waters rushing across to Lake Borgne, an inlet from the Gulf of Mexico. The hundreds of farmers in those parishes had been ordered to move out with their families and live stock, but of course their property loss is immense. The entire National Guard of Louisiana was ordered out to help in the evacuation of the region and to suppress the threatened resistance of some of the inhabitants. Mr. Hoover appointed Col. John M. Parker director of the flood situation in Louisiana, with dictatorial powers. Both the secretary and General Jadwin were greatly concerned by conditions along the west bank of the Mississippi between Vicksburg and Natchez where immense losses were expected unless the work of strengthening the levees could avert them.

Urged on by President Coolidge, measures for the relief of the flood sufferers were carried out efficiently and swiftly by the national and state governments and by innumerable organizations. All contributions were made to and the work done by the Red Cross, and the federal and state troops gave efficient aid. Steamers and other boats plied up and down the river removing refugees from the levees and high spots and concentrating them in camps and towns. Steps were taken to check the threatened spread of malaria, pellagra and other maladies, and vast quantities of clothing, food and other supplies were received by train and boat. President Coolidge had called on the nation to raise a fund of $5,000,000, and by the close of the week almost the entire sum had been collected and turned over to the Red Cross.

Secretary Hoover voiced the opinion of all thinking persons when he declared the nation should take a lesson from this disaster. "The floods of the Mississippi river and its tributaries can be controlled if adequate engineering works are installed," he said. These would cost a minor part of this single loss. Thirty states have contributed water to this flood, but of more positive interest is the fact that no part of the nation can suffer a loss without that loss reflecting onto every other part. The people in this vast region who contribute so much to national wealth and prosperity should be relieved of this anxiety and terror. It is a national problem and must be solved nationally and vigorously."

SPEAKING in New York at the anniversary dinner of the United Press, President Coolidge outlined the attitude of the government toward Mexico, Nicaragua and China and made an appeal for pure Americanism. He declared there is no trace of imperialism in the foreign policies of the administration and said those policies deserve the undivided support of American publishers. Concerning Mexico, he said our government stands squarely on the understanding with Obregon, but he does not expect any armed conflict since Mexico indicates that the confiscation of American property is not intended. The presence of American forces in Nicaragua was explained and justified, and the President then took up the Chinese question. He said final disposition of the Nanking incident rests in further consideration of the matter by the American government. The President reiterated that the United States is ready to negotiate a treaty giving China complete tariff autonomy and releasing extraterritoriality rights as soon as China is prepared to give protection to American citizens and their property. Meantime he insisted our forces "are in China to do what China itself would do if peace prevailed."

NEWS from China was somewhat obscure, but it is certain that a three-cornered contest is on for control of the Nationalist party. Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, moderate leader, was advancing his troops toward Hankow, and the Communist faction there was "digging in" to resist them. Meanwhile the Nationalists at Canton had declared their independence from both those factions. The northern forces at Pukow on the north bank of the Yangtse were reported to have made an attempt to cross the river near Nanking and to have been repulsed with heavy loss. It was said the batteries at Nanking sank every boat of the northerners. From both banks of the river American and British warships were subjected to gunfire and several Americans were wounded on the gunboat Penguin. Reports were received of the movement of several armies in various parts of China, but their exact affiliations and destinations were unknown.

President Coolidge's seeming reluctance to join the British in taking drastic action against those responsible for the Nanking outrages has enraged the British residents and press in Shanghai and Peking. They assert he and Secretary Kellogg are deliberately ignoring the reports and advice of American consular officials there.

Dispatches from Peking said Marshal Chang was seeking alignment with certain elements of the south China Nationalists, and that he might assume a dictatorship under the title of provisional president and call a constitutional convention. He is forming nine new armies to combat the advance of Feng Yu-hsiang, the Christian general, down the Yellow river.

PEACE in Nicaragua is in sight, for Doctor Sacasa, liberal leader, has accepted the proposal for a conference in Managua, made by Henry L. Stinson, representing President Coolidge, and has sent three members of his cabinet to the meeting.

DEATH came suddenly Wednesday to a man who had been one of the most interesting and prominent of Americans of his day in politics and who had in his later years achieved distinction in letters. Albert J. Beveridge succumbed to a heart ailment at his home in Indianapolis, and two days after his body was laid at rest beside the grave of James Whitcomb Riley, the beloved Indiana poet. Born and brought up on an Ohio farm, Mr. Beveridge made his way through grade school and Depauw university and adopted law as his profession. He became noted for his eloquence and when he entered politics soon was recognized as a leader. He represented Indiana in the United States senate for twelve years, from 1899 to 1911. He was one of Roosevelt's strongest adherents in the Progressive party, but became "regular" again in 1916. His most notable literary work is a monumental biography of John Marshall which is considered an authoritative history of the early years of the Supreme court. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing an equally ambitious life of Abraham Lincoln. His passing is a serious loss to American public life and literature.

TWO more aviators perished last week in the preparations for attempted nonstop flights across the Atlantic from New York to Paris. Lieut. Com. Noel Davis and Lieut. Stanton Wooster of the navy were testing the giant plane "American Legion" in which they hoped to make the flight, when some trouble developed and it landed in a marsh near Newport News, Va., and flopped over, killing both flyers. The tragedy has not deterred others from going on with their plans for trying to win the Orteig prize. Flyers will start from both New York and Paris.

WILLIAM WRIGLEY, JR., of Chicago, said he had been led to believe that President Coolidge had decided to accept his offer of the beautiful Wrigley summer home on Lake Geneva, Wis., for his vacation residence. The lake is eighty miles north of Chicago, and the Wrigley home, "Green Gables," is one of the finest of the establishments in the so-called "millionaires' row." The house, situated close to the shore in beautiful woods, has twenty rooms, all exquisitely appointed. A private bathing beach and Mr. Wrigley's fleet of sail and power boats would be at the disposal of the President's household. In addition to the mansion a ten-room cottage and several smaller buildings, including a lodge at the gates, dot the property.

INSISTING that the Catholic episcopate of Mexico was primarily responsible for the recent train massacre in Jalisco and that it has been fomenting continual revolt against the government, President Calles has deported Archbishop Mora y del Rio and seven other leading churchmen. Some of them came across the border into the United States. The federal troops also went after the bandits who committed the outrage and at latest reports had killed some sixty of them. In several other conflicts with rebel bands the government forces were victorious and in each case priests who were leading the rebels were killed.

THERE will be no general international disarmament agreement this year, anyhow. This was made certain when the League of Nation's preliminary commission adjourned without having come to an understanding. It will make a report to the league assembly in September showing the disagreements of the various nations, most of which listed a number of reservations. Count von Bernstorff, the German delegate, in a private statement, said: "The value of the conference has been in showing clearly the different opinions. Disarmament is the true role of the League, but the instructions of the various governments to their delegations show little desire for actual disarmament. The public certainly is disillusioned."

SOVIET WAR MINISTER VOROSSILOFF told the all-union soviet congress in Moscow that Russian women as well as men must undergo some sort of military training, and was warmly applauded by the many women delegates. The minister denied the British "fairy tale" that Russia has the world's largest standing army, with 10,000,000 reservists. The real number of the Russian forces under arms is 600,000, of whom 100,000 are permanent noncommissioned officers, he said.

WILLIAM GIBBS M'ADOO has been visiting New York, and when he left he was confident that he had assisted the dry elements in the North and West in so consolidating that the nomination of Gov. Al Smith for the Presidency by the Democratic party would be impossible. The Anti-Saloon league leaders felt the same way about it. McAdoo's demand that Smith withdraw from the race for the good of the party is naturally ignored by the governor, for he has not declared himself a candidate. On behalf of Smith it is said he is only waiting for an opportune time to meet the challenge of those demanding a further expression of his views on prohibition. His close friends assert he is not nearly so wet as he has been painted and will be able to satisfy the law enforcement group of his party. Washington has invited the Democrats to hold the convention of 1928 in the national capital.

PETER AND THE RISEN LORD

LESSON TEXT—John 20:1-10; 21:15-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ which according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Forgives Peter

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Forgives and Restores Peter.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Risen Lord Appears to Peter.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Fellowship With the Risen Lord.

I. Peter and John at the Empty Tomb (John 20:1-10).

John does not enter into a description of the resurrection of Christ or attempt a proof other than that the tomb was empty and that Jesus had repeatedly manifested Himself to the disciples after the tomb had been found empty.

1. How they came to know (vv. 1, 2).

The information was brought by Mary Magdalene out of whom Jesus had cast seven demons (Mark 16:9, Luke 8:2). Prompted by love for Him she went early to the tomb, "while it was yet dark," "she was last at the cross and first at the grave, she stayed longest there and was soonest here." Her love for Jesus was genuine, though her knowledge of His resurrection was defective. She could not rest till she had done her utmost for Him because she realized that great good had come to her from His hands. The reason we work so little for the Lord is that we have such a dim sense of His saving grace.

2. Their investigation (vv. 3-10).

The news of the empty tomb, which Mary brought with breathless haste, so moved John and Peter that they both ran to investigate. Upon arrival at the tomb John gazed upon it, but Peter entered it. John, with holy reverence, hesitates. Peter, with impulsiveness, enters the tomb at once. Their respective actions are not to be explained on the basis of degrees of love for the Lord, but to temperament. The investigation convinced them. The removal of the stone from the sepulcher, the arrangement of the grave-clothes all convinced them that it had not been done by an enemy.

II. The Charge of the Risen Lord to Peter (John 21:15-17).

Jesus put to Peter the thrice repeated question, "Lovest thou me?" Then He gave him a commission. This shows that supreme love to Christ is the one essential qualification for serving Him. Love is the spring from which all Christian activity flows. He asked, also, to show that there are three classes in the church which demand care and attention. These three classes need special care and food.

1. Feed my lambs. (v. 15.)

This first charge relates to those who are beginning the Christian life—the babes in Christ. The word "feed" means more than instruction. It means in addition to instruction that proper surroundings, influences and examples should be provided. As a Christian minister, Peter was to be an example, provide the proper surroundings and do the proper teaching for the young Christians, those just beginning the Christian life.

2. Tend my sheep (v. 16).

This charge shows a different class. It means to shepherd the sheep. It has application to the mature class of Christians. The duty enjoined therefore is to care for those who have passed out of their childhood into maturity. He must feed the sheep, give them proper instruction, guide them, lead them and discipline them. For this ministry the essential qualification is love.

3. Feed my sheep (v. 17).

The implication here is that Peter was charged with the responsibility of caring for aged Christians. The word "feed" is much the same as in the first case. It means that for the aged Christians the instruction ought to be such as will be suited to their needs. This needs special emphasis today because much attention is given to the young people, but in many instances the old people are neglected.

III. Follow Me (vv. 18-23).

In verse 18 is given a clear prophecy concerning Peter's death. It was to be by crucifixion. Peter once shrank from the cross, but now the Lord holds it up before him. It is not the Lord's death on the cross, but Peter's own. He teaches here that the Christian's death is for the glory of God. Whatever may be before us, even the cruel cross, the Lord's command is to follow Him.

Our Hope

Our hope lies not in the absence of danger, but in the presence of Christ, who is able to control the storm. No church with Christ in it can be wrecked or lost. More of the living Christ, more of His love, of His teaching.—Western Recorder.

YOUR MOTHER'S DAY

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

A DAY for your mother—an' mine, as well,
Though she has gone on to th' better land;
But folks 'at's had mothers can always tell
You youngsters a lot you should understand.
You get to my age, an' your mother's day
Will come to mean more than th' rest to you.
You'll think o' your mother, an' smile, an' say
It's Thanksgivin' Day, an' it's Christmas, too.

YOU'LL think o' your mother—o' how she dreamed
That you would be all that she prayed you'd be;
Her patience, her kindness!—she never seemed
Too weary for you to climb on her knee!
She bore with your failin's, joyed in your stren'th,
Th' whole o' her world was wrapped up in you
You'll think o' her day, an' you'll know at len'th,
It's Thanksgivin' Day, an' it's Christmas, too.

A DAY for all mothers—from Mary down,
An' from Mary back to th' start o' time!
In country, an' city, an' little town,
The thought is enough to make man sublime.
So, think o' your mother! Think long an' deep
Of all that she hoped an' believed o' you,
An' then you will know that th' day you keep
Is Thanksgivin' Day, an' is Christmas, too.

Mother's Love Recognized by Those Whose Names Shall Live.

NAPOLEON said: "The future of the child is always the work of the mother." And we realize how true this is if we read what some famous sons and daughters have said of their mothers and what influence the mother seemed to have on their careers.

A striking example is that of Victor Hugo and his mother. When he was born his life was despaired of by all except her. She was determined he should live and gave him the name of Victor Marie, and her determination won out, for within six weeks he was well on the way to recovery. Never did she give up hope of Victor Hugo's success in life and one writer tells us that she looked forward with the greatest confidence to the future of her son, holding that "he might with even greater justice than Foquet adopt as his device the words, 'To what may I not rise?'" And Victor Hugo was devoted to his mother, but like many mothers she did not live to see his first great success, for she died just one year too soon.

Lincoln's Great Mother.

To all of us the story of Abraham Lincoln and his mother is familiar. We know how, through all her great struggle, she managed to impart what she knew of the Bible and the little education she had to her son. And we know how hard it was for Abraham Lincoln to see his father put his mother into a green pine box and bury her, and how he grieved for three months until his father brought a parson from Kentucky to preach the sermon and to conduct the proper service for the dead.

Frances Willard's devotion to her mother is one of the most beautiful parts of her life. Truly, Frances Willard inherited her greatness of thought and her determination to succeed from her mother. When as a young teacher she wrote: "I thank God for my mother as for no other gift of His bestowing. My nature is so woven into hers that I almost think it would be death for me to have the bond severed and one so much myself gone over the river."

Frances Willard's Tribute.

That bond was severed and Frances Willard lived just six years after that mother had "gone over the river." Her last words were: "I've crept in with mother and it is the same beautiful world and the same people; remember that—it's just the same."

Another mother who lived to see her hopes in her child materialized was George Washington's mother. George Washington Park Custis tells us that "the mother held in reserve an authority which never departed from her, not even when her son had become the most illustrious of men."

All who have written of her have accorded her an influence in determining both his character and his career. And on her monument we find the inscription, "Mary, the Mother of Washington."

Stern Man's Devotion.

One of the softening influences (if we can believe there was one) in the life of Oliver Cromwell was his mother. There was a great devotion between these two, and she lived with him until her death at ninety-four years in Whitehall palace. Each day he visited her room, and at her death he stood by her bedside with tears in his eyes. Her last words were, "My dear son, I leave my heart with thee; good night." She is buried in Westminster abbey.

They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty scepter
O'er lesser powers than he.

But mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

—Kansas City Times.

OLD-FASHIONED MOTHERS

THE old-fashioned mother, though she has taken to herself some new-fashioned prerogatives, remains—the old fashioned mother. That is why the world is going forward rather than backward. The world will never go backward so long as the old-fashioned mother remains to guide its destinies—and the old-fashioned mother may be a flapper or the reverse. Motherhood of the right sort is a thing of the heart, not of externals—a quality of the soul, divorced from all superficialities. She still is everywhere—this old-fashioned mother. She doesn't mind the pitying jeers of the unfortunate class of her sisters who fail to see in the home the divinest temple of peace and happiness that has been ordained by God. One has not far to look to discover the splendid type of American mother. She looks to the affairs of her household, and she cherishes her babies. She sings, and her songs are the joy hymns of the mother heart; she cuddles her babies as mothers have done since the beginning; and she is proud of her kicking, crowing "latest," though she loves them all alike.—Jackson News.

NAILHEAD TRIM IS POPULAR; NOVEL EFFECT IN SPORTS WEAR

FOR a change, why not trim the new frocks or coat with nailheads instead of with beads? Nailheads are newer and they are smartly adaptable to daytime modes.

Gold nailheads in two sizes dotted here and there add greatly to the attractiveness of a navy-blue crepe or satin frock. They are equally as effective as a border for the hemline of the coat.

It is an artful motif of nailheads which supplies a most fetching decorative note to the gown in the picture. The conventional flower worked on one side of the blouse is a popular idea this season. When done in steel nailheads as is the motif in the picture, it carries a convincing style message. Slippers of neutral tone gray kid were carefully selected for wear with this costume of dark-green crepe, thus carrying out a color scheme of gray, steel and green for the ensemble.

As one considers this handsome costume comes the thought of how charmingly it could be developed in the popular black and white. The flower motif would be very effective worked in large white porcelain beads or in tiny pearls. White kidskin slippers scrolled with an applique of black or with fancy designed inlays, or if you please, black slippers piped with white would "complete the picture."

Speaking of nailhead trimming, sometimes an entire blouse is starred with gold or silver nailheads. Then, too, nailheads are used to embellish fancy sleeves. In the same class with nailhead effects is that of the tiny "pocketbook clamps" which are pressed about the edges of cuffs, collars, belts and pockets. A dress of dark crepe or satin thus trimmed may handsomely add a gilded or silvered belt.

The use of nailheads as a trimming extends into the realm of millinery also, many felt hats being designed with them in all-over patterning.

Anything for novelty, that is the mood of the mode. The stylist answers the challenge by introducing metallic effect into knitted construction. An increasing number of sweaters, jumpers, knitted coats and jersey frocks are showing a tendency to yield to the lure of gold and silver. One of the charming ideas is the white jersey frock whose jumper is embroidered in all-over gold and silver design after the manner here pictured.

Sometimes the metallic note is expressed in an actual interknitting of gold and silver threads rather than in embroidery. Sweaters and coats whose stripes interwork their coloring with glittering tinsel are among smartest showings.

Newest in the category of sweaters is the slipon knitted entirely of gold, silver and bronze thread in a manner most enchanting. Often, also, colored jersey shows an interworking of horizontal metal stripes.

Very conspicuous sweaters both as to design and color are worn with plaited solid-colored jersey skirts—especially white. As summer advances more and more will filmy lace-knit sweaters make their appearance. Sweaters knit of chenille with metal stripes are among lovely novelties.

Two items which render the distinctive touch to knitted costumes are color and necklines, ranging from subtle blend to dazzling contrast. As to necklines, there is a distinct preference for the collarless type describing either a V-line, square, round or boat shape.

The bow-at-the-neck fad has entered the domain of the knitted blouse or sweater. It is usually posed at the side of the square neck or at some strategic point near the shoulder.

The Face of Our Mother

IT IS the first face that waited for us, the first face that greeted us, the first face that kissed us.

It is the face that watched our babyhood, that read the language of our smiles and the message of our tears.

It is the face that watches us as we grow.

It is the face that never turns away.

It is the face that lights at our joys, clouds at our sorrows, smiles at our smiles, weeps at our tears.

It is the face that turns to us tho' we turn to others.

It is the face that gave its beauty for our life.

It is the face on which Constancy has carved its immortal figurement.

It is the face on which Love has written its undying message.

It is the face which has no equal and no counterpart.

It is the face poets have sung and artists drawn.

It is the face that has made men, and held men, and saved men.

It is the face the infant first remembers and the old man last forgets.

It is the face that time can never touch, for its features are Love.

It is the face that looked for us from Eternity and will look for us in Eternity.

It is the face that has helped us, inspired us, comforted us, forgiven us.

It is the face that gives all and asks nothing.

It is the most beautiful face in the world: The face of our Mother!

Mother Love Second Only to That of God

The chief thing which crowns all true motherhood is her unselfish love. A mother's love is eternal, it never dies. It makes no difference how deep in sin her child may go her love never falls. No one perhaps has more accurately described the love of a mother than Kipling in "Mother O' Mine."

If I were hanged on the highest hill,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!
I know whose tears would come down to me,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

If I were damned of body and soul,
I know whose prayers would make me whole,
Mother o' mine, O mother o' mine!

Only the love of the infinite God above us surpasses that of a true mother. Irving said, "A mother is the truest friend we have, when trials heavy and sudden fall upon us; when adversity takes the place of prosperity; when friends who rejoice with us in our sunshine desert us, when troubles thicken around us, still will she cling to us and endeavor by her kind precepts and counsels to dissipate the clouds of darkness and cause peace to return to our hearts. God has given to us many beautiful varieties of flowers. He has given us many kinds of precious ore, but He has given us only one mother that we might treasure her the more." The ways of love and tenderness are never out of style; remember this and tell her so—don't wait till after awhile. Let not affection wane with years! it waneth not for you.

Reason for Mothers

Because He loves the children so God gave them mothers just to be His holy ministers below, to fit them for eternity.

Because all mothers are His care, God lends the helplessness and grace of childish hands to lead them where their angels always see His face.—Anna B. Bryant.

Symbol of the Day

The white carnation early was adopted as the symbol of day; its whiteness for purity, its form and fragrance representing beauty and love, and its wide field of growth and lasting qualities symbolizing charity and faithfulness—all a true mother's virtues. The white carnation remains the recognized symbol of Mother's day, though usage has introduced the wearing of the red carnation in tribute to living mothers. Other flowers are worn when carnations are not available.

YOUNG WOMEN MAY KEEP WELL

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Here is Proof

St. Paul, Minn.—"Here is a little advice I would like to have you put in the papers," Mrs. Jack Lorberter of 704 Dellwood Place wrote to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company. "If young women want to keep their health and strength for the next thirty years of their lives, it is best to start in right now and take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have tried the Compound myself and received fine results from its use." In describing her condition before taking the Compound, she writes, "I was afraid in my own house in broad daylight, I used to lock the doors and pull down the shades so that nobody could see me." One day a booklet advertising the Vegetable Compound was left on her porch and she read it through. In so doing, she found a letter from a woman whose condition was similar to her own. "I bought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Lorberter continued, "and have had fine results. My condition made me a burden to my husband. Now I ask him, 'How is housekeeping?' and he says, 'It is just like being in Heaven!' Are you on the Sunlit Road to Better Health?

FINE OLD BRIDGES FOUND IN ORIENT

Many of Them Remarkable Engineering Feats.

Great as may be the engineering achievements in building such wonderful structures as the Quebec bridge, the Forth bridge, the great Tower bridge across the Thames, they do not eclipse in wonder some of the native-made bridges of China and India.

The bridges of the Occident were erected with the aid of every modern device known to man under the supervision of thoroughly trained engineers.

The bridges of the Orient were erected by comparatively untrained men, unassisted by the wonderful appliances at the command of occidental engineers.

A real thrill may be secured by watching the working of the pontoon bridge at Howrah, says an article which appeared in the Times of India. or by being rattled over the seemingly interminable Sone bridge. It is to an older civilization, however, that one must turn for splendid examples of bridge construction.

The province of Szechuan, in western China, is interlaced with watercourses, which required bridging, and apparently necessity stimulated the inhabitants, at a very early period, to anticipate some of the best conceptions of modern engineering. The bridges in Szechuan mark the intermediary stages between the simple tree trunk thrown down across a stream and the present elaborate structures of steel and stone. Moreover, in bridge building the Chinese discovered yet another way of accumulating merit, for the builder of a bridge in China lays up treasures for himself in heaven in much the same fashion as does the man who erects a shrine, endows a hospital or buries the poor

The most common type of bridge in Szechuan is the "arcade bridge," which resembles in some respects the Rialto bridge over the Grand canal, Venice It consists of a single arch built of stone and topped with a tile-roofed structure of wood, the interior of which is often decorated with paintings and carvings and flanked with sweetmeat stalls at which weary travelers regale themselves.

Another fairly common type of bridge is the iron-chain suspension bridge. One of these spans the Mekong river, which, owing to its strong current, is unnavigable. The bridge has an elevation of 3,000 feet, and is about 80 yards long It consists of a number of stout chains secured at both ends to massive piers of stone, on which are built picturesque chanties.

Across the chains planks are laid, forming a roadway, which is wide enough for laden mules to pass over. As might be imagined, these bridges sway a lot During a storm crossing becomes difficult, and sometimes impossible, for every bridge is not safely nailed off.

Another example is that of a bridge over the Paknoi Hka, which marks the boundary between Burma and China. It spans an impetuous torrent, which is studded with boulders and unfordable during certain periods of the year The bridge is 20 yards long, very narrow and very rickety. It is built entirely of bamboo, and in its general appearance bears a marked resemblance to the ordinary cantilever bridge of modern times.

Air Line Across Sahara .

It will soon be a matter of 48 hours —by air—from Algiers to the River Niger

An airline across the Sahara linking Algeria with the big, valuable possessions of France in black Africa, which the French government has been studying seriously, will be a reality, possibly this year. Announcement of the project was made before the French parliament by the minister of war and the director of the air service after an Algerian deputy stressed the need of a trans-Saharan aerial service.

An appropriation of some million francs (a franc—19.3 cents) is being set aside.

Turning Point

Chicago's Assistant State's Attorney O'Brien, recently shot by gangsters, was brought up on the streets. But while selling newspapers he read and studied and became a lawyer.

Once when trying a case in which an educated man, member of a wealthy family and a "silk stocking" was on the other side, the "silk stocking" man referred to O'Brien in a heated argument as a former bootblack O'Brien rose from his chair, bowed to the court, and, pointing his finger at the silk-stocking gentleman, said, "Sir, if you had ever been a bootblack you would be one yet." That retort helped to make O'Brien in Chicago.

Conscience at Work

The conscience fund of the government was opened with a contribution of $5 in 1811. The amounts sent in range from 2 cents, a person who failed to put a stamp on a letter when mailed, to several thousand dollars from persons who smuggled goods into the United States without paying import duty Usually the amounts are small, however The largest single deposit was $30,000. As of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, $4,551.51 was contributed. The total in the fund as of December 31, 1926, was $561,891.87.

New Lakes Constantly Forming in Florida

It is conceded that a greater portion of the peninsula of Florida was cast up by the sea. What is considered the most tenable theory is two-phased in a way, and points to the work of the tiny shellfish that created the reefs around which sand drifted, and undoubtedly floating seeds of the mangroves which, rooted in the sand, put a finishing touch on the land in Florida by catching and holding sand deposits from the sea and gulf.

The sea has built and the sea has remodeled, for here and there are islands that show by their vegetation that they were once part of the main land or older portion of the peninsula

Florida came from the water, and the thought has come up of late years that it may return to it—at least a great part—not from any encroachment by the sea or gulf, for the mainland is being added to constantly, but by the creation of lakes, many of which have appeared in the last decade.

It is true they have come, some from rains and some have appeared in "sink holes" as outlets of huge springs or underground rivers. Possibly some lakes are forming at the expense of others not far away, by seepage or the breaking through of actual channels and draining to some extent into bodies of water that lie at a lower altitude.

In the De Land district there are easily 100 lakes that were not there sixty years ago. This information comes from the very old-timers of the district, says the Philadelphia Record

Jesse Driggers, formerly bridgemaster at the Crows Bluff bridge, is authority for the statement that there were no lakes worthy of the name in the De Land district when he went there in 1867, fifty-nine years ago.

Other old-timers verify the statement and also point out that lakes that were then are not now. Many have also receded a great deal; but they all agree that many lakes have come in the last fifty years.

All scientists agree that the earth's surface is changing constantly, and the greatest alternative agent is water. It is said that the Atlantic ocean is drying up, but only at the rate of a few inches every 10,000 years.

The growing number of lakes in Volusia county come in low places, naturally, and add to the landscape very materially in scenic beauty. The whole situation is naturally queer, but interesting.

Made Fortune in Scrap

Though war enriched hundreds of men, it was peace that made F. N. Pickett wealthy. With $50,000 he agreed to pay France $5,000,000 and Great Britain $10,000,000 for the right to clear away the ammunition dumps left by the allied armies after the signing of the armistice. He sold the scrap iron extracted from the dumps and paid off his debts in installments and made a fortune from his profits. Mr. Pickett hired 10,000 laborers of all nationalities and for several years lived in the war area in a little world all his own, with his own police, and issuing his own currency. His only partner in this business was his son, who was five years old when the work was started.

The Matter With Him

"Gracious goodness!" exclaimed the able editor of the Tumlinville Torch of Liberty and Tocsin of the Times. "Who is that fellow that came in with you, and what is the matter with him?"

"Aw, that's Hunk Butters," replied Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "He's got a bunch of hounds that have running fits—they take 'em and light out and run for three days sometimes, and come back as gaunt as if they had been starved."

"Mr. Butters looked very dilapidated, too. What has happened to him?"

"He's been running after the hounds, I reckon."—Kansas City Star.

Cat's One Week

There are stingy people—and stingier people—and then there are people who vie with the proverbial Scrooge for high honors among the stingiest.

A few weeks ago a certain woman who was going out of town for a week's visit took her cat over to the home of a neighbor and asked her to care for it while she was gone.

"The cat will not be any trouble," said the woman. "Here is a cold boiled potato which I have cut in seven pieces. Just give the cat one piece each day I am gone."

Needless to say, the potato soon found its way to the garbage can, and the cat enjoyed square meals for at least one week.—Indianapolis News.

Public-Spirited Gift

As a wild-life sanctuary, a tract known as Little Wachusett mountain, Princeton, containing 127 acres of land, has been donated to Massachusetts by a Boston woman. In announcing the gift, the state department of conservation said: "This is one more link in the chain of permanent wild-life sanctuaries which is gradually being established throughout the state. All of our citizens will appreciate the generosity and public-spiritedness of the donor."

Girls Growing Chunkier

According to a survey just completed at Simmons college, Boston, girls are growing chunkier. The average height was found to be five feet, three and three-tenths inches, while the average weight for that height was 120 pounds.

JUNIOR SENIOR BANQUET THIS WEEK SATURDAY EVE

Senior Class Play Will Be Given Next Tuesday and Wednesday

The Juniors are preparing the Junior-Senior Banquet this week, while the Seniors are hard at work on their class play. This makes it impossible to provide an orchestra program by the high school previously announced and contemplated for Sunday evening at the local M. E. Church. Base ball also has had to suffer because of so many other activities. We may play Goodell Friday evening of this week. The banquet date has been fixed for Saturday evening of this week.

The dates for the Senior Class play have been placed on Tuesday and Wednesday nights of next week, at 8:00 o'clock. Reserved seat tickets may be purchased at Wilson's Pharmacy any time after 9 a. m. Saturday. They have been placed at 45 cents. If any fail to get their seats reserved they may take their chances on getting seats at the general admission price of 25 and 35c. The play is a very interesting comedy. It illustrates the difficulties encountered by the "upper crust."

It is called, "Come Out Of The Kitchen," and involves every member of our Senior Class in its cast, some or most of whom will acquit themselves in splendid fashion, owing to their experience in previous forensic contests. We anticpate a large audience both evenings and feel certain those who attend will get value received.

Speakers Coming To Klemme

Word has been received from Rev Lease of Algona that he will be on hand Sunday evening, May 15 to give our Baccalaureate Sermon. This will be held at the Methodist Church. Special music is being prepared for the occasion.

Our Commencement Speaker, Attorney Jas. B. Weaver was on the air from WHO, Des Moines, not long ago and those who may have been listening in at that time are no doubt fully convinced he will be worth coming miles to hear. We feel fortunate in being able to secure him. He wrote one of the orations given at our local declmatory contest and some may have read an interesting article in the American Review of Reviews, on "Iowa" contributed by him with the last few months.

Orchestra Program Well Attended

The Orchestra program last week was very well attended and somewhat of a surprise to many who were not expecting a program of such high quality. Mr. Gary has done splendid work with our young people in music and many regret to see him leave Klemme. He goes to Rockford, Iowa, where he will have more of an opportunity to display his leadership in music, as there are over twice as many in their high school and such work has been carried on there for a longer time than at Klemme. Klemme has been fortunate this year in having so many interested in orchestra but several graduate and a big gap will be left to fill with pupils from the lower classes.

S. A. BARBER'S HERD LEADS IN MONTH OF APRIL

County Agent Issues Report Of Cow Testing Association

S. A. Barber, Kanawha, heads the list of Hancock No. 2 Cow Test Association herd averages for the third consecutive month with an average production of 983 lbs. of milk containing 34.9 lbs. of butterfat per cow. This herd was fed a practical farm ration as follows: Silage, 30 lbs.; alfalfa hay, 12 lbs.; corn and cob meal, 5.5 lbs.; ground oats 5.5 lbs.; linseed oil meal, 1.5 lbs.. This ration proved to be more efficient and cheaper than the one fed in March which cost three cents more per head daily or $7.50 for the herd for one month of eight cows. This is a remarkable demonstration of the possibilities of the monthyl herd test as this herd actually gave an increase in butterfat over the previous month in spite of the fact that every cow was one month later n her lactation period.

Costing approximately 32 cents per day per cow, this balanced ration is permitting the cows to produce profitably without a semblance of forcing that the feed cost per pound of butterfat amounts to only 29 cents.

Robert Hadley, Kanawha, follows in second place with a herd average of 26.6 lbs. of buttenfat per cow. This average was figured on the basis of twelve cows in the herd with ten in milk.

The following men own cows producing forty pounds or more of butterfat during April: Julius Jensn, Lyal Fox, Carl Peterson, Robert Hoadley, Peter Benson, Thos. Everett & Son, W. J. Siebert, S. A. Barber.

The average production of all cows in the association for April was 524 lbs. of milk containing 20 lbs. of fat. This average was figured on the basis of all cows in the association of which fity are dry and 240 are in milk.

Fred Molander, Britt, and Jesse Scott, Corwith, have enrolled as members of the association and their herds were tested in April. The association now has a full membership of 26 herds.

Plan to attend the annual reorganization meeting which will be called in May. These may be busy times, but if there is to be a testing association after August 1, it is essential that every member who intends to test next year be present.

Very likely Earl Schultz, or Jerry Soencer of the Extension Service will be present to discuss various matters pertaining to reorganization. It will be worth your while to hear either of these men talk over dairy problems and whether or not you intend to test next year there will be something of interest to every dairy farmer.

While no definite arrangements have been made, it has been suggested that Hancock No. 2 and No. 1 meet jointly prior to the business session.

Minerals or Protein

Minerals and protein have little common ground for comparison when considering an efficient ration. A few fly-by-night agents for mineral concerns have led many farmers to believe that by throwing each cow a handful of his particular brand of minerals each day, the protein content of feeds can be entirely disregarded.

When feeding such grains and roughage as corn, corn fodder, corn silage, timothy hay and other feeds which are low in protein, it is possible that two dollars may be returned for each dollar invested in minerals, especially when the cows show a depraved appetite as evidenced by chewing on sticks and bones. However, this money may be wasted if the following practice farm ration that is in use on many Iowa farms is fed at the rate of one pound of concentrates to each two and one-half to four pounds of milk produced by the cow with three lbs. of silage and one pound of a legume hay for each one hundred pounds of live weight per cow Corn and corn meal, 200 lbs.; ground oats, 200 lbs. and cottonseed or linseed oil meal 50 lbs.

The above ration is entirely adequate for the needs of the cow both as to mineral and protein content It provides for approximately five times as much ash or minerals as required by a cow fed according to her production.

Common salt, the cheapest and most essential mineral of all is available to every dairyman and should be fed liberally to cows. It is now known that the effect of salt is to neutralize or counteract the effect of a poison which accumulates in the system of the animal. A balanced ration plus salt will prevent a depraved appetite, such as that mentioned above, and the feed cost per pound of butterfat will be minimized

Last week the Times stated that Mrs. Clarence Newberger had resigned as teacher in the Stone school but we should have added on account of ill health at this time. She expects to teach again there next fall at which time she will have completed seven years of teaching in that school, which record speaks very highly of her as a teacher. Miss Bertha Johnson will finish the spring term for Mrs. Newberger.

Alvin Stokesbary's Chevrolet sedan was run into Saturday night by an unknown party and the fender on the front left side badly bent and otherwise damaged. Alvin had his car parked on the west side of Wellemeyer's store and was about to back away from the curb when a car from the north swung into him and made his get-a-way before he could be identified. Alvin was entirely in the right and the other party has laid himself liable to a heavy fine by driving away from a scene of accident.

LIBERTY LIVELY LASSIES HAVE LIVELY MEETING

The 4-H Club, "Liberty's Lively Lassies," met Saturday afternoon at the home of Norma Lenz. There were fourteen girls present.

The afternoon was enjoyed by listening to a health talk on "The Care of Hair," given by Della Rosendahl. The leader, Mrs. Upmeyer, gave a very interesting demonstration on marblized paper. The girls sang a few songs before adjournment. All reported a good time.

LAST P. T. A. MEETING OF YEAR HELD TUESDAY EVENING

The last meeting this term of school of the Klemme P. T. A. was held Tuesday evening at the high school assembly room. Volley ball was played before the program was given. The girls glee club gave several numbers and two songs were given by pupils of the grammar room. Mrs. E. G. Gary gave two fine piano solos. The regular business meeting was taken up and as Miss Gauger, the present secretary goes to Hampton to teach next fall Miss Lenora Wheatman was elected as secretary for the coming year.

Plans were discussed for the coming year, but on acount of the small number present no definite action was taken for next year's projects.

Town Improvements

Alvina Griffen is putting up a nice enclosed porch. Fred Haupt is going to shingle; he is using asphalt shingles. We think they are the thing in town. The honorable Council has granted Geo. Lawhorn a new chimney on his little home, just watch George's smoke! Contractor Zeidler does the work.

If you want a flower or Porch Trellis we have them, some are ready made in sections, and if they are not what you want we can make them.

Kicking won't get you anywhere unless you happen to be a chorus girl!

Dr. Zinn is shingling his round barn. I sure would hate to have the job, if a fellow worked too fast he might get dizzy!

Just a few more weeks until Spring. Surely it ought to be here by the 4th of July!

J. C Larson is erecting several small hog houses; says he needs them; wants to get the little ones on New Ground. Think you have the right idea John. Walt Blumer built one also.

Who cares if we would want to take in a base bal' game occasionally, surely these games could be arranged some way.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his marksmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther The three go aboard. Lindsay meets there a youth to whom he bears a remarkable resemblance, Robert McAllister, whom Barclay captured on his way to his uncle's plantation in Jamaica. Barclay has sworn to kill the elder McAllister Bob is asked to act as a spy in his uncle's household He refuses and is killed. Lindsay is asked to take his place.

I was silent, unable to give a direct and immediate answer. To be stripped and lashed to the mast, and to have these drunken ruffians pelt me with glass that would break and shiver on my naked flesh—that indeed, as he had expressed it, would be dying like a dog But living like a man—there was the rub. To pass myself off for another, to lie, either by speech or action, a hundred times a day, to gain a man's confidence and then basely to betray him—was this living like a man? And at length, with a great feeling of resentment, I turned upon him.

"It's a fine choice to give me," I cried. "God knows I have no wish to die, but to be a traitor, a sneaking spy—how can I do that?"

To my surprise (for I never got over being surprised by the varying moods of this man) instead of being angry, he gave me a hearty clap on the back. "Well spoken," he cried, "and believe me, lad, if Andrew McAllister were a decent man, if he were even half of a decent man, if I knew one good thing to say for him, I'd never ask you to do what I propose. But you don't seem to understand. If I asked you to kill a rat, a snake, a cockroach, would you hesitate? And if I told you to set a trap for them, to catch them by stratagem, would that make any difference? Of course it wouldn't. I've called Andrew McAllister a fox, but I apologize—to the fox, I mean. He's rat and snake and cockroach all in one; he's lower than the filthiest vermin that walks or flies or crawls. Get rid of Andrew McAllister and that d—d bald-headed Shively by any means—fair or foul—and the angels in Heaven will bless you and seven hundred slaves will praise the day that you were born. To rid the world of two such blackguards is a noble deed."

As you may well imagine, I had listened eagerly to every word, for I felt that my life hung in the balance. And as you may also imagine, I was only too willing to be persuaded, for I shrank not so much, I think, from death itself as from the ghastly manner in which it was to come. The captain, I am sure, read all this in my face, for now, as if in a sudden burst of friendship, he took a step forward, placed his hands on my shoulders and with the winning and forceful manner of which he was a master, continued: "If McAllister had been true to me, I would be true to him. I am a fighting man; that is my trade. I show no mercy to my enemies, and I ask none; but when I've once called a man my friend, I have never betrayed him. On that I give you my oath. You speak of treachery, of hating to be a traitor and a spy. What did McAllister do to me that night in the Antilles? No blacker act of treachery was ever seen since the world began. All my life ended there; everything since is only a dream. I must have my revenge; if it were not for that, life means nothing to me; I would as soon leap over the rail this instant and feed some hungry shark. You see, my lad, even in these few hours we've known each other, I've bared my heart. For two reasons I ask you to do this for me. For your own sake; you are young, on the threshold of the world; you don't want to go out yet into the eternal dark. And even more for my sake. Help me rid the earth of this cruel tyrant, who feeds and battens on the miseries of others. Come, give your word, and there's no more to be said. Your life is your own again, and you shall cruise to Jamaica with me as my guest. One word—that's all you have to speak."

Now if ever there was a cunning rascal, always ready to find the weak joint in your armor, Capt. Francis Barclay was the man. Even in the few hours he had known me, he had discovered that I was not to be driven, but that by flattering me and asking for my aid, he stood a better chance of winning me to his side. Yet I am vain enough to think that even his persuasion would not have influenced me, if I had thought that I was doing wrong; for though the prospect of death by torture was far from pleasing, still we can die but once, and there is one thing above life, and that is honor. But I reflected that while the Bible praised those who lay down their lives for a friend, the present case was altogether different. For here, on one side, was a bloodthirsty pirate who valued no one's life, not even his own, at a farthing; while set over against him were two other men, according to his statement even worse than himself. And why I should lay down my life for the sake of a villainous old scoundrel was more than I could see. In any event, I was not called upon to make a decision now. Later, if honor forbade me to betray McAllister, well and good; but now, standing here in the sunlight with the fresh breeze on my face, to gain even a few weeks' respite from death seemed a most desirable thing. And so I answered: "I'll do as you say, but on one condition; if I find McAllister and Shively to be honest men, so that it goes against me to betray them and I would rather die myself, then I have the privilege of that choice. Otherwise, I'll be faithful to you, and play the part of Robert McAllister until the time comes when I feel that I am actually doing wrong. Is that fair?"

"Fair and just," he cried quickly. "I could ask nothing fairer. If you take a fancy to McAllister and Shively, I'll quit the sea and turn preacher. And now, lad, as I've told you, I need you and I must guard your life with care. I can't trust you forward with my gentle darlings; their play is too keen. You will share my cabin, and you had better begin by turning in and getting some sleep, for your face is white as chalk at this moment."

To tell the truth, I was ready enough to go, for often, while a strain continues, we may brace our nerves to meet it, but when it is over, then we realize what we have been through. So now the idea of rest was delightful, but suddenly one other thought struck me. "But," I cried, "McAllister had a scar."

He shrugged his shoulders. "Never fear," he assured me. "We'll invent a story for that. Go below now, and take your sleep."

Once stretched out in comfort in the cabin, I tried my best to slumber, but for some time I lay broad awake. Over and over again, in strange confusion, the events of the day whirled through my brain. Again I was crouching in the reeds, again I saw the giant sailor plunge headlong to the ground; again I trained my gun on the passing wildfowl; again I boarded the schooner, and listened to the talk of McAllister and the captain, and saw its frightful conclusion. Yet at last sleep came, at first deep and unbroken, and then suddenly filled with a most terrible and realistic dream. I was, as it seemed, lying on the sand of the island, and two pirates had crept upon me, and in spite of my efforts to rise, were holding me down, while one of them menaced my throat with a knife. In my anguish I fought, struggled, tried to scream, but not a sound would come. Their grip would not loosen; the blade came nearer and nearer to my throat; it was too awful; with an effort into which I put every atom of strength that I possessed I stirred my leaden limbs, opened my weary eyes—

For one dreadful second I thought that my dream was true. Burford, gripping me by the arms, lay across my body, his strength more than a match for mine. Over my head I saw the face of the captain, in one hand a most murderous looking knife, in the other a sponge which in spite of my struggles he thrust under my nostrils in such fashion that I must breathe or die. Through my wearied brain flashed the thought, "Why all this trouble to kill me when a simple thrust would have done the trick?" And then all at once the answer came to me: McAllister has a scar. My lungs seemed choking; I drew in a great breath of the pungent liquid on the sponge; then—blackness.

CHAPTER V

Two of a Trade.

Two weeks had passed since I had first boarded the schooner, and in that time, with favoring winds and under cloudless skies, we had passed from the waters of the North Atlantic into those of the Caribbean.

It took some time for the cut on my cheek to heal (leaving, to the delight of the captain, a crooked scar), but when I had once regained my customary vigor, I found little enough to do; for the captain kept me aft, away from the quick-fisted crew, and though nominally at liberty, I was, as a matter of fact, on almost the same footing as a prisoner.

It must be said, however, that no prisoner could have had a more delightful jailer. I realize, of course, that since he had contrived to scar me for life, this statement sounds incredible; but the fact remains that this man possessed for me the same strange fascination that he had for all with whom he came in contact. I despised myself for admiring him, and yet, in spite of everything, I could not help it. In the first place, he was the most vivid talker I have ever known, and in the privacy of the cabin would narrate countless tales of his various voyages and adventures. And from these tales I soon discovered that Burford was of great service to him, a right-hand man who, with his placid and genial ways, could gather information or set plans afoot where a more dashing and conspicuous lieutenant might have failed.

Nor were the captain's powers of conversation limited to narrative; his philosophy of life was equally fascinating. I realize now that he must have tried deliberately to shock me by setting up the most impossible standards of proper conduct, but though he was wrong, and I knew he was wrong, yet his brain was so much more subtle than mine, and his learning so much greater, that I was always out-argued and put to shame. I heard him with loathing and reluctance, but I could not answer his arguments, and was fast getting into a sulky and defiant mood, so that it was with immense relief that I heard a bustling upon deck, and then a cry "Sail ho!"

After the inaction of the past fortnight, it did not take the captain long to gain the deck. There, sure enough, a couple of points off our weather bow, was a distant sail. We had been running with started sheets, and now, by luffing sharply, we were able to lay our course directly for her. The Black Panther was a fast sailer, but I think we were all amazed to find how rapidly we overhauled our prey, until presently, as a we drew nearer, it became evident, from her strange evolutions, that she must have been abandoned, for her sails flapped aimlessly against her masts, and she yawed here and there, at the whim of tide and breeze.

In less than half an hour we were near enough to read the name upon her stern, and to discover that she was the brig Sea Gull of Charleston; but as we anticipated, we received no answer to our hail; whereupon the captain gave orders to lower a boat, told me to accompany him, and we were soon dancing over the waves toward the derelict. The captain, bidding the crew stand by, clambered briskly over the rail, I followed at his heels, and in another instant I was on the deck of the abandoned brig, only to find myself turned suddenly faint and sick at the sight which met my eyes.

There was blood everywhere; the decks were stained with it, the scuppers were pools of crimson. And this bright and glaring hue so caught my eye that it was a moment before I perceived that scattered from bow to stern, in all attitudes of sudden and violent death, were stretched the corpses of a score of people, not only men but among them a number of women and even the bodies of two little flaxen-haired children.

The captain, accustomed to such scenes, beheld them quite unmoved; and while I clutched at the rail, with no desire for further inspection, I saw him go up to one of the dead men, draw a knife from the body and examine it with interest, then step to the foremast and critically survey the object lashed to it, at the sight of which I closed my eyes. I had read the word "torture" in books, but had never dreamed to come face to face with it like this. But I was to be spared further anguish. The captain, indeed, had turned to me with a mocking smile, as if about to summon me to join him, when something—doubtless the evidence of fire at which he had just been gazing—suddenly inspired his agile brain, and without taking further notice of me, he disappeared below. And then it was my privilege to witness a most singular and unlooked-for spectacle, for the next instant he emerged again with the utmost celerity, and shouting loudly to the crew, who were lying on their oars a short distance from the brig, he ran, full speed, for the rail, and dived, as nonchalantly as if it were an everyday occurrence, smoothly and cleanly into the sea. Filled with amazement as I was, I yet had sense enough to realize that if the experienced and wily captain was acting in this singular fashion, I had better do the same; and forthwith, with the greatest alacrity, I followed suit.

This, as it proved, was one of the cleverest actions of my life, and if I had not performed it, I should not be writing these pages today, as you will shortly see. Even as it was, the captain, who was an excellent swimmer, reached the boat ahead of me, and began to give orders before he had fairly swung himself over the rail. Instantly the men bent to their oars, at which I, in my turn, gave a lusty shout, and the captain, staring at me for a moment as if he had forgotten my existence, bade them back water; and the second that I felt the stern within my reach, I grasped it with a death grip and tumbled aboard with a mighty flop, like that of a giant codfish. Immediately the crew gave way again with all speed, and we left the derelict behind us at an astonishing pace.

The captain spoke no word, but kept gazing back apprehensively over his shoulder. What in the world, I wondered, could he have seen? Here was a man whom I had come to regard as absolutely calm and fearless, afraid of nothing, and now he was showing the panic of a schoolboy. I will own to the liveliest curiosity, but did not realize how soon it would be gratified, for on a sudden, without a moment's warning, there came such a roar as I had never heard before, and devoutly hope I shall never hear again; and in a second a huge column of flame and smoke went towering up into the sky, the force of the explosion fairly splitting the brig in twain. It is impossible to give, in words, the faintest idea of the spectacle; the air was filled with a shower of debris which struck, indeed, all around our boat, but fortunately without doing us serious harm. Within two minutes the vessel had disappeared, and only bits of wreckage and the bodies of the murdered crew were left to mark her last resting place.

Until we had reached the schooner and the captain had changed his dripping garments, he still spoke no word. Then, with an expression on his face at once somber and determined, he summoned the crew aft and addressed them. As if he and his followers were the gentlest and most benevolent of men, he denounced the murderers of the crew and passengers of the Sea Gull as cutthroats and villains of the deepest dye. Then, showing them the knife he had picked up on the Sea Gull's deck, he told them that the vessel which had done the deed was the well-named Shark, the pirate brigantine belonging to Andrew McAllister, and captained by Anthony Hollidge, as bloodthirsty a scum of the seas as his master. But when he spoke of the act of their fellow pirates in leaving as a welcome for the Black Panther a burning fuse, running straight to the powder magazine of the Sea Gull, the captain's language became unprintable, and the hoarse murmurs of the crew were evidence that their disapproval was as strong as his own. And finally, playing skilfully on their pride as seamen, the captain admitted that we had been caught napping, and that in our excitement over sighting one sail, we had not kept the proper lookout for two; while the Shark, wider awake, had detected our approach and had sought, by the setting of this carefully timed trap, to blow at least a portion of us into eternity. There was only one way, he told them, to wipe out the stain upon our honor: To sight our adversary at daybreak, to follow and engage her, and to give or take no quarter until one or the other of us had joined the hapless Sea Gull at the bottom of the ocean.

Big Disovery Made With Crude Telescope

One of the capital discoveries of astronomy was made with a crude telescope in April, 1845. It was the discovery of spiral nebulae, by Lord Rosse, an English peer. His large telescope was erected in a country district of Ireland more than eighty years ago, for the most part with local labor, and it lacked all the advantages that modern machine tools now afford. Its long tube, supported upon a ball-and-socket joint, and slung in chains between two high walls of masonry, peered through the Irish mists. Lord Rosse could observe objects only when near the meridian and then at the cost of constant effort. In modern instruments the apparent westward motion of the stars is counteracted by the steady motion of the telescope tube, turned slowly about a polar axis by a powerful driving-clock. Lord Rosse, after the tube had been worked back and forth with a windlass until the tedious task of finding a celestial object had been completed, then had to keep it in the field of view by constant recourse to similar primitive contrivances.—George Ellery Hale, in Scribner's Magazine.

All Mothers Should Know This

IF mothers would only realize how health—mental as well as physical—is actually built from nutritive elements in food, especially in the formative years of childhood, they could save themselves the greatest worries of parenthood.

Take the essential element, Dextrose, for instance: Dextrose forms the fuel of the body—supplies energy and strength.

And children, spending great energy in work and play, get new energy chiefly from Dextrose.

For this reason, Karo Syrup, which contains a large quantity of Dextrose, is regarded by health experts as one of the most important foods for growing children.

Give your children all the Karo they desire—on sliced bread, pancakes or waffles. Karo is a sensible, wholesome sweet—full of genuine nourishment and very economical in cost.

"Feel Like a Schoolboy" Says Dubuque Door Cutte

Almost forced to quit work Ray Roggensack, of Ca Ryder and Adams, Dubuque, Ia., is now strong and happy. He lives at 2024 White Street, and credits Tanlac with present fine condition

Operating a door cutting machine calls for a clear head and nerve control. It's a man's job. So when Ray Roggensack's health began to break he had a problem to face. "Nervousness and dizzy spells handicapped me at my work. To straighten up after bending was torture, owing to the violent pain in my back. My appetite was so poor that I often went to work weak, unable to eat my breakfast. And at night I tossed and turned from side to side, too nervous to sleep." These are his own words.

"Night, noon and morning, I had heartburn and gas pains, which kept me in misery, and after a year of those conditions I was quite thin and rundown. Since trying Tanlac, I've put on ten pounds, eat, sleep and feel normally. In fact, I now have the appetite and digestion of a schoolboy and the heaviest day's work doesn't bother me. Running a door cutting machine is now a pleasure instead of the drudgery it used to be. I'll praise and recommend Tanlac as long a live."

Orchard Information

UNADAPTED FRUITS CAUSE HEAVY LOSS

Thousands of dollars are being spent annually in attempts to make fruit trees bear which are unprofitable simply because a given variety is not at home in the particular section where it was planted, according to W. S. Borck, of the pomology division, college of agriculture, University of Illinois. Most of the time and money thus spent is wasted, thus giving at least one incentive to choose varieties carefully, using as a basis the experiments and observations of reliable agencies such as the colleges and the experiment stations, he said.

"The variety is the key to successful fruit growing, but varieties of fruit vary widely in adaptability, both to soil and climate. A variety may thrive on some of the fertile, well-drained soils of western Illinois, but refuse to bear profitable crops when planted on other types of soil in the same latitude. Still other varieties are quite tolerant of poor soil conditions, but need such a long season for proper development that they can be grown only in the South.

"For horticultural purposes, Illinois, for instance, may be taken as consisting of three districts each composing roughly one-third of the latitude covered by the state. Varieties adapted to each district have been tabulated and such variety lists are available for free distribution to residents of the state who request them of the experiment station of the college of agriculture.

"In addition to adaptability, choice of variety depends upon the use for which a fruit plantation is to be planted. A home orchard may consist of many varieties, the ripening season of which should extend from the earliest to the latest. A commercial orchard should have few varieties in order that a large volume of fruit is ready at one time to facilitate economical marketing. Thus a farm apple orchard might contain 20 varieties with only 30 trees, while a commercial orchard of 1,500 trees should have not more than 5 varieties.

"A peach orchard for home use would be incomplete with less than a dozen trees, but a commercial peach orchard of 100 acres will in most cases contain but two varieties.

"The variety question is a local one and no orchard should be planted without considering all of the above questions in addition to securing such information as may be obtained by visiting fruit plantations in the neighborhood."

Peach Growers Advised to Get Rid of Poor Ones

New Jersey peach growers should now be convinced that our old commercial varieties of peaches, with one or two exceptions, no longer meet the present-day requirements for either growers or consumers, yet there are still large numbers of trees of such varieties as Carman, Hiley, and Belle, points out a recent issue of the New Jersey Horticultural Society News.

To quote: "Some of these are young trees in full vigor, while others are old and on the decline. Get rid of the latter as soon as possible.

"New varieties equal to Hale in appearance are in sight. You will want to plant some of them as soon as trees are available. Be ready to give them a fair start.

"The site of an old orchard should be put in shape for a new planting by liberal fertilization and the growing of a crop that will return a large quantity of organic matter to the soil. If an old orchard site can be devoted to other crops for several years, so much the better. Clear the land that is in old, unprofitable varieties of peaches and get ready for better days."

Grafting Pears Is Not Highly Recommended

The pear will grow on the quince and mountain ash as well as on itself and upon the hawthorn. Yet it is dwarted by being grafted upon anything but the pear, and becomes more a novelty than a practical orchard plant. Grafting can be done in early spring just before growth starts, using the common cleft graft. The orchardist will be more successful, however, if a tongue-graft is made during the dormant season, using a piece of hawthorn root about the size of a pencil and a corresponding length of scion wood from the pear. If one enjoys playing with a thing of this kind, go ahead and try it. If, on the other hand, a man is looking for pears, he will do better by purchasing his pear trees from some reliable nursery concern.

Protection for Trees

To protect fruit trees from rabbits, take one gallon of ordinary house paint, add one teacupful of sulphur well stirred in. Dig away two inches of dirt from the base of the tree and let dry for two hours. Apply the mixture with a paint brush. This is a cheap and sure way and will last for two years. Paint two or three feet, or up to the forks, for jackrabbits stand on their hind feet and gnaw as high as they can reach. One man can paint 100 trees per day.

Vaccination for Control of Roup

Scientific Study Made of One of Most Serious Diseases of Fowls.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A scientific study of roup in poultry, one of the most serious fowl diseases, supports the conclusion that proper vaccination is one of the most effective means for reducing this source of loss.

The study was conducted by Dr. George W. Stiles and Dr. Hubert Bunyea, both of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. In a recent scientific paper, "Vaccination and Medication for Control of Roup," Doctor Bunyea reports the following conclusions, based on experiments:

Young Birds Susceptible.

Birds about one year old appear to be more susceptible to roup than those two years old or older under the same conditions.

The use of antiseptics in the drinking water (permanganate of potash, and bichloride of mercury in particular) does not appear to have any appreciable curative virtue and very little preventive property.

The local external application of solutions of mercurochrome or silver nitrate is not very effective in the prevention or treatment of roup.

Prevention of Disease.

Bacterins prepared from the bacteria involved in outbreaks of roup appear to be effective in the prevention of the disease as well as the treatment of incipient cases, even under unfavorable climatic conditions. Two kinds of bacterins have proved effective, one made from bacteria occurring in a single outbreak and one from infections in a number of outbreaks.

The progress of roup is appreciably influenced by "secondary invaders," meaning bacteria which develop in addition to the chief virus that causes the disease. The use of vaccination in treating a considerable number of poultry flocks with roup gave very encouraging results.

Wheat Protein Content of Greater Importance

Protein content has become of increasing importance in determining the price paid for any particular lot of wheat. On occasions when the supply of high protein wheat has been less than the demand, premiums of as much as a cent have been paid for each added tenth of one per cent of protein over a given basic amount.

Protein tests by different chemists often do not agree within one tenth of one per cent even when the ability and conscientiousness of the chemist are beyond question, with the result that numerous complaints are heard regarding the making of protein tests on wheat.

To determine how close different laboratories should be able to report protein results on the same sample of wheat as well as to explain why these variations occur, was the object of investigations reported in Department of Agriculture Bulletin No. 1460-D, "Testing Wheat for Protein with a Recommended Method for Making the Test."

The sources of error which occur in making protein tests have been carefully studied and as a result a standard procedure is recommended to eliminate these errors. Suggestions are given also regarding how close independent laboratories should agree when making protein tests.

A copy of the bulletin may be obtained by writing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Last Call

Leslie Eddy, eight-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Eddy, who live west of the city at the turn of the Tenth street road, was out in the fields Sunday evening with a crowd of city youngsters flying kites. At about seven o'clock the boy sighed.

"What's the matter, Leslie?" the father of one of his playmates asked.

"I guess I don't get any supper tonight," he complained.

"Why not?"

Guardian of the Family

"MY father, who is past 75, shares our bottle of Syrup Pepsin with his little great-granddaughter aged three. And when I feel constipated, with headache and biliousness, I also get my share of Syrup Pepsin. We would as soon think of being without salt and sugar as not to have a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in the house." (Name and address will be furnished upon request.)

Constipation Always a Danger

"Always something," says mother. "Biliousness, sour stomach, headache, colds, fevers—you never know when or what." Syrup Pepsin is mother's safeguard. Sweetens stomach, moves bowels; children recover like magic. No wonder mothers everywhere know and trust Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is the guardian of the family's health. Sweet, sirupy—children and old people love it. Mild, yet thorough in action. Sudden colds, fevers, headache—conditions responsible for nearly all disease—a dose of Syrup Pepsin and all fear is gone. Once in the home every mother says—"I keep it always on hand." Every druggist sells Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Make-up With Airbrush

In some theatrical performances and in the movies, it is often necessary to put a "make-up" on a larger portion of the performer's body. In ordinary manner of procedure, this requires considerable time, but the operation has been recently hastened by the use of an airbrush. The coloring matter is practically sprayed over the surface to be covered and much time is saved.

In forty-five years one man has photographed 4,600 snow crystals, all different.

As One Writer Sees the Typical American

A heavy tread in men, with the weight of the body rolling from one leg to the other; a quick, provocative step in women, an oversureness beaming from face and body. A kind of impersonal appeal—clothes which are good and smart, but which are detached from the person who wears them. I see a hard-faced old matron with a big Paris hat, put on correctly, and dutifully, and an antique cashmere shawl turned into a coat, worn with firmness and decorum, horn-rimmed eye-glasses, self-conscious shoes, and more than all that—the eyes.

American eyes are astoundingly outward-looking. They peer out into the world, seeming to run in advance of the brain behind them. They are often very beautiful in their eagerness and vivacity, but for a European they are almost terrifying; we fathom a touch of insanity in them. Their vigilance is so unrelaxing one feels as if they would never find rest in inward contemplation and never escape the pressure of things by inner seclusion. —O. N. Pisgah, in the Forum.

HANCOCK COUNTY COURT ORDERS

Louden Farm to be Sold

An action was started in the March term of the district court in Hancock County asking the appointment of a referee to partition and divide equitably between the Louden heirs the 217 acre tract of land just at the northeast corner of the town of Klemme. It being impossible to divide the land the court appointed the undersigned as referee to sell this farm at private sale to the best possible advantage of the heirs. This being a forced sale it is probable that the land will sell at an exceedingly favorable price from the standpoint of the buyer. The land is going to be sold. Anyone looking for a real bargain in an A No. 1 Iowa farm close to a good town should get in touch with me at once, at Belmond, Iowa. Phone numbers 386 and 16. BILL SAYS:

"Friend of mine said he wondered why the Electric Company kept on selling Stock and when they would stop. That's easy to answer. The only reason the Company sells this Stock ss to get the money necessary for the improvements and additions to the Power Plants and lines that you and I and other Customers need at our homes and in our business, and just as sooon as these have been provided then the Company will stop selling Stock, so the time for you and I to get in on the 7% Investment is NOW while we can."

ILSON HIGHWAY PAVING HITS SNAG

Y TAKE SOME FIGHT TO PUT OVER PAVING WILSON

pervisor Have Voted To Pave No. 15 Across County

The Times is informed that the ncock County Board of Supervis- last Thursday passed a resolu- to pave the Wilson Highway, or mary Road No. 15 from the ight County line north to the ndary on the Winnebago county e, or approximately 24 miles.

The proposition was then to be mitted to the State Highway mmission for the approval of that and operations would begin.

From this point on we submit to r readers the following story from Garner Leader, Tuesday, May th, as follows:

"County Engineer C. F. Merten been in correspondence with te Highway Engineer F. R. White the matter of paving Wilson high- y across Hancock county.

"We find on file in the county en- eer's office the following letter m Mr. White, in reply to Mr. Mer- 's letter of April 28:

ear Mr. Merten:

"Receipt is acknowledged of your ter of April 28th.

"I note that Hancock county some rs ago voted a bond issue of $1,- 0,000 for improving the primary d system; that $630,000 of these nds have been heretofore issued, ving $370,000 yet to be issued. te that there is some agitation for ving primary road No. 15, using e balance of these bonds therefor.

"Replying to your inquiry as to ether the commission would favor e project and provide the balance the money needed from develop- nt funds or current primary road nds, would say that we note that ere have been heretofor levied in ur county special assessments for ving in the sum of approximately 06,000. Under senate file No. 104 the 42nd general assembly, these ecial assessments are to be refund- within the next five years. Re- nds may be made through the is- ance of primary road bonds.

"Our suggestion with respect to e further issuance of bonds in your unty would be that the first obli- tion against such bond issue should the refunding of these special as- ssments so that the property own- s who were assessed will be at the rliest possible date be repaid the mount of the assessments which ey have paid, and will be relieved this special assessment tax.

"Deducting the $106,000 from the 70,000 of bonds that have not yet en issued, leaves $264,000 bonds at could be issued. If your board ould desire to use this $264,000 in e construction of pavement on road o. 15, I think the commission would willing to approve same, although would probably not be in a posi- on to supplement said bond issue ith any current funds.

"Very truly yours,
F. R. WHITE,
"Chief Engineer."

"After reading Mr. White's letter, would appear to the average read- , that he is not very strong for ving the Wilson highway. He says at "If your board should desire to e this $264,000 in the construc- on of pavement on road No. 15, I ink the commission would be will- g to approve same, although 'it ould probably not be in a position supplement said bond issue with ny current funds.' "

"From current reports circulating this community, it is understood he highway commission has told ighway authorities of Cerro Gordo ounty that "if Worth county would ote bonds to pave Jefferson highway cross Worth county, the highway ommission would advance money rom the primary road fund to pave rom Mason City north to the Worth ounty line."

"This community cannot under- and how it is possible for the high- ay commission to furnish Cerro ordo county with the entire a- mount needed to pave a distance f approximately eight miles, and still are unable to aid Hancock county in the least?

"The Wilson highway is almost an air line from Des Moines to Al- bert Lea, Minn. At Albert Lea the Wilson and Jefferson highways com- bine for a short distance, leaving it to the travelor s choice of routes in going to St. Paul and Minneapolis

"Arrangements are being made for a meeting of the local board of supervisors and a committee of three members from the Commercial club to meet with the highway commiss- ion at an early date."

The Times is of the opinion that it is going to require a stiff fight on the part of those interested in pav- ing this road. Klemme and Goodell should jump into the fray and help out our supervisors in this battle.

If the State Highway Commision is going to cut a mellon, we want a piece of it!

THE NATION'S LIFE GUARD

Whenever disaster on a large scale occurs, such as the floods along the Mississippi during the past weeks, there is at once a sense of relief that the Red Cross, with its far-reaching service, is ready to apply its facilities for the succor of the victims

This humanitarian agency has grown in scope and methods. It has in its personel many who have had extended experience in dealing with the wounded, the sick and homeless in the wake of storms and floods and fires. Its service is doubly valuable because it is quick. The active organiza- tion is capable of meeting all or- dinary calls. These calls, in vary- ing degrees of urgency, are al- most continuous.

The wisdom of maintaining such an organization as the Red Cross is especially impressed as during the recent disastrous floods in the Mississippi Valley. but its value is continuing, its ministrations constantly seen n some part of the world

Teachers All Hired For Fall

Our vacancies have all been filled at this time. The new teachers el- ected are as follows:

For High School Principal, Miss Wilma Trumbell, now of Swaledale.

For Home Economics and other subjects, Miss Lena McGinnes, now of Swaledale

For Manual Arts, and Coaching, Mr Carl Heiden, of Dennison.

For Physics, Agriculture and Or- chestra, Mr Lester Wirth, of Ell- wood, Iowa

For Grades 5 and 6, Miss Bernates Wolle, of Belmond, now at Dows. Raymond is a likeable chap and we

For Grades 3 and 4, Miss Mildred Wheatman, of Decorah, now at the State Teachers College, Cedar Falls.

For Grades 1 and 2, Miss Lenora Wheatman, Decorah, now of Klem- me.

For Superintendent of Schools, M. F Penrod, Pulaski, Iowa, now of Klemme.

Mr. Penrod and Miss Lenora Wheatman are the only two of the past year's teachers to remain in the Klemme schools. The young people who have been elected come very highly recommended and we beleive they may be very much appreciated. They will hardly be expected to ex- cell in work and esteem those whose places they are to fill, for we have had this year a splendid group of teachers.

Baccalaureate Sermon Sunday

On Sunday evening, May 15, our Baccalaureate Services will be held at the local Methodist Church. Rev. Lease of Algona will preach the ser- mon. Special music is being pre- pared for the occasion. Services will begin at 8:00 o'clock.

Commencement Next Thursday

On Thursday night of next week, May 19th will occur the Commence- ment or Graduation Exercises. Atty Jas. B. Weaver, one of Des Moines best known lawyers, will give the address. There will be special mus- ic and a class of eleven to receive diplomas.

Klemme Defeats Goodell Nine

Our base ball boys on Wednesday evening avenged the defeat suffered at the hands of Goodell players last week by defeating them 2 to 0, shutting them clear out.

Stokesbary and Turgasen shared time on the mound and both were in good form for the occasion.

Class Play Went Over Big

The play given on both Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week was well attended and pro- nounced a decided success. It s a play being staged in some of the larger places and has been well worth the best efforts of the best players.

We appreciate the splendid pat- ronage given the school at this play. It will serve to lessen the gradua- tion expenses of our Seniors which is no small item these days of "h. c. of l."

County Track Meet At Britt

The County Track Meet will be staged as usual at the Fair Grounds at Britt, and on Saturday of this week.

Mr. Hockey and the Superinten- dent expects to attend, although no one from the Klemme high school will participate in any of the events.

Big Doings At Ames This Week

Some of our school will attend Veishea, the annual show staged by the several colleges at Ames, this week end. The program is planned especially for high school Seniors of Iowa to show them what our State College there has to offer them in the way of courses.

There will be parades, ball games, track events, exhibitions in swim- ming, and Ray Conger the famous miler will race Alva Martin, famous half miler of Chicago in a special 1,000 yard race.

J. BOCK LEADS IN HANCOCK NO. 3

REPORT OF HANCOCK NO. 3 COW TEST ASSOCIATION FOR APRIL

V. A. Cook, Of Goodell, Had High Cow For The Month

The Hancock No. 3 Cow Testing Association has been reorganized and twenty-one members started the year beginning April 1st It was found in the last month of the o'd year, March, after the cows had been culled out and tested for the year, that out of 26 members, 339 cows were on test. The association average, based on the 287 cows in milk and 32 dry, was 693 pounds of milk and 25 9 pounds of butterfat. After reorganizing several members dropped out and several new mem- bers joined, therefore the associa- tion average was lowered for the month of April. The 272 cows n test, 229 in milk and 43 dry, aver- aged 608.6 pounds of milk and 22.3 pounds of butterfat.

In March there were 59 cows that produced over 40 pounds of butter- fat, and 26 over 50 pounds, while in April 47 produced over 40 pounds of fat and 8 over 50 pounds. In April 43 of the 47 cows that produced ov- er 40 pounds of fat and all of the 50 pound cows were owned by the ten old members.

The ten old members total of 124 cows for the month of April aver- aged 733 pounds of milk and 28 03 pounds of butterfat. The eleven new members total of 148 cows av- eraged 503 8 pounds milk and 18.08 pounds of fat. These comparisons show that cow test work has been put across in the past year in this association.

The high herd for April is owned by John Bock, of Klemme. His ten cows in milk and one dry, averaged 1091.4 pounds of milk and 40.1 pounds of fat. The following herds averaged over 30 pounds of butter- fat: V. A. Cook, Goodell, R. W. El- der, Klemme, Ben Goll, Garner, M. W. Sprole, Garner.

V. A. Cook, of Goodell, had the high cow for the month. His grade Holstein cow, "Granny," producing 2114 pounds of milk and 74 pounds of fat, on twice a day milking. This cow has been fresh since October 10th.

The annual yearly report of this association will be in a later issue

Raymond Schuldt In Hospital

We regret to learn that Raymond Schuldt has grown worse and has had to be taken to Mason City for an operation. He is reported to be in a very critical condition. Ray- mond was to have completed his ele- mentary school course this year and been ready for high school next year. If he recovers sufficiently some way may be found to get him up with his class and ready next fall to enroll in the Ninth Grade. Raymond s a likeable chap and we very much regret this misfortune that has come to him.

May Have School Picnic

Our Board has again approved of a Community Picnic and will pro- vide the ice cream for the affair if there is a demand for such a picnic. We believe this picnic should be made an annual affair, and that ev- ery one should get together on that date and get acquainted. We shall try to get a ball game and have some contests and with the splendid dinner we know the mothers and friends of the school will prepare everyone should enjoy the day.

Other announcements will be made through the school at a later date.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY

Cleanliness is conducive to both health and beauty and nei- ther can be attained without it. Civic cleanliness should be a matter of pride and a little ef- fort on the part of each individual would go far toward making Klemme one of the most attrac- tive towns in Iowa.

There is no possible ground for controversy in cleaning up. No one can go wrong on being clean. A few quarts of paint and the free use of soap and water will trans- form many eyesores and enhance the value of any building.

SCHOOL CLOSED IN LIBERTY NO. 5 WITH PROGRAM

Liberty township District No. 5 School, of which Miss Meta Lemke is the teacher, closed Friday with a program in the evening given by the school children. Music was fur- nished as a part of the program and entertainment was provided by Bill Houdek and Fred Pannhoff, both young men of that community. A large crowd was present and all re- ported a very good time. Ice cream and cake was served as a refresh- ment following the program.

CORN CLUB BEING ORGANIZED IN HANCOCK COUNTY

The Farm Bureau of Hancock County has added the boys and girls Corn Club to its 4-H club rogram. This makes five different clubs that are being promoted for the boys and girls. They are the Home Furnish- ing, Baby Beef, Dairy Heifer, Mar- ket Pig and the Corn Club.

The Corn Club is being organized in the vicinity of Corwith and is still open for membership. Each member will grow an acre of corn and the yield will be determined at harvesting time and the winner be named on the basis of yield per acre based on No. 3 corn. Special lass- es will be made at the Hancock County Fair for this club as well as other 4-H clubs.

SEE AMES IN JUNE

THOUSANDS WILL TOUR TO COL- LEGE AT AMES

Farm Folk of 25 Counties to Make Inspection Of State College

Farm folk from 25 of teh 99 coun- ties of Iowa have completed ar- rangements for tours during the summer to Iowa State College, at Ames, where they will be given an opportunity to see the college, ex- periment station and to learn of the work being carried on there. Prac- tically all of the delegations will be under the direction of county farm bureaus.

The counties so far scheduled for tours and the respective dates are: June 8, Bremer; June 10, Greene June 11, Calhoun; Jun e14, Wright; June 15, Cerro Gordo and Union; June 16, Webster; June 18, Winne- bago and Pocahontas; June 20, Mad- ison and Butler; June 21, Grundy; June 22, Sac and Palo Alto; June 23, Tama; June 24, Marshall, June 25, Hardin; June 27, Hancock and Delaware, June 28, Guthrie; June 29, Woodbury; June 30, Jasper; July 15, Wayne; Aug. 20, Hamil- ton and Sept. 15, Poweshiek.

Last year 34 county delegations of farm people visited the college, av- eraging about 275 per group, which made a total of approximately 9,- 000 people.

While all of the counties last year came by auto, several of the more distant ones this year are investi- gating the possibility of excursions on the railroads.

Careful programs are being ar- ranged at the college so that both farm men and women may have an opportunity to see the things of greatest interest to them.

First Time

The man who does any thing for the "first time" is always looked up- on as being either foolish or dang- erous. Pioneers suffer ridicule at the hands of the people who believe in safety first, and leaders are a- bused by folks who will not follow, and have no ability to lead.

HANCOCK COUNTY FAIR DATES SET

HANCOCK COUNTY FAIR DATES SEPTEMBER 13-14-15-16

Will Put On Benefit Celebration At Britt, July 4th

The dates of the Hancock County Fair have been set for Sept. 13 to 16th. Plans are being made for a big show. The boys and girls club show will be bigger than ever be- fore this year and will be one of the main features of the exhibits. Plenty of attractions and entertainments will be given. Some have already been hired.

The Fair Board are also planning to put on a big elebration on July 4th. This is done to raise money to help defray expenses of the fair. A good program is being arranged for this celebration and a large at- tendance is being expected.

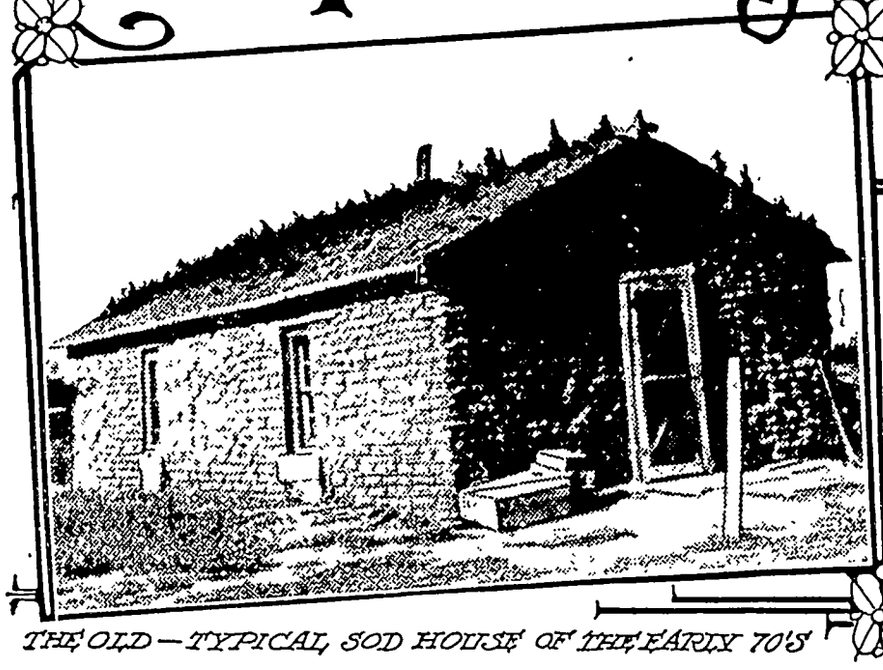
The Passing of the "Soddy"



THE OLD—TYPICAL SOD HOUSE OF THE EARLY 70'S

THE NEW—FARM HOME OF MR. AND MRS. JOHN F. JOHNSON, MACON, NEBR.

By KARL L. SPENCE
Editor, Franklin (Neb.) News.

FIFTY-SIX years ago this spring the first settlers commenced arriving in central Nebraska, bent upon permanent settlement, with the expectation of making homes for themselves and their families. Passing up the opportunity of securing the rich bottom lands along the Republican river, the first settlers went back from the river a few miles and settled along the different creeks, which were heavily timbered, and had an abundance of fine spring water. The fuel bill was also solved here, as the new settler had plenty of timber for wood, and posts for his fencing. These first settlers were able to build log houses or dugouts, which were log houses built in the banks of the draws or along the streams, the lower story being dug out of the bank and the house built over it.

During the years of 1871, '72 and '73 nearly all of these desirable homesteads were taken up, the settlements running up the streams north from the Republican river for a distance of several miles, with the intervening lands left vacant for a few years. As these lands were well grassed, the settlers along the creeks were able to use them for pasture as all unoccupied lands were owned by the government and were free range.

One or two portable sawmills were brought into the country and for a time native lumber, sawed from cottonwood and elm trees, was available, but at its best this lumber was not very satisfactory, as it was liable to buckle, warp and twist into many fantastic shapes while curing in the sun. Many of the first houses were built from this lumber and one can still find a few of these pioneer dwellings in this section of Nebraska.

Beatrice, for a time, was the closest railroad point and this was a matter of several days' journey coming and going with the slow ox teams of the pioneer period. Most of these journeys were made to secure flour, coffee, sugar, tobacco and other necessities needed by the pioneers. Usually the load taken by the pioneer to Beatrice was buffalo hides which he bartered for the things needed in the home. Later the railroad was extended to Lowell and the trip was made to that place in much less time and the pioneer was then able to take a load of grain to exchange for his groceries and clothing.

The Rush Into the West

And so we come to the time when the rich prairie lands, which contained no timber, were all that was left for the homesteader. And they came in swarms, as this was the period in our history immediately following the Civil war, when thousands and hundreds of thousands of young men, virile and full of hope for the future, were striking out to make homes for themselves. It was a new country, money was scarce, and many of the settlers did not see enough money to buy a sack of corn meal from one year's end to another. Trade, such as it was, was carried on by barter. A man traded what he had a surplus of to his neighbor or the small pioneer storekeeper, for what he absolutely had to have. He raised his own corn for corn meal, his wheat for flour, and these he took to the mill, often on horseback, the grain being tied behind the saddle in a bag. Here he waited until it was ground into meal or flour and paid the miller a share of the finished product for the grinding, the balance being taken home in the same sack the grain was brought to the mill in. The prairie homesteader had no timber to build himself a log cabin, and no money to buy the lumber or logs, so that it was up to him to provide a substitute. He did this by building a "soddy." First selecting a likely site for his new home, he took a team of oxen and hitched them to a breaking plow that is peculiar to the prairie regions. Instead of a solid plowshare this plow has a share of heavy rods, which does the same work as a solid share without causing the friction that it does. Setting his plow to a depth of about three inches, he plowed a long straight furrow as near to the location of his soddy as he could, so that he would not have the labor of moving the sod any great distance. This sod was impregnated with fibrous roots of the grasses and prairie plants so that it held together remarkably well. Strips of sod a foot wide and three feet long are then brought to the site of the new house and the building begins. After the dimensions of the house have been decided upon, the ground is smoothed off so that a space is left for the walls, which will be two feet or more in thickness. The growing grass is left on the sod and this forms the chinks between the layers, so that it is not necessary to chink up the spaces between the layers of sod. The walls are built up to a height of seven or eight feet, openings being left for the windows and doors which are recessed into the walls for a distance of a foot or more. Many of the first soddys did not have glass for the windows, but instead used oiled paper or muslin for lights.

Setting the Ridgepole

After the walls were completed a ridgepole was secured, usually being a native tree, with other smaller trees or branches to be used for rafters or supporters. Over this brush was thrown and then a layer of prairie hay or straw, after which the roof of sod was put on, the layers being leveled off and chinked up so that not a drop of water enters and the structure drains perfectly. Doors and windows are then made by the homesteader from native lumber or perhaps from the boxes he brought with him in his overland journey to his new home.

The soddy is now ready for the homesteader and his family to live in, though in many instances to make it more attractive, a coat of whitewash is given the inside walls, which has been made from native lime, which he secures from the hills along the river and burns himself. Most of the pioneer soddys had no wood floors, the floors being made of clay which was dampened and tamped down until it was smooth and even. The furniture of the pioneer soddy was very primitive and except for a few pieces brought by the homesteader when he first came to the new country, had been made by himself. The beds, tables, chairs and what few other pieces of furniture he possesses show his handiwork. The roof of the soddy, being made of dirt as it is, usually presents a drab appearance, as does the whole building, but in many cases the homesteader or his wife has gone to a great deal of trouble to beautify the humble home which they have builded, and often you see a gorgeous flaming cactus, or perhaps a number of wild sunflowers bravely blooming on top of the soddy, where they have been carefully planted and nurtured by the family. Occasionally the whole top of the soddy will be a mass of bloom from a bed of portulaca or rose moss, which requires little attention and will bloom in the hottest and driest weather, in fact it seems to do its best under the most adverse conditions. Morning glories shade the windows, while beds of petunias, bachelor's buttons, zinnias and other gay-colored flowers make a bright spot about the soddy. Nearly the first thing that the new owner did after completing his sod house was to plant a small grove of trees which he cared for tenderly during the many dry spells and which have made a noble monument to him in his after-years.

The roof of the soddy, being built as it was from brush, straw and sod, made a fine home for many different kinds of rodents and snakes and often the pioneer looked up during the warmth of the evening to see a rattler or a giant bullsnake coiled around the rafter of his dwelling and stories are told of the packrats that came during the absence of the family and carried off the food store as well as other bright objects which attracted their attention, which they stored away in some convenient cache. One pioneer tells the story of how he spent the night once with a neighbor. When night came on, the homesteader's wife placed the jars of milk on the floor in the room, where he was expected to sleep, in order to keep the milk cool. Just as daybreak came a mother skunk with seven or eight babies came through a hole in the wall of the soddy and they all had a nice breakfast of fresh milk. The visitor, fearing that the mother skunk would resent his presence, wisely kept still and allowed the early morning visitors to depart in peace.

A Refuge in Time of Storm

With walls two feet thick and a roof from eight inches to a foot thick the soddy made a fine home for the pioneer family, being warm in winter and cool in summer. Fuel was scarce and the pioneer had to depend upon cow "chips" for fuel. Ice in summer was unknown, and this finally led to the building of caves or outside cellars, where the perishable vegetables, milk and canned goods were kept. This cave was also used by the pioneer family, who took refuge in it when tornadoes threatened.

Water on the prairie was hard to secure and wells were put down, being dug by hand, sometimes to a depth of 250 feet. The pioneer well-digger had a dangerous job and many a well has cost the life of a man before being completed. Later wells bored by machinery and tubular wells were put down and most of these were equipped with windmills, so that the back-breaking labor of pumping water for household use and for live stock has been done away with and large tanks are provided for storage during the occasional spells when the wind does not blow.

The average soddy contained one or two rooms, though occasionally some well-to-do homesteader had a soddy containing four or five rooms, but usually when the homesteader was able to build such a house he would build from lumber which he freighted in by ox-team from a long distance. Many of these larger soddys had wooden floors and these houses were the meeting places for parties and dances among the pioneers. The first school houses and first churches were built of sod and many of the native sons and daughters secured their first rudiments in the three R.'s while attending school in a sod school house.

A Menu of Wild Fruit

The pioneer family lacked variety in their menu, but this was overcome to a certain extent by the homesteader's wife, who canned and dried the wild fruits which grew along the numerous streams in abundance in nearly every section of the country, as well as choke-cherries, and in different localities there were black and red raspberries, gooseberries, sand cherries and black currants, which grew wild. The family usually took a day off each year when these fruits were ripe to pick a supply for canning. The plant known as the buffalo bean also furnished the makings for pies, and while rather insipid in taste, was used by the homesteader when nothing better could be secured, and make a dish quite nourishing.

The outbuildings on the new home of the homesteader who lived in a soddy, were nothing more substantial than a leanto shed against some bank or a shed made of poles and covered with straw or hay. Usually by spring this had great holes eaten into it by the stock and during the summer months was little else save a roof and the framework of poles.

In the early days of settlement fierce storms raged during the winter. Blizzards, driven by high winds, swept over the prairies, and while the homesteader and his family, living within the two-foot thick walls of his soddy, was immune from their blasts, as long as the food and fuel lasted, his live stock, which was housed in flimsy structures, often suffered from the cold and snow. One pioneer tells us of a snow and windstorm which kept up continually for three days. He had a team of mules tied to the manger in a shed barn which was built of boards running up and down, with a good-sized crack between each board. When the storm ended it was found that the mules were still tied up, but all that could be seen of them was their ears and the tips of their noses. They were in a solid cake of snow and had to be dug out before they could move. At that time there were thousands upon thousands of acres of lands that had no trees on them, but these storms have greatly diminished since windbreaks of trees and groups of buildings dot every quarter section of land.

Abundance of Wild Game

A milk cow, a pig or two and a small flock of chickens helped to provide the living of the pioneer family, but these chickens had to be jealously watched by the household to keep the prowling coyote and the watchful hawk, who were always on the watch, at a safe distance. Besides this domestic supply of meat, the early settler depended much upon his gun to provide meat for his table, as the prairies teemed with bison, antelope, deer, wild turkey, sage hens, prairie chickens and many other varieties of wild game. In spring and autumn the annual migrations of the ducks and geese made a welcome variety to the family larder and the homesteader could secure meat for his table in a very short time.

Many homesteaders became discouraged before proving up on their claims, others stayed long enough to prove up and then left, selling their land for a song or letting it go back for taxes. One homesteader, whose name is unknown, in leaving his homestead, after finally proving up, writes the following dirge:

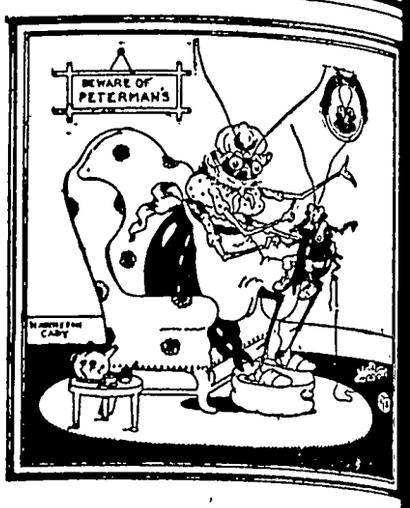
FAREWELL TO MY HOMESTEAD SHANTY

Farewell to my homestead shanty;
I have my final proof;
The cattle will hook down the walls,
And some one will steal the roof.
Farewell to my sheetiron stove
That stands in the corner all cold;
The good things I have baked in the oven
In language can never be told.
Farewell to my cracker-box cupboard,
With gunny sack for a door;
Farewell to my store of good things
That I shall never want any more.
Farewell to my little pine bedstead,
'Tis on thee I slumbered and slept;
Farewell to the dreams that I dreamt,
While the fleas all over me crept.
Farewell to my down-holstered chair,
With bottom sagged down to the ground;
Farewell to the socks, shirts and breeches
That fill it again to the ground.
Farewell to my nice little table,
Where under I have oft put my feet,
Then chose from the bounty of good things
The substantials of life for to eat.
Farewell to my sour dough pancakes
That none but myself could endure;
If they did not taste good to a stranger
They were sure the dyspepsia to cure.
Farewell to my tea and my crackers;
Farewell to my water and soap;
Farewell to my sorghum and buckwheat;
Farewell to soddy and hope.

A virgin soil, undaunted courage, youth and a spirit of home-making were sure to win for the pioneer homesteader and his little dirt soddy was soon changed to a modern home with the comforts that his pioneer fathers had never dreamed of, and today we find that while the old soddy has passed into the beyond, back to the dust from which it came, it has left a well-settled country of prosperous farmers who have builded for permanence and the future. His trees, planted and tended with such tender care, have grown into great groves which shade thousands of acres of ground and provide a fitting resting place for himself in his old age and for the generations which are to come. He builded wisely and well. His work has borne fruit beyond the imagination of the men of his time. Where once stood the lowly soddy with the straw covered sheds for the live stock, now stands the modern Nebraska farm home with modern outbuildings surrounding it. Instead of the slow and steady team of oxen, the farmer now has his automobiles, his tractors and labor-saving machinery of various kinds, so that one man working half the time that he used to can now produce twice as much grain by his labor. Where once were trails, are now great graveled highways that are covered daily by hundreds of automobiles going at the rate of thirty or more miles per hour, where once that distance would have been considered a big day's driving. Through the coming of the pioneer settlers Nebraska has developed into a great commonwealth with a population of more than a million and a half.

"Beware, my son, beware!"

"Stay away from Peterman's! It has killed your whole family!"



"DON'T walk through it. Don't smell it. Don't touch it. Go hungry for days first."

She's right. Peterman's Roach Food exterminates every roach in your house. Nothing is left but a little dry dust.

Some housewives make the mistake of fighting cockroaches with a spray. Those are the houses roaches stay in. They live down behind baseboards, under the floors. No spray can possibly reach them, or their young, or their eggs.

Only a powder can exterminate them. Peterman's Roach Food is the right powder. Just one roach gets a little powder on his legs. Back to his nest he goes. He crawls over the others and eggs. Every roach he touches dies and disintegrates.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

PETERMAN'S ROACH FOOD exterminates cockroaches.
PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD exterminates ants.
FLYOSAN kills flies and mosquitoes.
PETERMAN'S DISCOVERY exterminates bedbugs.
PETERMAN'S MOTH FOOD protects against moths.

You must have a specific insecticide for each insect. No single insecticide will exterminate them all. We know that is true. We have had nearly 50 years' experience.

Peterman's has the right insecticide for each insect. On sale wherever drugs are sold.

Bees Saved a Missionary

While Cantonese soldiers were looting the home of Doctor Macklin, American missionary, they found behind the house a number of mysterious white boxes which they believed contained valuables. They broke them open with butts of their rifles. The boxes were beehives, and their signal was "repel invaders." "Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the bowel muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never grip sickens, or upsets the system. Besi it is absolutely harmless and pleas to take.

Time-Saving Way of Tinting

(Copyright 1927)

For perfect tinting of dainty underwear, dresses, etc., the easiest way—and by far the best way—is the use of real dye. It tints in cold water, you know; just dip the garment and it takes whatever tinge you wish to give it. A matter of minutes.

Real dyes will get such smooth and even tones as shame the streaky, fishy-washy work of synthetic preparations for the purpose! Diamond dye in original powder form is only fifteen cents at the drug store. Do your own diluting. Then dip to tint—and you'll have an effect that's beautiful. And if you want the tint permanent, just use boiling water!

Diamond dyes do a perfect, "professional" job of dyeing, too; the druggist has sample shades and simple directions. For a book of endless suggestions, in full color, request a free copy of Color Craft of DIAMOND DYES, Dept N32, Burlington, Vermont.

Von Moltke

"SIRE," said Napoleon III's minister of war, "all is in absolute readiness for the Prussian campaign, down to the last button on the last gaiter of the last soldier."

Now, this was one of the most monumental lies ever uttered.

Napoleon III was well aware that Europe distrusted him. He knew the French were naturally restless, that they had had a long era of military glory, and that a few years of humdrum peace might lead them to weary of him. So he went on the principle that a war every four years would keep them content, swell France's martial renown and make safe his own crown.

In the first decade of the Nineteenth century Napoleon the Great had crushed Prussia to the dust and humiliated her king. The son of that king was on the Prussian throne in 1870 and the great Napoleon's nephew ruled France.

Bismarck, Von Moltke and other Prussian statesmen had foreseen trouble with France and were well prepared for it, even if they did not (as many think) secretly bring about the conflict. France, on the other hand, was totally unready for any such clash. Prussia's revenge for the sixty-year-old injuries was at hand. The overt occasion of the Franco-Prussian war was as follows:

Queen Isabella of Spain was deposed. The Spanish crown was offered to Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern, a relative to King William of Prussia. Napoleon III at once declared that such selection would destroy the "balance of power" and leave France exposed to Prussian attack on east and south. He therefore demanded that Leopold's candidature be withdrawn. King William meekly obeyed. Utterly deceived by such submission, Napoleon went a step further and demanded a pledge from William that no Prussian prince should ever sit on the Spanish throne. William promptly refused to grant so absurd a request and publicly snubbed the ambassador who transmitted it. This was such an excuse as Napoleon had longed for. France at once declared war on Prussia (July 19, 1870) and rushed a body of troops to the German frontier.

So far, so good. But, owing to graft and incompetency, France's army was in wretched condition. Yet France went mad with patriotic zeal. The feats of the first Napoleon against Prussia were recalled. Everyone expected a triumphal march to the Prussian capital. The cry "On to Berlin!" was on all lips.

In contrast to this, Prussia's troops were in splendid preparation. The north and south German states (on many of which Napoleon III had been told he might rely for neutrality or even aid) unanimously joined Prussia, sinking internecine grievances in a common cause; 477,000 men were mustered, as against France's 310,000. The German forces were divided into three armies, which at a signal crept unchecked across the Rhine like a huge three-headed snake, preceded by a cloud of Uhlans, sweeping all before them and striking at France's very heart. King William was commander in chief, with Marshal von Moltke, the peerless tactician, as his chief of staff. The French armies, commanded by Napoleon III in person, made Metz their headquarters.

On August 2, part of Napoleon's northern army drove a handful of Prussians out of the town of Saarbruck. But thereafter Prussia acted ever on the offensive. The French, individually, fought like heroes, but they were no match for their stronger foes. In two armies France's incompetently commanded, ill-equipped forces were hurled back and prevented from uniting. One of these armies was led by Bazaine, former conqueror of Mexico; the other by MacMahon, afterwards president of France. Bazaine was successively beaten at Courcelles, Mars-la-Tour and Gravelotte (August 14, 16 and 18) and was penned up in the city of Metz. MacMahon moved forward to aid him, but on September 1, was surrounded at Sedan, and next day was forced to surrender with forty generals, 4,000 lesser officers and 84,000 men.

Napoleon III, who was with MacMahon's army, was also captured and packed off a prisoner to a German fortress. At news of his capture and the disgraceful failure of French arms rage and mortification seized all France. Napoleon was deposed; his wife and son were compelled to flee secretly to England; and, September 4, a republic was proclaimed.

On September 19, the Germans besieged Paris. On September 28 Bazaine surrendered at Metz. The latter city, snatched from Germany in the days of Charles V, once more was held by its original masters. Paris fell after a long and gallant siege; armies sent to relieve it were beaten. France was at Prussia's mercy. On March 1, 1871, the victorious Germans entered Paris; passing through the mighty Arc de Triomphe, which had been erected to commemorate the martial triumphs of France; thus adding a climax to perhaps the grimmest irony in the annals of warfare.

The provinces of Alsace and Lorraine and an indemnity of $1,000,000,000 were exacted by the conquerors—a fairly cheap fee for curing France of Napoleonism!

Improvement of the Dairy Herd

Better Feeding, Rigid Culling and Intelligent Breeding Are Factors.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Three ways of improving the dairy herd—better feeding, rigid culling, and intelligent breeding—were emphasized by J. C. McDowell, dairy husbandman of the United States Department of Agriculture, in a talk at the recent farmers' week at Orono, Maine.

Ways of Improving.

"Better feeding of the cows we now have," he said, "increases average production, increases total production, and usually increases net profits. Rigid culling out of low producers increases average production, decreases total production, and nearly always increases net profits. The use of better dairy sires eventually increases average production, increases total production and, I believe I may safety say, with proper management always increases net profits.

"All dairy herd improvement due to better breeding tends to increase profits to the producer and to decrease costs to the consumer. It is one of the ways by which the world may become richer without decreasing the prosperity of any individual. Therefore, as I see it, the breeders of good pure-bred dairy cattle are among the world's greatest benefactors.

"It is a common practice to select dairy bulls on their appearance and their pedigree. The day is coming when dairy bulls will be selected on appearance, pedigree, and progeny. The production records of a large number of daughters of a dairy bull when compared with the production records of their dams determine the breeding value of the bull as certainly as the records show the producing ability of the cows themselves.

Record of Dam.

"If a sire has a high producing dam he may transmit high production to his daughters, but if he has already transmitted high production to every one of his first five or ten daughters it is a practical certainty, not that he may, but that he will transmit high production of an average to all his offspring. The record of the dam of any dairy sire is a promise, but the record of a large number of high-producing daughters is the fulfillment of that promise."

Eliminate Fly Breeding Places to Save Trouble

Eliminating the breeding places for flies is one of the best means of lessening the troubles which this pest will cause the stockman later in the season. To prevent flies from breeding we should turn our attention to their breeding places which are manure piles, outhouses, garbage cans and any other places where fifth is allowed to accumulate. Outhouses should be properly protected, garbage cans and slop pails covered.

Hauling manure to the fields as it accumulates will not only save a lot of fertility that would otherwise be lost, but it will also prevent the manure piles from becoming breeding places for flies. If it is impossible to haul the manure direct to the fields it is possible to treat it and kill most of the maggots and prevent many of the eggs from hatching. The government recommends the use of one-half pound of hellebore to ten gallons of water. Allow this to stand for 24 hours and then sprinkle it over the manure at the rate of ten gallons for every ten cubic feet of manure.

Find Cocklebur Sprouts Poisonous to Animals

A warning has recently been issued by A. A. Hansen, weed expert of Purdue university, to the effect that cocklebur sprouts are poisonous to sheep, young cattle, and particularly to hogs. On a farm near Connersville 36 hogs died within a few hours from this cause. Farmers are advised to keep animals off of cocklebur-infested land until the sprouts are at least four inches high, since they seem to lose their toxic properties after they reach this size. Symptoms of this poisoning are depression, nausea and vomiting. Rich cream seems to counteract the effect of the poison, if given during the early stages of the trouble.

Agricultural Notes

Dairymen who buy feed in small quantities at retail and sell milk at wholesale can never make money.

Implements are high-priced, of course, but one pays an even higher price by trying to work with worn-out machinery or makeshifts.

A good family garden should contain at least twenty-five different vegetables, including several varieties for greens or salads.

Clip sweet clover high enough to leave a number of green leaves on the stubble, or it will be killed. It is usually unsafe to clip later than the last of May.

* * *

When a sow farrows she should be given only a limited amount of litter and the pen should have guard rails around the sides about eight or ten inches from the floor to protect the pigs when she lies down.

Modern preference finds its choice in Camel

PRESENT-DAY taste singles out Camel as its ideal cigarette. This age is the most exacting ever known and it rates Camel first. Camel taste and fragrance come from the choicest tobaccos grown. They lead to supreme smoking pleasure.

You'll never find a higher standard of goodness than in this favorite cigarette. Your own enjoyment will confirm the overwhelming choice of modern smokers.

At Least Hoped to Save His Carriage

Charlie Chaplin in an interview in New York told some stories about mercenary, grasping women.

"And then there was Rachel"—so one of his stories ran—"Rachel, you know, the great French actress. As far as grasping goes, Rachel would be hard to beat even today.

"Rachel dined one night with the rich Count Duchatel. There was a magnificent silver epergne in the middle of the table and she persuaded the count to present it to her. Afterward, to save cab fare and to be sure that the count wouldn't change his mind about the epergne, she got him to send her home with it in his own carriage.

"'The priceless epergne,' she said, 'will be safer this way than in a public cab.'

"'Yes, yes, quite so,' said the count, with a rather nasty laugh, as he escorted her across the sidewalk—for he knew he'd been done. 'But you'll be sure to send me back my carriage, won't you?'"

Causes and Cures of Children's Colds

A child too heavily clothed is as much exposed to cold as one underdressed, warns Dr. Russell L. Cecil of Cornell university medical school. That's because too many clothes bring excessive perspiration once the child is indoors, followed by a rapid cooling equivalent to exposure in chilled air.

Other causes of colds often overlooked by parents, he writes in "Children, the Magazine for Parents," are indigestion and constipation, caused by poor diet and lack of exercise; overheated rooms where dry air lays bare the mucous membrane; diseased tonsils and adenoids, and infected sinuses which carry the cold bacteria dormant until the next opportunity for infection arrives.

Hot baths, hot drinks, simple diet and mild laxatives all are effective in treatment, he says, but the essential point, often ignored, is complete rest, allowing the body to use its whole strength in throwing off the infection.

Force of Habit

"What ground have you for thinking that Blank, the editor, was formerly a stenographer?"

"He returned one of my manuscripts the other day with a written note: 'Rejected but not read.'"—Boston Transcript.

An old man thinks of his yesterdays, a middle-aged man of today, a young man of "this evening."

Rose to Fame, but Had Unhappy Life

William Cowper, the English poet, who died a century and a quarter ago, had some unfortunate experiences in his illustrious career. His mother died when William was six years old, and he was placed in a boarding school.

The homesick boy was oppressed to such an extent that his health failed and he was taken home. That experience made him a bitter opponent of the educational system prevailing in England in his day. Cowper also was unfortunate in a love affair because of the opposition presented by the girl's father.

The girl was Cowper's cousin, and this and other considerations caused Ashly Cowper to decline to sanction the marriage of his daughter, Theodora, to William. The tradition is that to obey this injunction the young people sacrificed their happiness and never saw each other again.—Kansas City Star.

Must Be Healthy Spot

In the parish of Pouilly-sous-Charlerol, France—a place of about 2,000 inhabitants—was recently celebrated an unusual event during which the village church was filled by a still more unusual congregation.

The event was the celebration of the one-hundredth birthday of one of the women parishioners. She was escorted to the foot of the altar by a group of thirty-four of her friends, not one of whom was under eighty years of age.

SPRAY FOR LEAF ROLLER SOON

Lead or Calcium Arsenate Will Put Check On Strawberry Pest

Strawberry pest control measures are used for the primary purpose of controlling one main pest, the strawberry leaf roller, according to Dr. B. B Fulton of the Entomology Department, Iowa State College, Ames.

A dust or spray for the control of the leaf roller should be applied just before the first blossoms appear and a second just after the first blossoms close Dr. Fulton recommends either lead arsenate or calcium arsenate. For a spray, he recommends 1½ pounds of lead arsenate to 50 gallons of solution. For dusting he suggests 1 part of lead arsenate o 10 parts of hydrated lime or 1 part of calcium arsenate to 20 parts of hydrated lime.

"Dusting is probably more advisable on the small patch of berries,' Dr. Fulton says, "because dust is easily applied and it gets into the curled or rolled leaves better than spray. However, spray sticks better than dust. Because of this difficulty the dust poison should be applied early in the morning, while the dew is still on the leaves."

As an added control measure Dr. Fulton recommends burning the patch over late in the fall, during a dry, slightly windy day, or burning extremely early in the spring, before the plants start growth.

THIRD SERIES OF CORN MEETINGS HELD LAST WEEK

The third series of corn meetings in connection with the Farm Bureau Corn Project were held in the county during the past week. Nine meetings were held in as many different parts of the county.

These meetings dealt with rodents and insects injurious to corn. Mr. F. G. Churchill of the Extension Service assisted in this campaign. At the afternoon meetings, demonstrations on the control of rats and ground squirrels were given. Cyanogas was used in this demonstration and was very successful. In one place over 100 rats were killed. At the evening meetings, a film on the European Corn Borer was shown. Due to the busy season, the attendance at these meetings was small. Those who did attend got much good information in regard to corn insects and their control.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Kellogg Curtly Refuses to Discuss Mellon Letter With England.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHEN Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in a recent letter to President Hibben of Princeton university stated that "all our principal debtors are already receiving from Germany more than enough to pay their debts to the United States," there was immediate protest in England against the accuracy of the statement in so far as it applied to Great Britain. Chancellor of the Exchequer Churchill and others made heated speeches, but it was not supposed that the government would take formal notice of the matter. Last week, however, Washington was surprised to receive from Great Britain a long note attacking Mr. Mellon's letter and asking that the United States government "take steps to remove the unfortunate impression that has been created by the issue of this statement."

Secretary of State Kellogg conferred with President Coolidge and others and then handed to the British ambassador this decidedly curt reply:

"The government of the United States regards the correspondence between Mr. Mellon and Mr. Hibben as a purely domestic discussion and does not desire to engage in any formal diplomatic exchanges upon the subject."

Mr. Mellon, believing the attacks in the British note should not go unanswered, gave out a statement justifying and explaining at length the position he has taken in the discussion.

Diplomatic circles in London were as much surprised by the British note as was Washington. In government opposition circles there was an inclination to suspect that the note was meant largely for home consumption and for the benefit of the Conservative party, which has difficulty in explaining the budget deficit.

AMERICAN correspondents in Geneva say that the underlying idea of all delegations (except the American) at the League of Nations economic conference which opened last week is that the most practical step toward world reconstruction and general prosperity would be the cancellation of all war debts and reparations. Some of them also had schemes for the limitation of production of wheat, corn, cotton, copper and other goods, chiefly produced in the United States. The American delegates, headed by Henry M. Robinson of Los Angeles, were primed to meet all such suggestions. Soviet Russia, having settled her quarrel with Switzerland, sent a bunch of economists led by Valerian Ossinski. That gentleman said they would submit "concrete proposals to alleviate the difficulties of the bourgeoisie world and give a full report on what was accomplished in Soviet Russia."

M. Theunis of Belgium is presiding over the conference and 50 nations are represented. The conference will adopt resolutions and make recommendations, which, however, will not be binding on the countries represented, whatever may be the attitude of their delegations.

FACTS and problems of commerce and trade on the Western continent were brought out and discussed in Washington where both the third Pan-American commercial congress and the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States were in session. President Coolidge was chief speaker at a joint session of the two bodies and set forth the development of trade between the United States and the countries of Central and South America. He said that not only has the United States purchased more from Latin-American countries than it has sold to them, but it had for a long time been the chief foreign purchaser of their products.

Next day the Chamber of Commerce heard reports from the principal sections of the country, all showing present prosperity with prospect of its continuance, except in the case of the farmer. His plight, in the Middle West and the cotton-growing part of the South, was described as discouraging.

FLOOD conditions in southeastern Arkansas, northeastern Louisiana and western Mississippi grew worse steadily during the week. The water, pouring through new crevasses on the Mississippi, inundated a region about 5,000 square miles in extent, only a few narrow ridges being left above the surface. Most of the population already had been gathered at concentration points, but many hundreds were left stranded on the levees and small high places. The rescue of these unfortunates was being carried on as rapidly as possible, being directed by the scores of navy aviators sent there by the government. Civilian Dictator Parker was in general charge of the rescue operations and was doing splendid work. Secretary Hoover returned to Washington long enough to report to the President, and the result was a call for another $5,000,000 subscription to the Red Cross relief fund. The spread of disease in the flooded states was the cause of great anxiety and of such precautions as could be taken.

"We have definite reports of 25 cases of typhoid fever in the refugee camps, and there probably are many others," said Dr. William R. Redden, medical director for the American Red Cross. "And the worst part of the health problem is to come in a week or ten days, when the disease has had an opportunity to manifest itself. The health problem will increase as the waters recede."

A hundred thousand persons were immunized with typhoid and smallpox antitoxin, and the Red Cross obtained from the army ten mobile laboratories for the purification of water.

President Coolidge has indicated that he did not think it necessary to call a special session of congress for providing for relief and rehabilitation in the Mississippi valley. Senators Copeland of New York and La Follette of Wisconsin disagreed with him and both of them appealed to him by wire to call congress together. They asserted that funds from private resources would not be sufficient and that the flood victims were entitled to look to congress for assistance.

When Mr. Hoover returned from the capital he was accompanied by Secretary of War Davis, who was asked by the President to make a comprehensive study of the problem of flood control, in conjunction with the army engineers, and to submit recommendations for remedial legislation prior to the opening of the next congress. A flood-control conference also was held at Peoria, Ill., with numerous experts and officials in attendance. The people of the Middle West are so aroused by this disaster, described by Senator La Follette as the greatest in our history, that the national and state governments may be led at last to provide adequate protection against a repetition. Patchwork measures and dilatory tactics in the past have combined to make unified flood control impossible, according to those who have studied the subject. The federal government is held primarily responsible.

NINETY-FOUR men were entombed in the Everettville mine near Fairmont, W. Va., by an explosion. At the time of writing 29 bodies had been brought out by the rescue crews, and it was thought certain that all the rest of the unfortunate miners had perished, for fire was raging in parts of the workings.

THOUGH the peace conference in Nicaragua failed to accomplish its purpose, because the liberals would not consent to the retention of the Presidency by Adolfo Diaz, a two days' truce was arranged with the prospect of further negotiations. General Moncada, commander in chief of the liberal army, represented Doctor Sacasa at the conference and he said he was willing to treat further with Henry L. Stimson, the emissary of President Coolidge, provided the government troops were withdrawn from the Bonco and Teustepe regions where most of the liberals are concentrated. "Mr. Stimson told me," said General Moncada, "that the United States government intends to restore peace in Nicaragua immediately and to use force if necessary to do so." A number of the general's staff declared that if the United States formally ordered the liberals to lay down their arms and cease firing, they would be compelled to accept. But, he added, so long as the United States attempted to lay down terms, which included the continuance of Diaz in office, the liberals would fight for "constitutionality and justice for Nicaragua."

MARSHAL CHANG TSO-LIN'S Peking government executed the Chinese Reds caught in the raid on the Russian embassy grounds, and the other day it was reported that the Russian propagandists nabbed at the time were to be tried by court-martial. The Moscow government therefore transmitted to Peking a strong note warning Chang that if the Russians received the same sentence as the Chinese Communists, Russia would "immediately take the inevitable steps." The trials were postponed and a conference of Chinese officials was held at which, according to rumor, it was decided that the Russians should be deported. Mme. Michael Borodine, the captured wife of the Soviet adviser to the Cantonese government, presumably will have a separate trial.

Miles Lampson, British minister to China, has reported to his government that the Hankow faction of the Cantonese has offered to oust the Reds and make common cause with the Nanking moderates if the powers will cease further action against it. The offer was made by Foreign Minister Eugene Chen himself, but the London officials were suspicious that it was a ruse to gain further delay.

Some person or persons in Peking, apparently desirous of creating the impression that there was lack of harmony in the American government over its Chinese policy, sent out the report that Minister MacMurray had resigned. This was flatly denied in Washington and the administration showed considerable irritation over this and other false press stories from foreign sources. At present Mr. Coolidge does not see that any advantage could be derived by sending another note concerning the Nanking outrages, and he does not believe the other powers have agreed to follow up the former note and press for compliance because conditions in the ranks of the Nationalist party are too chaotic.

PREMIER POINCARE electrified France by the announcement that the government was planning the construction of a vast system of fortifications on its northern and eastern frontiers, so powerful and extensive that another invasion would be next to impossible. The northern gateways will be adequately safeguarded and the eastern gates at Verdun, Toul, Metz, Belfort and Strasbourg will be modernized. The plan also envisages the establishment of fortified works straight south to the Mediterranean.

EIGHT army aviators, the "good will" flyers who have been touring Central and South America, returned last week to Washington. President and Mrs. Coolidge and numerous officials went out to Bolling field to welcome them home, and to each flyer the President presented a certificate for the distinguished flying cross. It was announced, too, that posthumous award of the cross had been made to Capt. C. F. Woolsey and Lieut. J. W. Benton, who were killed when their planes crashed at Buenos Aires.

DETACHMENTS of the Arkansas National Guard were sent to Little Rock by the governor to avert threatened race riots as a result of the lynching of a negro. The victim of the mob had been identified as the attacker of two white women. After a few hours of strenuous work the militiamen gained control of the situation.

PRESIDENT FIGUEROA of Chile has resigned, and President Kondouriotis has withdrawn his resignation, agreeing to remain in office at least until September.

PETER AT PENTECOST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2.

GOLDEN TEXT—Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2:38.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Preaches About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Gift of Power.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Peter at Pentecost.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Spiritual Power.

I. The Day of Pentecost Fully Come (vv. 1-13).

1. Significance of the day (v. 1).

Pentecost is from a Greek word meaning "fifty." It was the feast held fifty days after the wave sheaf offering (Lev. 23:16). The wave sheaf typifies the resurrection of Christ (I Cor. 15:20-23).

2. The gift of the Holy Spirit (vv. 2-4).

On this day the Holy Spirit descended upon the disciples. From that time forth He would work on a new basis, having the crucified, risen and ascended Christ to present to the world.

3. Upon whom the Spirit came (v. 1; cf. 1:13-15).

The twelve and others, both men and women to the number of one hundred and twenty, showing that the gift of the Holy Spirit was for all believers, not merely the apostles.

4. The marks of the Spirit (vv. 2-4).

These marks were external and internal.

(1) External.

(a) The sound of a mighty wind (v. 2). This is suggestive of the mysterious, pervasive and powerful energy of the Spirit.

(b) The tongues of flame (v.3). Each of the one hundred and twenty was crowned with such a tongue. Tongues show the practical purpose of the Spirit's gift—witnessing.

(c) Speaking in foreign tongues (v. 4). This was a temporary endowment for a special purpose.

(2) Internal.

This is seen in the transformation wrought in the disciples. Peter, who shortly before this, cowered before a Jewish maid, now with lion boldness stands before the chief rulers and declares that they had murdered their King, therefore guilty before God.

5. The effects (vv. 5-13).

(1) The multitude were filled with amazement and wonder. The gift of the Spirit transforms common men into men of power and influence.

(2) Some mocked and foolishly attempted to account for this remarkable occurrence. They accused the disciples of being intoxicated.

II. Peter's Sermon (vv. 14-47).

Peter's sermon is as wonderful as the gift of tongues. His analysis is perfect.

1. The introduction (vv. 14-21).

(1) Defense of the disciples against the charge of being drunk (v. 15). This he does by citing Jewish custom showing that they would not be drunk at such an early hour of the day.

(2) A scriptural explanation. He showed that this was a partial fulfillment of that which Joel predicted would come to pass (vv. 16-21; cf. Joel 2:28-32) before the messianic judgment, viz., an outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the salvation of all who call upon the name of the Lord.

2. The proposition, or theme (v. 36). This was the messiahship of Jesus.

3. The argument (vv. 22-36). It was threefold.

(1) From Christ's works (v. 22). He was approved of God among the Jews by His miracles, wonders and signs which God did by Him in their midst with which they were familiar.

(2) From His resurrection (vv. 23-32). The Old Testament Scriptures had foretold the death and resurrection of Christ (Ps. 16:8-10). The disciples were living witnesses of Christ's resurrection for they had seen and talked with Him, and handled Him since the resurrection (v. 32).

(3) From His ascension to be on the right hand of God (v. 32). The proof that He had ascended on high was the wonderful miracle of the Spirit's operation in their midst; for He had said that upon His ascension into heaven He would send forth the Spirit.

4. The effect of the sermon (vv. 37-42).

Many people were convicted of their sins, some three thousand of whom repented and were baptized. The daily life of these believers was proof of the Spirit's gift.

(1) They continued steadfastly in the apostolic teaching (v. 42).

(2) They continued in fellowship with the apostles (v. 42).

other, it will be because the designer preferred to work out the combination by using black as a trimming on white. The accompanying illustration demonstrates the idea most beautifully.

A fascinating effect results when the hemline is embellished (see the figure to the left) with myriads of hemstitched black chiffon petals plied one upon another, so that when milady steps her frock expresses a very "poetry of motion." The manner in which the drapery of this dress is brought to the front in a bow tie is very enlightening as to a popular style now and then. trend. For the matron no more appropriate costume can be conceived of than this combination afternoon and dinner dress. We say "combination" advisedly for it is designed with a coat which, removed, reveals a charming after-six-o'clock gown.

An interesting interpretation of white-with-black is given in the model to the right. It is of handsome white crepe satin, an applique of black supplying the decorative note. The coat is silver gray with a blended twin beaver collar.

And the shoes, the gloves, the hats to wear with frocks such as these! Slippers of suave white kidskin, piped or appliqued with black, gloves whose as to fashion's trend these doting mothers will make it a rule to always buy a solid color for trimming. Even the simplest rompers exploit the compose idea nowadays. The gay-patterned gingham rompers in the picture cleverly takes unto itself raglan sleeves made of a solid color, with pockets to match. It is well to remember in selecting patterns for tots' frocks and rompers that raglan sleeves are the "last word." Note, too, the touch of smocking across the front neckline of this romper model. Few coats or frocks, these days, escape the smocking vogue.

ir Sickness Banished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

rs. Nina Matteson, Box 206, Oxford, N. Y., writes—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanguay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again.

This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than half a century, this reliable medicine has been used by women with very satisfactory results. If the Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Hide your light under a bushel perhaps, but not your good will. People are not going to hunt for it.

Tanlac Brought Her Back to Health

Dubuque man tells how his wife, mother of ten children, was attacked by nervous indigestion. For a whole year she suffered and went from bad to worse. Gives Tanlac sole credit for rapid recovery.

Mrs. Charles Hillary lives at 31 So. Locust Street, Dubuque, Iowa. Speaking of his wife's experience recently, Mr. Hillary said, "For a whole year she suffered from nervous attacks, violent headaches and dizzy spells. Even the lightest housework was too much for her. She lost her usual keen interest in reading, sewing, shopping and auto rides, and would lie awake all night too nervous to rest. Appetite she had none; what little she ate caused acute distress.

"The first relief she got was from Tanlac. She picked up quickly and now sleeps and eats normally, feels splendid, and is a picture of health. Her sickly color has vanished; her cheeks are clear and her eyes bright. Tanlac alone brought her back. I praise it at every opportunity."

Tanlac is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from roots, herbs and barks. If you're rundown and weak start taking it today. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his marksmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered. The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther. The three go aboard. Lindsay meets there a youth to whom he bears a remarkable resemblance, Robert McAllister, whom Barclay captured on his way to his uncle's plantation in Jamaica. Barclay has sworn to kill the elder McAllister. Bob is asked to act as a spy in his uncle's household. He refuses and is killed. Lindsay is asked to take his place. Realizing his helplessness and under threat of a lingering death, Lindsay agrees to assume young McAllister's name and take his place in Andrew's house. The Black Panther comes upon a plundered ship, with all on board murdered.

The men, after vociferously signifying their acceptance of this plan, went forward, while the captain and Burford, descending into the cabin, began poring over their charts of the Carribbean, debating whether to lay to, or to keep way on the schooner during the night. For reasons which they did not reveal, they seemed sure that the Shark had headed south, and accordingly we laid our own course in that direction.

With the first dawn of day, the lookout at the masthead lustily announced the presence of a sail. I had never before seen the captain so excited, as he paced the deck with an air so vengeful and so savage that I was glad to stay as far from him as I could. Yet as the day advanced his mood gradually altered to one of grim mirth, for everything appeared to favor our fortunes, and to injure those of the enemy. When the breeze sprang up, as it presently did, it came light and puffy from the north and east, and we, in the sailor's phrase, "brought the wind up with us," drawing steadily nearer and nearer to our foe, until the captain, gazing through his spyglass, announced that she was without doubt the Shark, and at once ordered the white flag, with the sable panther, to be displayed at the peak.

Presently, however, the wind increased to a steady whole-sail breeze, and I, being totally ignorant of our surroundings, thought of the old adage that a stern chase is a long chase, and expected every instant to see the captain's mood change again. But to my surprise, he remained as cheerful as ever, and as soon as the opportunity offered I asked Burford the reason for the captain's good humor, and learned that directly to the south'ard, in the shape of a crescent moon, stretched a line of low banks, resembling the famous Caymans, so close to the surface that to be once among them meant certain shipwreck. Into this bay we were now driving the Shark; it was no longer possible for her to escape us; she would have to fight.

"But why did she walk into such a trap?" I asked.

Burford shrugged his shoulders. "Perhaps," he answered, "they counted on their fuse burning true. Perhaps all hands, from the captain down, were roaring drunk. And they have one chance yet, though it's a long one. There is a channel through the banks, but there aren't three men in Jamaica who know it, and it's not likely that they have one of those three on board the Shark now."

All this time we were drawing closer, and now at last we made ready, in anticipation of our adversary's suddenly altering his course and showing fight. Surely, I reflected, I was to have a taste of real fighting now; and at the thought of the women and children I had seen lying dead on the Sea Gull's deck, I welcomed the conflict. My companions, to be sure, were vile enough, but they could not be worse than their foeman, and I was ready to risk my life to strike one good blow in revenge.

Yet still the Shark did not alter her course; still she bore on to the south; and I could see, from the look on the captain's face, that he did not understand her maneuvering. "She can't be going to try the channel," he cried. "Look at the color of the water; they're almost on the shoals now." But the next moment, leveling his glass, he exclaimed: "They are going to try it. I know that nigger at the wheel; it's Brown Mose, the best pilot in Jamaica. D—n them, they'll give us the slip after all."

He was half frantic with the violence of his rage. His swarthy face was flushed almost purple, and he ground his teeth in the extremity of his passion. Then, by ill luck, his eye happened to fall on me. "Here, you sharpshooter," he cried suddenly, "pick me off that helmsman. And quick, too, or we'll be aground ourselves."

I had my rifle in my hands, in readiness for the expected battle, and thus had no alternative but to carry out, or rather to try to carry out, the captain's command. At once, therefore, I stepped to the rail, dropped on one knee, and making, in this novel situation, the best allowance I could for the different courses the two vessels were steering, I calculated my distance and let drive. And yet, as I did so, I was conscious that something hindered my aim; and while at the time, perhaps, I could not have put it into words, I know now what the trouble was. When I aimed at a squirrel in a tree top, or at a black duck feeding in the sound, I aimed to kill; every nerve and sinew was bent to that one purpose; all was concentration, and I was aware of nothing else in the world. But now, shooting at a negro who had never done me harm, in spite of myself I aimed half-heartedly, not really wishing to hit the mark. And thus I scored a clean miss, though the bullet, indeed, could not have gone so far astray, for the pilot, not lacking courage, instantly turned and waved a hand at us, while holding the Shark true to her course.

The captain exploded in angry wrath. "D—n you, I thought you were a marksman," he cried, and seizing a rifle from Burford's hand, he made as if to shoot in his turn; then, as if not caring to endanger his hold over his men by exposing himself to their derision if he missed, he thought better of it and handed the piece to me. "Try again," he said; and to Burford he commanded: "Load the boy's rifle as quick as you can."

I could not but admire the quickness with which his mind worked. To load my own arm again was the best possible judgment, for in delicate work like this the thorough knowledge of one's piece is essential. And accordingly, though I held as true as I could with Burford's rifle, I had no great expectation of dropping my man. What the result of the shot really was, I shall never know, if the negro were hit, he gave no sign; but I have always imagined that the bullet struck him, though not in a vital spot. In any event, he remained erect at his post, and the Shark continued to glide down the entrance of the channel.

And now, at this second miss, I realized, for the first time, that the negro's was not the only life in danger. The captain's dark face turned actually livid, and quick as a flash he whipped a pistol from his belt and leveled it at my head. "You kill that man on your next shot," he said in a tone of the most dreadful and ominous calm, "or so help me God, I'll scatter your brains over this deck."

At the same instant Burford handed me my rifle. Once more I dropped to my knee; once more I took a moment to calculate distance, velocity of wind, the allowance that must be made for the different angles at which we sailed; and then, according to my custom, I banished from my mind all thoughts of ships, of sea and sky, and of everything in the world save that broad brown back, gleaming in the sun, and forming, against the background of the white mainsail, a magnificent target. "His life or mine," I thought grimly, and pressed the trigger. This time there was no suspense; simultaneously with the report, the negro's hands loosened their grip on the wheel, his arms flew upward, and then in a crumpled heap he slid headlong down the deck.

"Well shot!" roared the captain. "Well shot, my bully!" And then, savagely and exultantly, "Now let them find the channel; they won't have two men on board that know it. In five minutes by my watch, they'll be aground."

He did not exaggerate; in fact, the catastrophe occurred sooner than any one anticipated. There was confusion on the decks of our antagonist; no one, I dare say, in view of what had just happened, cared to be the next to stand a trick at the wheel. Driven with good headway, and with just sufficient depth of water not to check her too soon, we saw her bow rise suddenly, followed by half the length of her hull; then, all headway ceasing, she hung poised for an instant, settled slowly to leeward, and there hung fast.

The captain's face was transfigured with an unholy joy. "Look at her!" he cried. "Look at her! Her starboard guns pointed at the bottom of the sea, and her port guns pointed at the sky. Here's the end of the Shark! lads; we can knock her to pieces as we please."

It was evident that he spoke the truth. Heeled over as she was, her guns were rendered useless; it only remained for us to begin, at our leisure, what would be not a battle but a slaughter. Bearing down a trifle closer to make sure of our range, and paying no more heed to her scattered musketry fire than to the buzzing of so many hornets, we gave her our port broadside, then luffed, came about, and followed suit with our starboard guns, while Burford incessantly handled our long Tom with deadly aim. Both masts came crashing down; splinters flew from her rail; huge holes gaped through her exposed and unprotected hull; what a few moments before had been a trim and beautiful vessel was now a hopeless wreck.

Presently Burford came running aft. "Those that are left," he cried, "are manning the boats. They're going to run for it." And to prove the truth of his words almost at once we saw three boats put off from the Shark, endeavoring, as best they could, to keep the hulk of the wreck between themselves and us. Yet with each succeeding stroke that they took, the difficulty of avoiding our fire became greater. Burford's deadly aim with our long Tom shattered one, leaving those of its inmates not killed outright struggling in the water; while a whole broadside trained on the second reduced her to a like plight. The third, however, managed to get out of reach, and I imagined that the captain would let her go, trusting to the elements or to rival freebooters to finish them in a fitting manner. But I had not yet plumbed the depths of his hatred for McAllister or any one connected with him, and to the shout of "Boarders away" our fastest longboat was lowered and manned, rigged forward with a contrivance new to me, a V-shaped piece of wood, narrow end forward, and with an opening like a loophole on either side of the apex. What this was for I realized when the captain ordered Burford and myself to take our seats behind it, armed with our rifles and a plentiful supply of ammunition. Then the captain himself took the tiller ropes and we were off. It was grim enough to pass among the few survivors of the sunken boats, their heads bobbing up and down on the waves. As we passed they cursed us; and at one, whose language was incredibly vile, the captain leveled his pistol and shot him through the head. The others he spared, not from mercy, as I well divined, but for the pleasure of leaving them to a slower and more lingering death.

On we swept after the one remaining fugitive, and as we steadily gained upon her, the captain ordered Burford and myself to open fire. I obeyed without scruples. For one thing, I did not regard these blackguards as men, but as vermin, whose extermination would leave the world infinitely better off. And in the second place, though I own it with shame, there had risen in me the wild excitement of the pursuit, the thrill of this contest where the prize was death; and though but a scant half-hour before I had leveled my rifle at the pilot of our foe with a feeling of reluctance, now I opened fire on our fleeing enemies without remorse or compunction, and with a steady hand. I fear that after all the philosophers are right; that civilization is only skin deep; and that without the aid of law we should soon revert to the standards of our savage progenitors.

There could be but one outcome to the struggle. Our boat was lighter; our men were fresh and unwounded, while it was evident, from the irregular stroking of their oars, that some of their rowers were already badly hurt, and sticking to their task only from dread of their impending doom. And when our rifles began to speak through the loop-holes, and men, here and there, began to pitch forward and lie still, then, as the saying is, we came upon them hand over fist. Finally they abandoned their oars, and essayed a scattering fire from rifles and pistols, but it was their last effort; demoralization had seized them, and when we came alongside the few survivors were dispatched in one fierce rush. The captain, cool and business-like as ever, stove in their boat with an ax, and let the bodies of the dead float free for the scavengers of the ocean. Two of our own crew lay quiet with upturned faces, and with small round holes in their foreheads; they also were tossed over, to join the grim fleet of the floating dead.

"And now, my bullies," cried the captain, "we'll lay alongside and see what this shark has towed in her maw. Plenty of rum, I'll warrant, and plenty of gold. And all for us. Give way, lads, and tonight we sup like kings."

CHAPTER VI

Port of the Devil.

Four days later, on a bright and cloudless evening, a light breeze brought us within landing distance of Jamaica. I was gazing over the rail, straining my eyes toward the island, when the captain approached to give me my parting instructions. "In a very few moments," he told me, "Burford will set you ashore. As soon as you land, make your way to the nearest town, which lies about two miles inland. Port of the Devil, they call it, and it deserves its title. There is an inn there, named—or rather misnamed—the Palace of Delight, where all the young bloods, aye, and the old ones, too, meet to drink and gamble, to match their race horses and to make love to the girls. I advise you to do none of these things; any one of them may fasten a pretty quarrel on your hand. Spend the night at the inn and have a care that you bar your door. Tomorrow press on to the plantation; find Shively and tell him you are McAllister's nephew. He will ferry you over to the island in the lagoon. Tell your uncle your story thus. Your vessel was captured by pirates and burned to the water's edge. You yourself, after performing prodigies of valor, leaped overboard in the darkness and the next morning were picked up by a trading schooner which brought you to the island. Invent any details you please, but I advise you not to be more talkative than you can help. As matters stand, the less said the better. In two weeks' time I'll meet you at this very point, as soon after sunset as you can get here. And you must have the whole story for me. Don't bother your head with plans; I'll attend to those. I want the facts; all about McAllister, the house, the garrison; if possible, where he has hidden the treasure. Here are a brace of pistols and a knife, and here is your rifle, and here is a purse with a score of doubloons in it. And here is Burford, so farewell."

I took the arms, delighted to have my rifle once more in my possession. And a moment later I was in the gig, not rowing this time, as when I had first set out for the schooner, but seated in the stern with Burford, while two of the crew sent the light craft dancing over the quiet waters of the ocean. As the boats' bow grounded on the sand, I took leave of Burford, cleared the distance from bow to shore in one flying leap, and watched the men shove off, turn the gig's stern about, and go speeding away again out to sea.

Presently, however, I forgot all else in the beauty of the tropic night. For some time I stood—absorbed in the loveliness of the scene and in my own thoughts, until I finally came to myself with a start. This was certainly not advancing toward the Port of the Devil, and with one last look at the sea, and the faint outline of the schooner far in the distance, I turned my face inland.

Simple Device Made Revolution in Music

According to manuscripts, the playing of the steel guitar, which has made Hawaiian music famous throughout the world, was originated by a Hawaiian lad in 1893, who found that by placing an article on the fingerboard of the guitar while playing a novel sound could be produced. The boy Joseph Kekuku, then a student at Kamehameha school, first got the idea when he placed a pocket comb on the fingerboard and brought a new twang from the instrument. This was followed by experiments with the blade of a pocket knife and resulted in the use of a piece of thick steel for the purpose. The "new music" took the islands by storm and later spread over the entire world.

"This invention of the Hawaiian schoolboy," says survey, "is the most significant contribution of Hawaii to music, the introduction of an entirely new technique for the playing of stringed instruments, at least as far as the western world is concerned, although the Japonese employ a similar technique with one of their stringed instruments and some African tribes north and south of the Congo do the same with the musical bow, using a shell on a knife blade."

Escapes a Kiss

There is a ten-year-old boy visiting in Wayne who may some day work as hard for a kiss from a red-haired girl as he worked to escape one. When the girl charged at him with her lips pursed he fled across the ice of a creek, and a dozen playmates saw him break through the ice into the water waist-deep. The girl stopped at the edge of the hole and jeered. He ran to the house shivering but pure.—Detroit News.

Arthur Wellemeyer was a visitor at the Albert Swanson farm Sunday afternoon. Arthur has the following to say concerning his visit: "Albert makes a specialty of raising White Leghorn chickens, and also does quite a hatching business. One large incubator and six smaller ones of various makes were running full blast all in order to relieve 'Biddy' of the monotonous task of setting on the eggs. It would take 300 hens to cover as many eggs as Mr. Swanson's machines handle at one time, and it is doubtful whether the hens themselves could beat an 80 per cent hatch, which is what his machines are doing at the present time.

Electricity IS Cheap

Regardless of the very large investment of Capital in Plants for the production of Electricity and in the expensive distributon systems for brnging it to the Customer, Electrcity because of its unending use is still the cheapest thing we use.

The head of one large Light and Power Company in a recent interview given to a large newspaper said that: "All the electric bills in connection with house lighting, ranges, refrgerators, washing and ironing do not average as much a day as a man would pay for a cgar," and that, "The Electric bill for the entire ntion is less than what is spent for tobacco and candy combined."

There is no comparison of relative values, yet Electricity is the cheapest.

The value of what the Customer receives is more important than the rate.

A kilowatt hour is just the "yard stick" of measurement of Electricity and does not measure its value.

Dependable, continuous supply, effectively applied, gives Electricity the value to the Customer which is not measured entirely by the rate per kilowatt hour.

The rates charged by this Company guarantee to every Customer an adequate supply of Electricity for every purpose at all times, provide for a reasonable return on the Investment and pemit the Company to maintain a reserve sufficient to maintain and replace property used in serving the Pubilc.

Is this service worth on an average the price of one cigar a day?

REV. H.H. GREIMANN BURIED SUNDAY

REV. BOSMA WRITES BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF PASTOR

One Of Largest Funerals Held In This Community For Years

One of the largest crowds to attend a funeral in this section for a long, long times was that which gathered to pay its last respects to Rev. Herman Greimann, whose remains were laid to rest in Ell Township Reformed church cemetery, Sunday afternoon, May 15.

The remains of the Rev. Greimann were brought to the rural home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Greiman, sr., Saturday afternoon from Schaller, Iowa. He laid in state at the old home until Sunday afternoon at 2:00, when the body was taken to the church where the impressive Reformed burial services were held.

Brother clergymen of the deceased who were in attendance, are: Rev. D. E. Bosma, Baxter; Rev. H. Lehmann, Newton; Rev. J. Muller, Ledyard; Rev. C. Grosshuesch, Klemme; Rev. Wm. Bollman, Wheatland; Rev. P. Kohler, Alleman; Rev. K. J. Stuebbe, Waukon; Theological Student H. Snitker, Schaller.

At the church service Rev. Lehmann of Newton, spoke in the English language, while Rev. Stuebbe of Waukon, followed in the German tongue.

A large delegation of his parishioners from Schaller were here to pay final tribute to their beloved pastor. Others from a distance who made the drive to Garner to attend his funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Maurer and Miss Ida Maurer, all of Sheboygan, Wisconsin—the two ladies are sisters of Mrs. Greimann; Miss Flora Meckstroth, deaconess at Cincinnatti hospital.

The following biographical sketch and tribute was written by Rev. D. E. Bosma, a classmate and brother minister of the deceased:

"The deceased, Rev. Herman Henry Greimann, sixth child of Fred Greimann and his wife, Dina Katter Greimann, was born in Ell township, Hancock county, Iowa, on the 27th day of September, 1885. He received the seal and sign of adoption in the covenant of God, holy baptism, by officiation of Rev. Henry Treick, then serving the Reformed charge near Garner, Iowa. Growing up in the midst of a staunch German Reformed family, he became acquainted early with the sacred scriptures and the Heidelberg catechism. In his early school years he attended the public and parochial schools, and receiving special catechetical instruction under the tutorship of Reformed ministers, he acquired the privileges of confirmed members by consent of the consistory of the Ell township Reformed congregation, April 8, 1901, Rev. J. Gatermann officiating at the time. The scripture passage alloted to him was Psalm 37.5: 'Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass.' For a few years following, he performed his full share of the farm duties together with his elder brothers under the guidance of his capable father.

"The fall of 1904 found him enrolled in a class of 33 young students at the mission house near Sheboygan, Wisconsin. His desire and purpose was to prepare himself for the vocation of the holy ministry. Together we, as students, now studied and played and worked for nine years in the academy, college and seminary of our church. We learned to cherish each other as true friends and brothers, our hearts became entwined and interwoven with each other, having one faith, one confession, standing side by side, rooted together upon the one Rock and Foundation, Christ Jesus, the Rock of our salvation, the same yesterday, today and forever. Together we were cast as into a fiery furnace in our last school years, contending for the faith, our beloved confession. To us it was a baptism of fire, burning away the dross. 'To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them," Is. 8, 20. 'Now we know that what things soever the law saith it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped and all the world may become guilty before God. Therefore, by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in His sight, for by the law is the knowledge of sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.' (Rom. 3.)

"Thus we approach the spring of 1913 to be dismissed by our beloved alma mater as a class of ten candidates for the profession of the ministry of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Three of these, including the deceased, were then examined and licensed by the Sheboygan classis at Manitowoc, Wisconsin.

"On the 18th of June, 1913, Rev. Herman Greimann married Caroline Haberkamp and together they hopefully and happily entered upon their labors in the Reformed charge at Dale, Wisconsin.

"In the spring of 1920 Rev. Greimann accepted a call from the Reformed congregation near Schaller, Iowa, and took up his pastoral duties there, in the first days of April, serving this congregation faithfully and ardently until his demise.

"On the 30th of January, 1924, his beloved and faithful wife passed away, leaving him with five children, Charlotte, Curtis, Adeline, Eugene and Dorothy. He was overwhelmed with grief and in the midst of these seemingly hopeless dark hours he was yet more firmly rooted in the comforting promises of the Word. With singular fortitude he bore his unspeakable grief, looking up to Him who redeemed us, body and soul, from destruction, and without Whose will, not even a hair may fall from our head. And then, how great was his gratitude and joy when the dear Lord granted him the love and solicitude of Sister Anna Maurer of Cincinnatti, Ohio, whom he betrothed on the 26th day of May, 1926. It was a happy and blessed union. No one could surmise that it should last but one fleeting year.

"There is a purpose and an object in all that the Lord has in store for us, yet His counsels are hidden from us. We glimpse them only in part as by retrospection. If we cannot comprehend, we must yet believe His wisdom and fatherly compassion, for 'as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him.' Is it not a wonderful providence of God that, whereas the days of a man are counted, the Heavenly Father has already provided a mother for the children whose love and kindness linked with christian virtues are a marked example to all! Let us be reminded continually that God alone is wise and just. With Him alone is understanding, and above all, that unfathomable love toward the creatures of His hand, who are now conceived and born in sin and whose every imagination is only evil continually, that love, namely, in which He worked out their complete and final salvation by the passion and death of His beloved Son and made of us heirs and children of God, born again, not of corruptible, but of incorruptible seed, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever.

"The vicissitudes of life did not leave the deceased unscathed. About six years ago, after a period of poor health, he had submitted to a very serious major operation, from which he rallied again, gaining health and strength and, combining his ministerial labors ardently until a few weeks ago, when he was laid low with symptoms of neuritis. For a period of three weeks he suffered intensely and incessantly. His loved ones became seriously alarmed at his condition and relatives were informed. On Tuesday evening the excruciating pains ceased, the temperature dropped, but the heart action became faster and weaker. Noticeably his strength and vitality were failing. The closer relatives were called and in the midst of his family brothers and sisters, father and mother, he passed away as in a deep sleep on Thursday afternoon at twenty minutes after one, having reached the age of 41 years, seven months and fourteen days.

"Grief stricken, he leaves his beloved wife, five children, his aged father and mother, his brothers and sisters: George, William, Emma (Mrs. Charles Goll), Mathilda, (Mrs Wesley Lenz), Fred, Lydia, (Mrs. Lou Weaver), Meta, (Mrs. Charles Griffin), Henry, Benjamin, Oscar, Addis and Clarence. Besides these, many relatives and innumerable friends grieve at the bier of a beloved friends.

"Upon his bed of suffering he would not be induced easily to dismiss his works and labors. He spoke and consulted about many things with which his mind had been busied for months and years. Then again he quoted scripture, admonishing to abide by the verity of the revealed Word. He said: 'We know nothing, have nothing, but what is given us from above. God alone is wise, has wisdom, and He has revealed knowledge to us. We must hear this, listen to it, learn it, abide by it, believe it. We have no other foundation. We can add nothing to it, we may take nothing away from it; it is finished; a final knowledge. We can only, and we must say yes, Amen, to whatever he has said.' Together with him we joined in devotions, repeating the 121, 103, 32 and 23 psalms, catechism 60 and 1, and uniting in prayers. Asked whether he was ready to be called by God, he assured, 'If God calls, I am ready; I belong to my faithful Savior, Jesus Christ. He is my Lord and Savior.'

"Our heartfelt sympathy goes not especially to the bereaved family, the distressed and sorrowing widow and the orphaned children, the parents, the brothers and sisters, the congregation in which he labored so zealously. All assembled here have lost a friend, true and tried. The congregation and an exemplary teacher and preacher of the righteousness unto salvation in Christ Jesus. We need but remind how the children, the young people, the mature men and women and the aged listened again and again with bated breath to the words that came from his lips so wondrously clear and passionately forceful when he expounded the scriptures. And what an exemplary father the family had in him! He was a man among men, honest, upright, trustworthy in the extreme, straight forward, without guile and hypocracy, seeking not his own glory and honor but the welfare of all men, the glory and honor of the Savior. He shouldered every responsibility with a brave and daring heart, admonishing evil-doers face to face or comforting the distressed with the comfort of the sure word of phophecy, and then again imparting cheer and happiness to those who associated with him. Cherished and loved by his many friends, his opponents learned to fear and respect him. He could not be induced to recede a hair's breadth from the path of righteousness. His confession and faith ever was: 'The Lord is my strength,' 'I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith, as it is written, 'The just shall live by faith.' (Rom. 1, 16-17.)

"When the pressing need became more and more evident, that the printed page must help to profess, retain and defend the good old gospel of salvation as set forth in our confession so that the younger generations might also become better acquainted with the labors of our fathers and teachers, he was perhaps the most zealous and influential promoter and supporter of this worthy missionary cause, and his ardent interest in 'The Witness' never abated.

"The Lord called him from the midst of his labors. We may well say

CHECK LAW HAS SOME SHARP TEETH IN IT

It is possible that the wardens of the state penal institutions will gnash their teeth for giving the secret away, thus holding their population down to aminimum, but the new check law is said to have some sharp teeth in it and the promiscuous writing of checks will probably be eliminated to considerable extent. If one writes a check for more than $20, and it comes back marked "insufficient funds," or "no account" that is an indictable offense. Conviction on that count is punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 and seven years in the penitentiary. If the amount is less than $20 it is a misdemeanor and the penalty is $100 fine and 30 days in jail. Anyway, it is believed that the check writing game is a lost art with some of the more timid check writers of Iowa.—Carrol Times.

SCHOOL CLOSES WITH COMMUNIRY PICNIC

ANNUAL EVENT WILL BE PUT ON AT KOERNER GROVE

Closing Days Of School Busiest Of All The Year

t has been agreed that we shall have a Community Picnic on Friday of this week. Mr. A. G. Koerner has kindly assigned us his grove and yards. Mrs. C. F. Keraus and Mrs A. D. Gimer have agreed to engineer the feeding of the multitude, the school board has voted some ice cream and our high school Senior Girls assisted, perhaps, by a few thers have solicited a lot of good things for the table to be set in the grove, or in the school house if it should be rainy. Those solicited are responding very generously, it seems, and none will need go away hungry. A ball game with Britt high school has been promised us for Friday afternoon We hope to defeat them and tie Corwith for the county honors two games won and one game lost.

Very Busy Week At School

This is a very busy week for the faculty at school. Examinations are to be conducted, papers to be graded and reports to be made out for the school year, and grades to be recorded.

It will be a week ending in exultation for some students and dissappointment for others. Some will be happy to learn they have made credits in all of their subjects and have secured unconditional promotion while others, who may or may not have wrked just as hard, will be disappinted that their work has not been pronounced satisfactory, and may in part or in all have to be repeated. It never gives pleasure to a teacher to retain a child in the same grade or subject another year or semester. It is naturally more pleasurable to her to award the passing grade. The child is happy nad the parent seldom shows any displeasure For this reason many children are promoted when they might better have repeated the work. At this time we are unaware of the number of failures but we hope they will be few. If, however, it is the conviction of our teachers that some work should be taken over again to insure a good work next year, we belive our parents will give their approval and bring, if possible, strong influence to bear on the child toward more thorough work next semester.

Fine Program For Graduates

The Commencement Exercises will be at 8:00 o'clock this evening in the school gymnasium and besides the address there will be three numbers by the Girls Glee Club and an instrumental quartette by Mr. Gary and his able assistants, all of whom we shall be compelled to get along without next year. On this occasion the curtain will fall on the high school activities of eleven of our young people who will be looking for employment next year. Many will be present to wish them well for the future and congratulate them on their present achievements.

A very interesting although, brief, program was staged by these eleven youths last Tuesday morning when classes were dismissed for one period and both grammar room and high school classes went to our gymnasium.

Asa Arnold peered into the future and saw his class mates here and there doing great work. Ruth Bailey read their last will and testament bequeathing a lot of things to the folks left in Klemme High, while Fern Stille read the class poem and Myrtle Irving gave a very interesting history of her class. We shall miss these jolly but capable young people when the school bell rings next September.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

The Men's Brotherhood of the Garner Methodist Church will have charge of te morning services at the Methodist Church next Sunday.

Rev. Lease, Supt. of the Algona District, will preach at both morning and evening services May 29th.

COMMENCEMENT

Tens of thousands of young men and women are finishing their formal schooling at this time. All over the country, during the months of May and June, in every high school and college, boys and girls go out as graduates from the halls where the past four years have been spent in search of knowledge.

Thousands of varying persouler of the sould for something besides life's meat and drink. All are seeking a remedy for the problems of the world. It is of such fabric as this that dreams which come true are made. It is always youth which is ready to ities are represented—eager, vibrant, wistful, each with a hungattempt the impossible.

THE JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET

(Reported by a Student)

The second annual Junior-Senior Banquet of the Klemme High School was held Saturday, May 7th, in the High School Gymnasium at 6:30 p. m.

The Gymnasium was beautifully decorated in three shades of lavender (the Junior Class Colors.) The reception room represented a garden with a flower bed in the center and wicker furniture, hamocks, etc., gathered around the bed. A wall of lattice work separated the reception room from the dining room. In the dining room were set tables for four over which pretty canopies hung from the ceiling representing small umbrellas. In the center of the tables were lavender candles tied with lavender ribbon. The place cards were tinted lavender.

A delicious four course dinner was served. The menu was as follows:

Snow Capped Strawberries
Veal Birds Potato Roses
Creamed Corn
Rolls Preserves
Perfection Salad Wafers
Lavender Tulips Cake
Coffee
Candy Nuts

Toasts were given by Gladys Wilson, Hallie Greimann, Mr. Penrod, Miss Stoner and Toastmaster, Harvey Nelson, between courses. Mr Penrod spoke about the letter "K," Miss Stoner about "H" and Harvey Nelson about "S."

After the dinner the Juniors escorted the Seniors and Faculty to a show, "The Phantom of the Opera," featuring Lon Chaney. Everyone enjoyed themselves and we hope the Junior Senior Banquet will become an annual affair.

MORE THAN A TON OF BUTTER EVERY DAY

75,000 POUNDS OF BUTTER MADE IN KLEMME IN MAY

Business At Creamery Has Grown Rapidly Past Year

The amount of butter made each week at the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery Company has jumped to a new high record. Production is increasing daily and Mr. Gimer, the manager, says the peak of butter to be made this season will be reached in ten days to two weeks.

The Creamery expects to ship 1100 tubs of butter weighing 65 lbs. each for the month of May, and in addition to this amount 3,000 lbs. of butter is sold locally every month to patrons and through stores. The total amount, added in pounds, will be at least 75,000 pounds for the month.

Many New Patrons Join Ranks

The Creamery has gained a goodly number of new patrons who have joined the ranks since May 1st.

The new patrons who have started to sell to the local creamery are:

Ed. Gifford, John Newberger, Mrs. Emma Hegland, Sven Hegland, Otto Neuhring, Frank Clarke, Harry Ostendorf, Andrew Peterson, T. L. Ruke, Lippo Cooper, Floyd Friedow, Chas. Proctor, Alvia Berhow, Peter Dolce, C. Newberger, Chris, A. C. Hanson, Dick Fuls, Andrew Heggen, all locally, and A. A. Leviton, who ships in from Steamboat Rock.

COMMISSION FAVORS PAVING WILSON WAY

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS WILL NEE DTO ISSUE BONDS

Project May Be Begun This Year Across Hancock County

People in this part of the county are more or less interested in the proposed paving of the Wilson Highway across the county from north to south. The Klemme Times this week brings further information to its readers regarding this pavin and we are printing the following article from the Tuesday issue of the Garner Leader which fully covers the subject.

The Leader story is as follows:

A delegation of Hancock county citizens appeared before the State Highway commission at Ames, Monday afternoon, at which time they laid before that body the advisability of paving the Wilson highway. In the delegation was the board of supervisors, County Engineer Chas. Merten, Representative C. H. Nelson, W. S. Pritchard, F. M. Hanson and Dr. G. A. Bemis.

The delegation was cordially received and the commission looks with favor upon the proposition of paving the Wilson from Garner to Wright county line, south, according to information given The Leader.

There is always the matter of finance to be considered, and we gather that Hancock county's status in this particular, is thus. The expense of paving the Wilson from Garner south to the Wright county line is estimated at Approximately $314,000. If the board of supervisors see fit to do so, it can forthwith issue bonds to the amount of $264,000, which is the remainder of the original $1,000,000 bond issue authorized several years ago.

The difference between what would be made available by such a bond issue, and the amount required to complete the proposed project, would be $50,000. In order to secure this amount, it would be necessary to submit to the voters of the county the proposition of authorizing the board of supervisors to issue the needed $50,000.

No additional expense, aside from that incurred in the holding of the election, would accrue to the taxpayers of this county, by the voting of the additional bonds, as payment of both the interest and principal would be taken care of out of the general primary road funds which are handled by the highway commission.

There is a possibility, but it is not probably, that this improvement will be made this year, but inasmuch as the matter has received the approval of the highway commission, and there is a general demand for the improvement, it is certain that it will be made sometime within the next year.

A Wright county delegation was before the commission asking that they be advised as to how to proceed in the matter of submitting to the voters of that county the matter of voting bonds sufficient to pave the Wilson north and south and also Primary road No. 10, which runs east and west through the county.

Nine Big Routes Lead Out

Nine big cream routes now radiate in all directions from the Klemme creamery and fully cover the territory. Anyone wanting to sell cream to the Klemme Creamery can just hail or "flag" any driver on any of the routes and they will be glad to haul your cream to Klemme.

Klemme has perhaps the largest creamery in northern Iowa and it is growing bigger every day.

Entertain Teachers At Shower

Mrs. P. M. Wilson entertained the teachers of the Klemme schools at a pre-nuptial shower Monday evening in honor of Miss Pauline Stoner. A dainty luncheon was served at six-thirty. Miss Stoner was presented with a number of beautiful gifts. The ladies report a very fine time.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

The Siege of Paris

"THE price of a rat caught in the sewers and half cooked (for fuel, too, is short) is far higher than we formerly used to pay for spring chicken."

This entry in the diary of one of the survivors of the siege of Paris shows the straits to which the gallant defenders of the beleaguered city were reduced for the bare necessities of life. Rats, cab horses, the wild animals in the zoo, plant roots, and even garbage, were utilized as food. Furniture, wainscoting and other woodwork went for fuel in that bitter winter of 1870-71, while the conquering Prussians thundered at Paris' gates, and while the fated city's defenders fought among themselves, starved and attempted futile sallies against the besieging foe.

When Napoleon III was captured with MacMahon's army France had cast off the imperial yoke, abolished the assembly and for the third time in eighty years had declared a republic. General Trochu, a brave man and wise soldier, was appointed military head of a hastily selected provisional government, his colleagues being Gambetta, Favre, Thiers and Simon. The city was at once set in order to resist the advancing Prussians.

But here a new difficulty arose. Paris was full of sects and factions, each at swords' point with the others. In the first French revolution the warring factions had combined as one against the advancing foreign invasion and had repelled it. But now, in 1870, with the German army already within a few days' march of the capital, the political parties wrangled, disputed and accomplished nothing. The only point on which they united was their disgust for Napoleonism. Instead of preparing organized resistance, the chiefs of these factions—"Social Democrats," as they were called—spent their energies in hampering and trying to overthrow the provisional government. Even when, on September 19, the German armies reached Paris and laid siege to the city these malcontents did not cease from their efforts to overthrow Torchu and his colleagues.

The German armies bombarding the city, starvation stalking abroad and internal riots and intrigues—this was the triple state of affairs confronting Paris' defenders. And, over and above all, hung the amazement and black shame of martial France's utter defeat at the hands of her heretofore despised Prussian rival. All this was, apparently, sufficient to break the stoutest spirit. Yet, in spite of it the Parisians fought and suffered like heroes. They endured hunger, cold and other privations with a gay courage that was the admiration of Europe. They joked about the murderous hail of Prussian shells that scourged them daily and nightly with fire and death. They volunteered eagerly for military service. Sortie after sortie was made against the stronger Prussians outside the city, and each crushing defeat served only to increase the warlike zeal of the brave defenders.

Armies were raised in other parts of France to relieve the siege. Garibaldi himself took the field in behalf of the stricken land. But, one after another, each of these relief armies was beaten back by the invading German hosts. At last, on January 19, 1871, a final sally against the enemy failed. Paris could hold out no longer. Nothing was left to eat. For three weeks a bombardment of shells from every quarter had devastated whole sections. Torchu resigned and the French capital surrendered. A truce (January 28) was agreed upon with the Germans and elections were held. In this way a new national assembly was chosen. Thiers was elected executive head of the nation, a temporary seat of government was established at Versailles, near Paris, and peace terms were discussed.

But the Social Democrats and other factions in Paris saw in this an excellent occasion to break into active insurrection. They demanded that Paris be an autonomous (home-rule) city, disclaimed the acts of the government at Versailles and opened an era known as the Commune. Communists were by no means new in Frence, nor was this their first active outbreak. They had been opposed to the empire, and now they had an equal dislike to the Thiers government. So, March 18, 1871, the horrors of a revolution again convulsed unhappy Paris. Home rule was declared and the Communists prepared to hold the city against all comers. The government tried to compromise, but failed. Then civil war broke out, the government attacking the city, the Communists defending it. A second siege of Paris began, lasting from April 2 to May 21. The Communists quarreled among themselves, indulged in the wildest excesses of mob rule, burned public buildings, ordered wholesale executions, scoffed at religion, murdered the archbishop, threatened in an excess of blasphemy to swear out a warrant for the arrest of God, and in similar ways demonstrated their unfitness to exist. The government troops at last forced their way into Paris. After eight days of street fighting the Commune was stamped out, 6,500 of its members being killed and many thousands more imprisoned.

So ended the war, the siege and the Commune. The battered, humiliated French nation slowly began to rebuild its wrecked prosperity. The price of Napoleonism was paid.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Nungesser Lost in Paris-to-New York Flight—Mid-west Storm Swept.

By EDWARD J. PICKARD

FIRST to attempt the nonstop flight from Paris to New York for the Orteig prize, and first to fail, Capt. Charles Nungesser, famous French ace, and Maj. Francois Coli are believed at this writing to have been lost somewhere in the North Atlantic. Their plane, "White Bird," was last seen off the southern coast of Ireland. It vanished in the ocean mists and intensive search by French, American and English vessels failed to reveal its fate. Near the week's end there were still those who believed the unfortunate aviators might be found in some cove of the Newfoundland or Nova Scotia coast or on some small vessel that had no wireless. But the hope was exceedingly slender.

At first the blame for the failure of Nungesser's flight was placed by the Paris press on the United States weather bureau, the assertion being made that the flyers were duped by incorrect weather reports from America, and the French people were so aroused by this that Ambassador Herrick cabled advising American entrants in the contest to delay their start. The story was found to be utterly false, and General Delcambre, head of the French weather bureau, assumed full responsibility for the advices on weather conditions given to Nungesser and Coli before they hopped off. Clarence Chamberlin and Lloyd Bertaud, seeing no further reason for delay, made all preparations to start their flight from New York in the big Wright-Bellanca plane; and Capt. Louis Lindbergh, veteran air-mail pilot, flew his entry, the Ryan plane, from San Diego to New York with the intention of hopping off for Paris in a few days. Lindbergh flies alone.

FOR three days eight states of the Middle West were subjected to the fury of the weather. Tornadoes, torrential rains and, in the higher altitudes, severe blizzards prevailed, and reports from the widely scattered regions that suffered showed that nearly 250 persons had lost their lives and about one thousand had been injured. The property losses were very heavy. First destruction was wrought in Kansas, where a twister roared in from the southwest. There followed tornadoes that lashed Texas, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana and Illinois, flattening farmhouses and buildings in rural sections and laying towns and villages in waste.

Twice the storms struck at Missouri, in a dozen communities in the central part of the state and at Poplar Bluff, in the southeastern section. The known dead at Poplar Bluff stood at 101, with scores injured and the heart of the city devastated. Ten persons were killed in central Missouri, three by high wind at St. Louis and two by twisters near Springfield.

Arkansas was swept from the southern section to the northeastern counties by a series of twisters. Latest reports placed the dead at 70 and the injured at more than three hundred. The death list in Texas, where tornadoes struck at two points, reached 35.

MORE money is needed for the relief of the Mississippi valley flood victims. The $10,000,000 fund was oversubscribed, but the Red Cross officials announced that the amount raised was insufficient to care for the work in hand. All Red Cross chapters were urged to exceed their original quotas. The latest serious development is the breaking out of smallpox among the refugees of the Boeuf river section of Louisiana, where an epidemic was feared. Large supplies of vaccine and of typhoid prophylaxis were hurried to that region. Desperate efforts were made to build up the levees along south central Louisiana, at which the flood waters were hammering. The state levee board officials believed the embankment would hold, but naval aviators who flew over the region said they thought the fight to save the Bayou des Glaises levee was practically lost.

REAR ADMIRAL LATIMER issued a warning to all armed forces in Nicaragua that they would have to surrender their arms peaceably to the American troops there or submit to disarmament by force. This order applies to the Conservatives as well as the Liberal rebels, and the latter are to receive from the Diaz government payment of $10 for each rifle or machine gun surrendered. The possibility that force might be required to persuade some of the belligerents led Admiral Latimer to ask that 800 more marines be sent him. Four hundred were started at once from Quantico, and 400 were embarked at Charleston, S. C., and Port-au-Prince, Haiti. An aviation detachment and six airplanes was sent from Quantico, and another aviation detail with three planes was ready to proceed from San Diego by commercial transportation.

To assist General Moncado, Liberal commander in chief, in persuading his troops to lay down their arms, Henry L. Stimson, personal representative of President Coolidge, wrote the general this letter after their conference at Tipitapa:

"Confirming our conversation of this morning, I have the honor to inform you that I am authorized to say that the President of the United States intends to accept the request of the Nicaraguan government to supervise the elections of 1928; that the retention of President Diaz during the remainder of his term is regarded as essential to that plan and will be insisted upon; that a general disarmament of the country is also regarded as necessary for the proper and successful conduct of such elections, and that the forces of the United States will be authorized to accept the custody of the arms of those willing to lay them down, including the government, and to disarm forcibly those who will not do so."

AMERICAN foreign policy scored heavily when Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, announced in the house of commons that Great Britain had acceded to the view of the United States and would not send further notices to China or apply sanctions for the Nanking outrages. After a full review of the facts the British decided the application of force would be inexpedient, however justified, and Great Britain has informed all the other interested powers of this fact, Sir Austen said He announced, however, that Great Britain will hold whatever government emerges from the chaos of the present Cantonese split responsible for the Nanking acts, demanding reparations and compensations.

The British government notified Washington it was ready to co-operate in abrogating extraterritorial rights in China, and our State department announced that this government stands prepared to enter into negotiations for the abolishment of extraterritoriality with any government of China or delegates who can speak for China.

Dr. C. C. Wu, upon assuming the office of foreign minister of the Nanking government, declared that government has no intention of using force against the Shanghai foreign settlement. When the proper time arrives the Nationalists will take up the question of the international settlement diplomatically, as well as the entire treaty situation.

The Nationalists of Nanking and Hankow have dropped their quarrel for a time to form a united front against Marshal Chang Tso-lin. General Feng is reported moving eastward to drive the Manchurian from Peking.

IN ACCORDANCE with a decision by Supreme Court Justice Peters of New York, $2,500,000 raised in the United States for the "Irish Republic" does not belong to either the Irish Free State or Eamon de Valera, former President of the republic and trustee for the bondholders. Instead, the sum is to be returned to the subscribers after the heavy expenses of the long litigation are deducted. The immediate return to the subscribers will be made still smaller by another factor. The republic campaigners raised $6,000,000 in the United States. Of this all but the $2,500,000 affected by this decision was sent to Ireland during the struggle to establish in the island a sovereign and single nation. The $2,500,000, therefore, must be spread over a wide field by pro rata distribution.

The outstanding detail of the decision is that Justice Peters finds the Irish republic never existed. He holds the republican movement never got beyond the revolt stage.

MRS. RUTH SNYDER and Henry Judd Gray, convicted in the sensational New York trial of the murder of Albert Snyder, the woman's husband, were sentenced to death in the electric chair. The treatment of this case by the press was notable for the lack of the familiar and disgusting "sob stories," and the verdict of the jury has been received with general approval. Even Gray says it was "wise and sensible."

In a somewhat similar case in Newton, N. J., a jury, five members of which were women, brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree against Frank Van Sickle, who slew the husband of his paramour and sought to blame the woman for his crime. He goes to prison for life.

AN AMAZING scheme to blow up the Illinois penitentiary at Stateville and rescue one or more of the prisoners was devised by an escaped murderer and was foiled only by the alertness of the guards and keepers, who would not let him drive his automobile through the gates. After a fight they arrested him and easily obtained a full confession. Dressed in the black suit and Roman collar of a Catholic priest and armed with revolvers, nitroglycerin and a supply of mustard gas, the escaped convict, William Evans, made his daring attempt in order to repay the man who helped him escape from the Missouri penitentiary at Jefferson City in 1923. That man, he says, is Harry Funk, who is serving a ten-year term at Stateville for bank swindle.

FOLLOWING a recent ruling of the Philippines Supreme court that the governor general has full power over government controlled institutions, Governor General Wood announced that the government is going out of business in the islands and that its holdings in commercial enterprises, involving about $50,000,000, will be sold to the highest responsible bidders. Immediately afterward he handed control of the Manila Railroad company, one of the corporations in which the government owns the majority of the stock, over to Filipinos, by giving the natives a majority on the board of directors of the company. Management of the company also was left in native hands.

JUDGE PURDY of the United States District court in Shanghai sentenced Leonard Husar, former United States district attorney for China, to serve two years in the United States penitentiary at McNeil's island, Washington, and a fine of $3,000 in gold for accepting a bribe of $34,000 from an opium ring. Judge Purdy also sentenced Neil McKay Heath of Georgia, Husar's accomplice, to 18 months' imprisonment and a $1,000 fine.

MONDAY was a great day for Australia, for the new federal capital, Canberra, was formally occupied when the temporary parliament buildings were opened by the duke of York. Fifty thousand persons attended the ceremonies and every one of the British dominions was represented. The city of Canberra, which is about 200 miles from Sydney, has an area of 12 square miles. It was designed by a Chicago architect, Walter Burley Griffin, who won first prize in a plan competition. The entire federal district comprises 912 square miles, and strict prohibition prevails there by law.

THE Treasury department has called the $1,700,000,000 outstanding of the second Liberty loan, the bonds to be paid on November 15, the tenth anniversary of their issuance. Opportunity may be offered by the treasury to exchange these bonds for other government securities if cash is not desired. Notice of the call was advertised in every daily, weekly and semi-weekly newspaper in the United States printed in English, by placards, in all post offices and banks and by radio.

PETER HEALS THE LAME MAN

LESSON TEXT—Acts 3:1-4:31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Neither is there salvation in any other for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Heals a Lame Man.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Gifts That Money Cannot Buy.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Giving Our Best for Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Gifts That Are Better Than Money.

I. Peter Healing the Lame Man (Acts 3:1-10).

1. The place (vv. 1, 2).

Peter and John were on their way to the house of worship. This man had been placed at the entrance of the place of worship where he might receive the sympathetic attention of worshipers.

2. The man (v. 2).

This beggar was infirm from his birth. He was now more than forty years old (4:22) and had brought his ailment with him into the world. When he saw Peter and John he asked alms.

3. The method (vv. 3-8).

(1) The man's attention gained (v. 4).

Peter and John commanded him to look on them.

(2) Peter commanded him in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth to rise and walk (v. 6).

(3) Peter took him by the right hand (v. 7),

This was meant to give impetus to his faith—not strength to his ankles.

4. The man's response (v. 8).

Strength came to his feet and anklebones at once. He stood, he walked, he leaped and shouted praises to God.

5. The effect (vv. 9-11).

The people were so filled with wonder and amazement that they ran together to behold this wonderful thing. Note:

(1) This helpless beggar had to be carried to the temple gate. Men and women out of Christ are so helpless that they need to be brought where the light of God can be applied to them.

(2) Peter taking the man by the hand shows the manner of helping the lost.

II. Peter Witnessing Before the Multitude (2:12-26).

Though this miracle directed the attention of the people to Peter and John, Peter immediately turned their attention from himself to Christ. He told them that it was faith in Jesus Christ whom God had glorified and whom they had deliberately betrayed and crucified that had healed this man.

III. Peter in Prison for Christ's Sake (4:1-4).

It was his fidelity to Christ that brought him this persecution. Observe:

1. The leaders—priests and Sadducees—in this persecution (vv. 1, 2).

The priests were intolerant because these new teachers were encroaching upon their functions.

2. The result (vv. 8, 4).

Though they were held in bondage by chains, Christ continued to work. The number of believers had greatly increased.

IV. Peter Witnessing Before the Sanhedrin (4:5-21).

1. The inquiry (vv. 5-7).

This inquiry admitted the reality of the miracle. They wanted to know what it signified.

2. Peter's answer (vv. 8-12).

Being filled with the Holy Spirit, Peter calmly and graciously answered. He showed them that they were not on trial as evildoers but for doing good to the helpless and needy man. Since they could not deny the miracle he boldly declared that it had been done in the name of Jesus Christ whom they had crucified and God had raised from the dead.

3. The impression upon the Sanhedrin (vv. 13-22).

(1) They marveled (vv. 1-13).

They saw that Peter's behavior and words were as unusual as the miracle.

(2) They took knowledge that Peter and John had been with Jesus (v. 13).

(3) They forbade them to speak in Christ's name (v. 18).

(4) Peter and John's reply (vv. 19, 20).

They expressed their determination to obey God rather than men.

(5) Their release (v. 21).

Seeing the people were on their side, there was no way to punish them.

V. The Church at Prayer (vv. 23-31).

As soon as Peter and John were set free, they hastened away to their fellow disciples and told them their experience. They praised God for deliverance and prayed for boldness to speak the Word of God.

WOMEN CAN NOW DO MORE

Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Keeps Them Well

Fifty years ago there were few occupations for women Some taught school, some did housework, some found work to do at home and a few took up nursing.

Today there are very few occupations not open to women. Today they work in factories with hundreds of other women and girls. There are also women architects, lawyers, dentists, executives, and legislators. But all too often a woman wins her economic independence at the cost of her health.

Mrs. Elizabeth Chamberlain who works in the Unionall factory making overalls writes that she got "wonderful results" from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mrs. Chamberlain lives at 500 Monmouth St., Trenton, N. J. She recommends the Vegetable Compound to her friends in the factory and will gladly answer any letters she gets from women asking about it.

If Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped other women why shouldn't it help you?

A man with egotism often succeeds and sometimes mistakenly.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his marksmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered. The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther. The three go aboard. Lindsay meets there a youth to whom he bears a remarkable resemblance, Robert McAllister, whom Barclay captured on his way to his uncle's plantation in Jamaica. Barclay has sworn to kill the elder McAllister. Bob is asked to act as a spy in his uncle's household. He refuses and is killed. Lindsay is asked to take his place. Realizing his helplessness and under threat of a lingering death, Lindsay agrees to assume young McAllister's name and take his place in Andrew's household. The Black Panther comes upon a plundered ship, with all on board murdered. Barclay declares it the work of McAllister's pirate ship, Shark. The Black Panther overtakes and destroys it with all on board.

Almost at once, however, I discovered that for at least a portion of my journey I could not depend on a well-trodden road; if there was a path, it evaded me; and presently, confronted by a thick belt of trees, there seemed nothing for me to do but to plunge boldly in. I took my time, picked my way with care, and had just begun to see light ahead, when I suddenly heard, some distance away, the sound of galloping hoofs. At once I remembered what the captain had told me of the residents of the Port and making up my mind to hide myself, I thrust apart as hastily and noiselessly as I could the branches of a large bush in front of me, and was soon effectually concealed. And none too soon, for I could hear, much nearer than before, the same unmistakable beat of hoofs; then silence, followed by the breaking of twigs beneath approaching footsteps, and presently, to my left, there appeared in view the figures of two men, carrying what seemed to be the body of a third in their arms. And for an instant I thought, with horror, that I had come from the barbarities of the sea to even worse barbarities on the land, for in the uncertain moonlight the object in their arms appeared to me to be of a brilliant crimson, as if literally bathed in blood.

Without much ceremony, the bearers of this sinister burden half threw, half laid it down upon the ground, where it remained motionless, without sound and apparently without life. Yet alive it must have been, for I now heard the voice of one of the two figures saying, "Why don't we slit his throat for him? Then it will be a sure thing."

Now, in spite of all that I had seen of death and violence, I had by no means become reconciled to them; and whoever or whatever this helpless creature might be, I made up my mind that if I could help it I was not going to stand by and see murder done. And therefore, though I knew it was not the course of prudence, I had already felt to see that my pistols were clear in my belt, and was just about to step to the edge of the brush, with raised rifle, to call a halt in the proceedings, when to my relief a second voice answered, "Oh, nonsense, there's no need of that. Quashy's a good nigger; what do we want to kill him for? He's a clever nigger, too; he couldn't manage Satan. If he wasn't. Look here, Quashy, if we come back, after it's all over, and let you go, you'll never tell who kidnaped you. What do you say, now?" And an instant later the same voice added, "There, look at that. He's nearly shaking his black head off. Of course he won't tell. So what's the use of having blood on our hands?"

Somewhat grudgingly, as it seemed, his companion assented. "You're too cursed chicken-hearted," he complained, "but have it your own way. Only if we get into trouble, don't say I didn't warn you. Suppose somebody comes along and lets Quashy loose. You know what we would get from the major."

There followed silence, during which I saw one of the figures stoop over the dark mass on the ground. Then, to my relief, I heard the second voice again, "No fear. He couldn't start those lashings in a month. And as for anybody finding him and turning him loose, why you know yourself no one is coming to this Godforsaken spot. There isn't a chance in a million. Let the old boy lie, eh, Quashy? See, he's nodding his head; he doesn't want to go to the hot place just yet; do you boy?"

The reference to the gag, and the failure of the recumbent figure to speak, made part of the mystery clear. This third man, evidently a negro, was bound and gagged; and evidently, also, my eyes must have deceived me as to his wounds, or they could not have talked with such unconcern of leaving him and coming back later to release him. Apparently, also, the first and more bloodthirsty of the pair was now willing to yield to his companion's reasoning, for as if the matter were finally settled he suddenly exclaimed, "But I say, what a hoax on the old colonel. And he thinks all the time that he's fooling the major. Why, it's as good as a play."

The other, and clearly the more good-natured of the two, burst out into a roar of laughter. Then the pair became serious again. "Well," said the first voice, "we must get back to the Port and tell the major. Good-by, Quashy; about an hour after sunrise you'll see us again, and with our pockets full of gold."

I heard their footsteps retreating through the bushes, and then, after an interval, the sound of hoofs, gradually growing fainter in the distance. I left my hiding place, and with mingled feelings of curiosity and trepidation, made my way cautiously toward the spot where I imagined the abandoned negro to be lying. My sense of direction led me true, but even if it had not, I could hardly have missed, in the moonlight, the brilliant splash of crimson which had previously caught my eye. In amazement, I fell on my knees beside it, and all at once, with a great revulsion of feeling, I solved the mystery of my delusion. The figure was that of an inky-black negro, his protruding eyes staring up into mine with an expression of abject terror; but the crimson was nothing more terrible than the racing silks of a jockey—cap, jacket, breeches all of the same color, a startling and vivid red. And with my mind thus relieved, it was with a light heart that I drew my knife from my belt, slashed the thongs that bound him and then, though not without some difficulty, managed to remove the gag from his distended jaws. Immediately he gave a great sigh of relief, and struggling up into a sitting posture, he began rubbing his legs to bring back the deadened circulation. After which he peered intently into my face, and not recognizing me, inquired in a deep and guttural voice, "Who you?"

I did not at once reply. Indeed, I was so busy gazing at this strange creature that I only half comprehended his question. In stature about the size of a boy of thirteen, he was clearly no longer young, for when he removed his racing cap to straighten its visor, I could see that his black wool was shot and sprinkled with gray. His face was narrow and wizened, and he had the flat nose and thick lips of his race. None the less, however, I took an instinctive liking to him, for there was something open and cheerful in his glance, and in spite of the harrowing experience he had just undergone, there was still a quizzical twinkle in his eye. And having thus taken stock of this new-made acquaintance, I answered briefly that I was a stranger to the island, come to visit friends, and had been set ashore only a few minutes ago. At once he proceeded to bear out my good opinion of him by thanking me profusely and with a thoughtfulness which men of better birth and education do not always manage to display. Then, in much the same fashion as his captors had done, he suddenly smote his hand upon his thigh, and cried with hilarity, "Oh Lordy, what joke on major! This funny thing! This d—n funny thing!"

It did me good to see him, but to tell the truth it appeared to me that it was about time that I became a sharer in the secret of this excellent jest; and I therefore suggested that he might explain to me just where the joke came in.

"I jockey," he explained. "I ride Colonel Singleton's black devil Satan when nobody else can. This Satan bad nag, but I got way with him; I ascertain him and he ascertain me. Major Mostyn got bay mare Flyaway—very fast. Two week ago big sweepstakes; Colonel very wise; he no put me up on Satan—put 'nother boy. Satan so mad he r'ar up and throw boy and break his d—n leg; then run away himself and bump into fence and Flyaway win. Major Mostyn joke colonel; say, 'Why you no get a horse? Not a raging black devil?' Colonel pretend get mad; say to major, 'Satan best horse but he no like vercular sun; race you again two weeks, two hundred guineas, play or pay. All make great night at palace; have race at sunrise; Satan feel better then; nice and cool; beat Flyaway hollow.' Major say, 'All right.' Race one mile and quarter. Three days ago I ride Satan trial, very early in morning; he go so fast he fly. We think no one know, but major must hear. Tonight two friends of major grab me, ride me off, tie me, gag me, leave me here. They plan tonight colonel bet all his money on Satan. Morning come. No Quashy. If other boy ride Satan, so mad he break boy's neck. If no boy ride him, race play or pay, so Flyaway win by canter round alone. Either way, colonel lose, major win."

He had made the situation clear to me, and indeed it needed a lucid explanation to make me understand, for I was as yet quite unused to the strange ways of horse racing. The case appeared to be one of "diamond cut diamond" and I felt that it would be a pleasure to see the biters bit. "But suppose," I said to Quashy, "that they catch you again. It's a long time before sunrise."

"Tell Him," Quashy Said, "Now I Show Way."

He shook his head. "No fear for Quashy," he answered confidently. "I go around by way of beach; nobody see me. I stay in woods near track till daylight; then come fast." He paused for a moment, then added. "You do me big favor tonight. You do one more for colonel?"

I felt no great hesitation, for this is a world where, in spite of ourselves, it is hard to remain neutral; and already I felt that I was on the side of Quashy and his master, for while the colonel's plan of deceiving his adversaries was none too praiseworthy, still the course of action of Mostyn and his friends in kidnaping was infinitely worse. So I asked him what the favor might be.

Quashy pointed with one skinny arm toward the northeast. "You go town," he said. "You find colonel in big house, all lights. Buckra call him Palace Delight. You find colonel eating, drinking, maybe both. He big man, red face, big belly; all time eat, pretty soon die. You tell him what you see, what you do; you say 'Quashy all right; keep mouth shut; bet money like devil.' You do it?"

"Yes," I answered, "I'll do it. But the colonel never saw me before. He may not believe me."

Quashy grinned. "He believe you," he answered. "He know that sound like major." Then, tearing a bit of ribbon from his cap, he added, "If no believe, show this. Tell him Quashy send. Now I show you way."

Thus, a few moments later, I found myself walking along a very tolerable road toward the notorious Port of the Devil. It was lonely enough, and I kept a sharp lookout, but saw no one, and, indeed, few dwellings of any kind, until I reached the outskirts of the town. Here there were houses in plenty, but all of them paled before the magnificence of the Palace of Delight, a pretentious, three-story building, glittering with lights, and from which the sound of music issued invitingly. Presently I found myself within its doors. The manager, a plump and genial gentleman of color, made me welcome, and after coming to terms, he escorted me by means of an outside staircase to a room aloft, airy enough, though none too clean. Here I deposited my rifle and the bundle containing my few belongings, and again descended.

At the entrance to the main hall on the lower floor, I stood for a moment, surveying with interest the scene before me. The color, the lights, the noise, the laughter, all bewildered, and at the same time intoxicated and delighted me. The greater part of the crowd was gathered about a table across the room; at smaller tables, men and women were drinking.

I crossed the room, and peering through the crowd, caught a glimpse of a green table, marked with squares and numbers, and behind it an impassive mulatto, presiding over a boxlike structure, surmounted by a wooden wheel, while he chanted mechanically: "Make your bets, gentlemen; make your bets." I did not know then that this was the famous game of roulette, but the sight of the table covered with gold pieces, and the eager faces of the gamblers, thrilled and excited me. As the game progressed, I found that the crowd about the table was constantly changing, and as I drew nearer and nearer to the table, I saw that the center of attraction was a young man but little older than myself, fashionably dressed, and in front of him a glittering heap of guineas, doubloons and moidores. Evidently he was a heavy winner, and the crowd was applauding his luck. Presently I stood almost at his side, and as he glanced up and his eyes happened to meet mine, he threw me a most engaging smile. At once I was impressed by his good looks and by his generally prepossessing air, his light curly hair somewhat in disorder, his blue eyes looking out upon the world as though he were a friend to every one and expected to be treated as a friend in return. And now, as the mulatto once more chanted his stereotyped request for bets, the young man, who was fingering a pile of doubloons stacked before him, suddenly leaned toward me and asked abruptly:

"How old are you?"

Somewhat surprised, I answered "Nineteen." And with a quick gesture he moved the pile of gold out onto one of the spaces on the board. A moment later the mulatto announced that bets were closed, and wheel and ball started upon their journey; while I, understanding nothing of the play, was content to watch the young man's face until the wheel lessened its speed, and the ball, after a preliminary bump or two, came to rest with a sharp click. Then, to my astonishment, I heard the mulatto repeat the very same number—"nineteen"—and at once there followed huge confusion, exclamations of amazement and delight, and a babel of tongues that swelled almost to a roar. The reason for all this was soon apparent when the mulatto began handing over from the bank gold and gold, and still more gold, until it seemed to me that I had never seen so much money in my life before. As I learned later, a wonderful thing had happened; nineteen had actually been the winning number, and the bank was paying to the fortunate youth thirty-five times the sum he had deposited, his total winning amounting to several thousands of dollars. Handful by handful, as the money crossed the green table, he swept it toward him with the utmost nonchalance, until his pockets must have been filled to bursting; then, with another smile at me, he said gayly: "You have brought me good fortune. Let us pledge our better acquaintance in a glass of wine."

Slipping his arm through mine, he led the way toward one of the small tables in a sheltered corner of the hall, and we were soon seated together in privacy over a bottle of excellent wine.

Here we proceeded, with the ingenuousness of youth, to exchange confidences. His name, he told me, was George Lewis; his father and grandfather before him had owned a large plantation in the Westmoreland district of the island; and he had come out from England to learn how the estate was run. Journeying from Kingston a fortnight since, he had reached the Port of the Devil, intending to remain there for a night only, but the horse-racing, the gambling, the whole atmosphere of the place had, as he expressed it, "got into his blood;" and since his father did not know of his arrival, here he had been content to remain.

Fete Days Dependent on Church Sun Dial

In 1743 a meridian column was set up in the old Church of St. Sulpice, Paris, for determining the date on which Easter and other church fetes would fall. The column bears a long vertical mark extending down its center; this mark is prolonged on the floor. Together these two lines determine a vertical plane in space, which if sufficiently produced would include the earth's axis and through which the sun would pass at noontime as the earth rotated.

In order to make this event visible a small slit was cut through the roof of the church in the same meridian plane. Through it the sunlight penetrated, slanting downward toward the line below, and swept across it at noontime. As Easter approached, the sun's altitude in the heavens increased until the spot of sunlight finally crossed the line at the marked point. Since the other fetes followed Easter by an arbitrary lapse of time, the old meridian column, installed by Maurice de Sully, determined them all.—Scientific American.

Specific Gravity

The weight of any volume of substance compared with the weight of the same volume of pure water gives the specific gravity of that substance. Alcohol has a specific gravity of only .79, whereas lead has a specific gravity of 11.35 and mercury 13.60. Cedar wood has a specific gravity of only .61.

Wife's Faith in Columbus

If it be true that there is a woman in the background of every notable achievement, there seems to be justification in calling Dona Felipa, the wife of Christopher Columbus, that influence in the life of the man who was later to discover the Western world. When Columbus talked to her about his exploration enthusiasms, she was sympathetic and his ambitions appear to have found grateful nurture at their fireside. There is a tale of how Dona Isabella, Columbus' mother-in-law, produced an old box containing maps and logs—piously-kept relics of her husband's. It may be that something found in this box prompted in Columbus the conception, later to become a flaming article of faith, of a land beyond the horizon.—New York Times Magazine.

LOW RATES for time payments on these cars

ANY FAMILY entitled to credit may buy a General Motors car and pay for it while using it, under the GMAC Plan.

When time payments first became an accepted form of car purchase, General Motors organized its own finance company, the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, to make sure that the sale of its cars on time would be in the buyer's interest and that the finance charges would be fair.

GMAC rates have always been low; and the last reduction has saved General Motors' customers more than $12,000,000.

The General Motors line includes "a car for every purse and purpose"—a suitable model for every income. You can buy it out of income, paying no more than the cash delivered price, plus only the low GMAC financing charge. And the whole transaction is so conducted as to keep your goodwill and satisfaction.

MRS. ALBERT BERHOW DIED LAST MONDAY

Mrs. Albert Berhow died last Monday following the birth of the ninth child; heart failure causing her death. The family have the sincerest sympathy extended toward them in this time of sorrow. The High School contributed a very pretty wreath of flowers and the Junior Girls delivered them Tuesday afternoon. Verla Berhow is amember of the Junior Class.

Junior-Senior Banquet

The Junior-Senior Banquet was given in the U. B. Church basement Wednesday, May 11th. The Sophomore Class waited tables. The decorations were very pretty, mostly of black and gold colored crepe paper, aside from the wild flowers, tulips ferns and roses and orange candles decorated the table.

W. L. Thada was a Mason City caller Thursday.

Mesdames Conklin, Schneider, Wesenberg cooked for the banquet.

Alma Pals spent last week end at her home in Thornton.

Mrs. Frank Dominy was a Klemme caller Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Baker visited at the home of Mr. Baker's parents

Mrs. Earl Clark is visiting in Goodell this week.

Jay Griggs was a Ventura caller Sunday.

Mrs. Al Whittaker and baby are visiting at the Frank McNutt home.

Eula and Margaret Veenstra are visiting at the Frank Sandry home near Klemme.

Mrs. E. J. Schneider, Doris, Frederick, Robert, Verner Hamilton and at Marathon Monday and Tuesday.

Mrs. Baker has been sick and the doctor thought maybe an operation would be necessary.

Joe Cordes and lady friend, of Decorah spent the week end at the F. Cordes home.

Misses Liitschwager and Heinrech attended the Veishea at Ames Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lamer called at the Kahrs home at Ventura Sunday.

Baccalaureate is Sunday, Mayy 22 in the U. B. Church. Rev. Scott will deliver the speech.

Play Day at Goodell will be Wednesday afternoon of this week. Do not fail to come and see what our athletes can do.

Goodell played baseball at Swaledale Friday, the game ending in their favor 7 to 4. This was a very good game and our boys played real well but we certainly do not like to have an unfair umpire. We like to have a SQUARE deal as we always give Klemme defeated us 2 to 0 at the ball game played at Klemme Wednesday. This was also a very interesting and close game. A couple of our players were on the sick list the day before and some of our poor playing was due to that. But we've each wn one game so that is fair enough, altho there were a few errors that could have been corrected to the idea of some.

Summer Training Camps

A young army of 33,425 boys will play soldier for one month this summer in 53 camps conducted by Uncle Sam. The United States will give 33,425 omnths of military training to its youth. Measured in years that would be 2,785 years and 5 months. Measured in terms of regular army men who serve 30 years to retirement that would be equal to the services of 93 old-timers added together.

The boys attend these camps, not under compulsion but voluntarily. They go for the fun of camp life, swimming, riding and the wonderful entertainments planned for them, even more than they go for foot-drill. The C. M. T. C. is a great boon to the moral and physical character of youth.

Trouble Aplenty

Now that we are about to commercialize the television, probably the next thing will be a machine to read and register thought. When that time comes a lot of people are going to get in trouble.

Commendable Work

The work of the Wisconsin State Highway Commission in eliminating 41 dangerous railroad highway grade crossings as a part of its 1926 highway program is commendable. This policy of making crossings safer has long been a problem, but it has been only in recent years that such definite action has been taken. Wisconsin has thus set a good example for other state highway commissios to follow in planning their good rads prgram.

With the increasing amount of tourist travel, and the growing number of bus and trucking lines, the crossing has taken an increasing toll in lives and injuries. Every state is confronted with this problem and all are seeking its solution.

Respect and Support

Citizens of the United States have never made the religious convictions of a candidate for president a test of his qualifications, therein conforming with the constitutional provision which prohibits such a test. Three of the greatest of the presidents belonged to no church—Jefferson, to whom more than any other man religious liberty is due; Jackson and Lincoln. But, whether church members or not, whether religious or not, religión has always had the respect and support of American presidents.

WOULD SEEM THAT DAUDET IS PEEVED

Quotidien, a Socialist daily, and l'Humanite, a Communist daily, in Paris recently had the carelessness to gibe about the big royalist demonstrations throughout France.

At Nimes 35,000 people shouted with one accord the old "vive le roi" and in Bordeaux there was even a greater concourse, unmistakably enthusiastic about the idea of the king's return.

The above-mentioned papers jeered a little at these meetings and they ridiculed Daudet, the royalist chief. "Daudet thinks that France can be saved only by a king and the king's fellows," said the papers.

And this is a translation of Daudet's answer:

"Just wait awhile, Muscovite buffoons and bandits, and you will see the king's fellows at work. Once we get started nothing will stop us till every one of you dangles from lampposts, you d—d slaves of putrid democracy, you rascals without honor, humanity or sense of justice."

Surgical Movies

Motion pictures of surgical operations in natural colors have been obtained in Berlin, Germany. A three-color process is used. Reflectors concentrate powerful light on the operating table. The camera is self-cranking, the electric motor drive being controlled by an operator who watches the progress of the operation through a telescope.

Paper Buildings

Paper and seven other ingredients which are being kept secret are used in a new cheap building material invented by a Serbian sculptor, Yovan Peshitch. The product is lighter than brick and is said to be fire and water proof, fire merely softening it a little. Its only limitation is that it is unsuitable for buildings of more than two stories.

ONLY FITTEST CAN SURVIVE IN WILD

Existence Passed in Constant Warfare.

All nature seems to be a battle ground. The creatures that rove the woods, fly in the air, swim in the sea and streams, creep, or crawl, all seem to spend their lives in fear of something bigger and stronger gobbling them up.

To live they must keep their wits about them and safety depends on wariness. Even the largest creatures, writes Oliver G. Pike, F. Z. S., in London Tit-Bits, have enemies, while most, if not all, have learned to look upon man as the creature to be most avoided. Young animals have so much to learn, and such a short time in which to learn it, before their parents desert them and cast them adrift, that it is a wonder so many survive.

In a lifetime spent among wild creatures I have seen many narrow escapes, and I have known that when an animal does escape from an enemy, even if it is badly wounded, it will probably live longer than most of its companions, for with each encounter won the creature becomes more artful and will not run into that trap again.

I was once resting on the margin of a Highland loch, and before me numbers of gulls were circling over the water. The largest of these, a powerful great black-backed gull, dived to the water, and a moment or two later rose with something in his beak. My field-glasses showed this to be an eel about 18 inches in length. The bird had captured a prize, and one would have thought that such a strong bird would have made short work of it.

He was flying across the water, no doubt intending to land, but he had not gone far when I saw he was in difficulties. He fluttered frantically, and seemed to be falling towards the water, when he did the only thing he could to save his life. He let go of the eel, and the latter dropped to the loch. When the eel found itself captured by an enemy much bigger than itself, it twisted tightly round the bird's neck, and if the latter had not released it he would have been strangled.

I have known a similar thing happen to a heron which often fished on a certain lake. In this case, too, the bird would have been killed, but it released the eel just in time. Now, the heron is not the kind of bird that would be caught again by this trick, yet an eel is food that he cannot very well resist, and a few days later this heron caught another.

This time he captured it across its middle and held it in a firm grip with his long neck well extended. For three or four minutes he stood in this position, as motionless as a statue. He did not want to be strangled again, and he did not want to lose his meal. What could he do?

Suddenly he tossed the creature into the air, caught it deftly, either by its bead or tail—I am not sure which—and then began to swing it backwards and forwards like a driver cracking his whip! There was no hope for that eel. A minute later it was bruised and broken. The great bird worked it round in his beak until the head pointed down his throat, and with a few violent gulps it disappeared from view.

They'll Study Timber Wolf

A rather unusual hunting trip is being undertaken by two eastern sportsmen, William H. Newson of New York city and F. O. Dufour, professor of civil engineering at Lafayette university, Easton, Pa. They have invaded the broad expanses of northern Quebec wilderness to spend the winter hunting and studying timber wolves. They will devote their entire time to this sport, and work to gather further data on the life habits of this wild life destroyer. It is reported that timber wolves are extremely plentiful throughout that district this year.

Fish Struck by Lightning

One of the latest freaks displayed by lightning is the paralysis of 15 fish reported to the United States bureau of fisheries from one of its stations in Maine. After a severe thunderstorm the fish were found lying in the bottom of the pond apparently lifeless. After raising them to the surface it was found they could move their heads but the bodies were paralyzed. After several days their condition was unchanged. The other fish in the ponds were affected only by a loss of appetite for two days immediately after the storm.

Puts High Value on Pet

The fabled pet that is worth its weight in gold was found at Chicago when Dr. G. F. Bicknell refused that value for Jimmie, his pet canary. The bird has the freedom of the house and has a number of accomplishments, but his greatest is serving as a reserve alarm clock. When the alarm rings, it is Doctor Bicknell's custom to roll over for forty winks more, but Jimmie flits in, perches on the bridge of the Bicknell nose, and starts singing a canary reveille.

Surgeon's Possibilities

Electric tools for surgeons are reducing the time required for operations, decreasing the shock to patients and endowing the operator's hands with keener skill. One of these is a "bone mill" driven by motor with various saw and grinder attachments. It enables surgeons to do bone work hitherto considered almost impossible.

"Fit as a Fiddle Now" Says Popular Iowa Chef

Long hours and hard work sap strength and health. Tanlac helped D. M. Torrance back to normal. In fine fettle now, he gives due credit to this wonder tonic

D. M. Torrance, 709 Park St., Des Moines, Iowa, is a live wire, full of life and energy. Three years ago long hours and hard work took toll of his health. "Standing close to a big range all day taxes the strength," he says. "It's just like standing bareheaded under a tropic sun. A chef needs lots of quiet and rest after the day. Sound sleep is essential. The first thing I noticed wrong was that the kitchen heat and hurry made me nervous. Then I could not sleep at night. After that came other complications which ran me down. I could not stand the wear and tear of those conditions longer.

"Although my nerves were all tingling and jumpy, I felt listless and drowsy. I thought my days as a chef were numbered and that I would have to change my business. But soon after starting on Tanlac I began to pick up and feel really alive and strong. Now I am entirely free from the headaches, nervousness and other distressing symptoms which had made life a nightmare. I've put on 20 pounds and feel fit as a fiddle. All thanks to Tanlac."

If overwork or neglect have taken toll of your health, start in on Tanlac today. It is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from barks, herbs and roots. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Too much sympathy that genuinely exists remains dormant.

Keep out of the go-getter's way, if you can't do anything else.

Called "Funny Face" Cried Self To Sleep

Miss Gussie Frutchzweig, Bronx, N. Y., writes: "For months I tried in vain to clear my face of horrible pimples. Once I overheard my dearest friend refer to me as 'pimple-face' and everyone laughed. I cried bitterly. I read about CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS being used successfully to clear complexions when due to the poisons from constipation and finally tried them. Well, my picture tells its own story, doesn't it?"

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS move the bowels in a gentle manner free from pain and eliminate the poisons of constipation from the system. These poisons, unless removed, are absorbed by the blood and appear in the form of skin eruptions and blemishes.

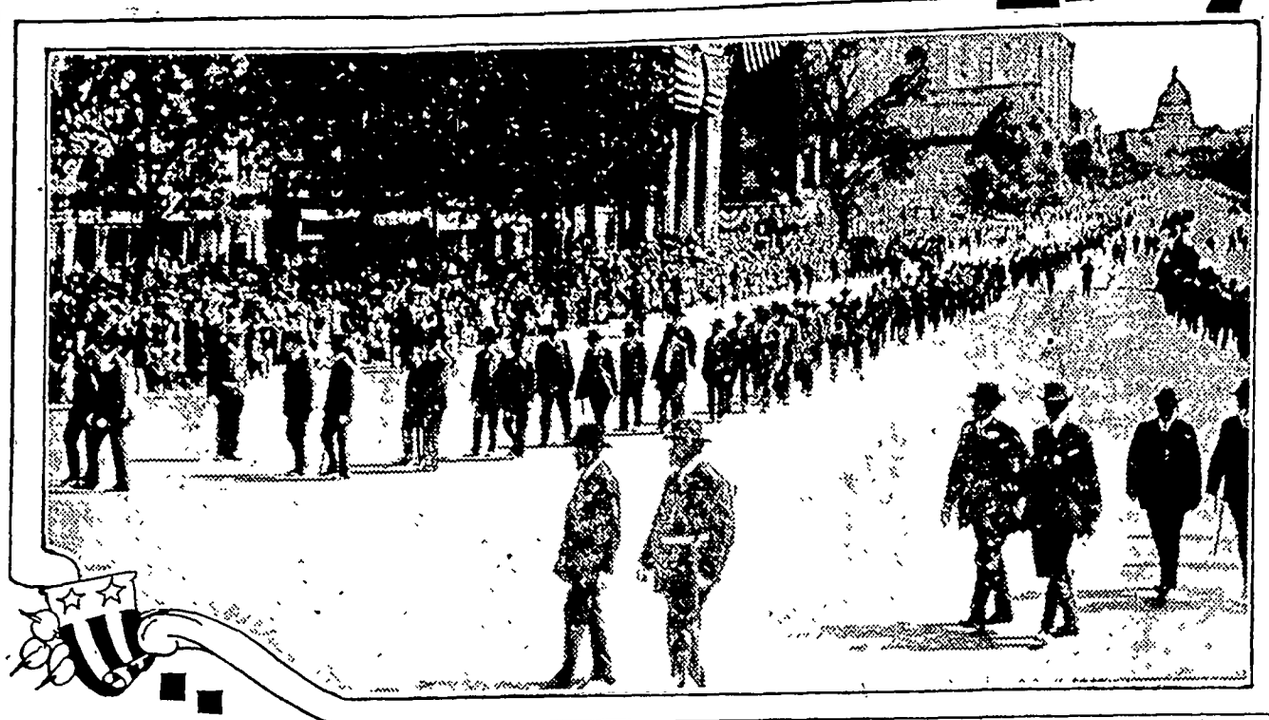
Memorial Day, 1927



PARADE OF THE VETERANS ©G.V. Buck

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ALL over the world—wherever there are men and women who claim the privilege of American citizenship—May 30 will be observed as the day on which we honor our soldier dead. For Memorial Day has outgrown its original significance as a day of remembrance for the men who wore the Blue and those who wore the Gray in the greatest civil war in history, the War Between the States of 1861 to 1865. America's soldier dead lie buried in many lands—in Cuba, in the Philippines, in Mexico and in France, Belgium and England.

In the environs of the City of Mexico there is a little cemetery in which a small granite shaft stands, bearing these words: "To the memory of the American soldiers who perished in this valley in 1847, whose bones, collected by the country's orders, are here buried—750." Memorial Day is a day of remembrance for those 750 Americans as much as it is for any of the hundreds of thousands whose graves in cemeteries in every state of the Union will be covered with flowers on May 30 of this year, 1927. Since 1918 the world-wide significance of Memorial Day for Americans has been more apparent because of the long rows of white crosses in England and France and Belgium. In a military cemetery at Romagne-sous-Montfaucon in the Meuse-Argonne region of France there are 14,045 of these crosses. In the Oise-Aisne cemetery there are 5,934; at St. Mihiel, 4,141; in the Aisne-Marne, 2,212; at the Somme, 1,816; at Suresnes, 1,500; in Flanders Field in Belgium, 305, and at Brookwood, England, 437.

So it is in remembrance of those 30,502 American soldiers, who are buried in eight European cemeteries, and the 46,214, who have been brought home to rest beneath the soil of their native land, as well as the countless host of the dead heroes of the Civil war, the Indian wars, the Spanish-American and every other conflict in which the United States has over been engaged, that Memorial Day will be celebrated this year.

If there is any one Memorial Day ceremony which is outstanding it undoubtedly will be that in the great amphitheater in Arlington cemetery near Washington where President Coolidge will voice the nation's tribute to its soldier dead. Around him will be grouped high government officials and ambassadors of foreign countries. But it will not be the presence of great men which will make the Memorial Day services there notable. It is the place itself which is the incarnation of the spirit of Memorial Day—Arlington cemetery, where stands the memorial to the "Unknown Dead" of the Civil war and where was placed the greatest of all American shrines, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Of all national celebrations, Americans have best preserved the original connotation of "holy day" for "holiday" in the case of Memorial Day. Untouched by the commercialism and the materialism which has crept into the observance of other special days, it has a dignity and a spirituality all of its own. Perhaps the fact that it was conceived in love and perpetuated in reverence has made it so.

For it was the touch of a woman's hand, laying flowers upon the grave of an enemy—perhaps the very one who was responsible for the death of some one near and dear to her—, whose example of loving kindness and forgiveness for past hatreds eventually brought about the observance of Memorial Day. In 1866 Miss Lizzie Rutherford of Columbus, Miss., suggested to the members of the Ladies' Aid society, who had been carefully attending the graves of Confederate dead, that April 26 be set aside each year as a special day for decorating these graves.

Her suggestion was at once adopted by the society and on April 26, 1866, the first Memorial day service was held in St. Luke's Methodist church in Columbus with Col. James M. Ramsey as the orator of the day. On that day the graves of both Union and Confederate soldiers buried near Columbus were decorated with flowers. In the meantime letters to women in other southern towns resulted in the adoption of April 26 for a general observance of a memorial day for the soldier dead.

In the spring of 1867 a New York newspaper published a paragraph in which this brief statement was made, "The women of Columbus, Miss., have shown themselves impartial in their offerings made to the memory of the dead. They strewed flowers alike on the graves of Confederate and National soldiers." In 1867 the nation was still bleeding from the wounds of the war, and anger, hatred and suspicion were still rife. But this action by the women in the South sent a thrill throughout the North and the following year, Gen. John A. Logan, national commander of the G. A. R., designated May 30 for the purpose of strewing with flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of comrades.

How General Logan came to issue the famous order to his comrades of the G. A. R. which resulted in the observance of May 30 as Memorial Day, or "Decoration Day," as it was first known and as it is still often referred to, was related a few years ago by his widow, for many years known as "The Grand Old Lady of Washington." The story, as told by Mrs. Logan, follows:

General Orders No. 11

"Headquarters Grand Army of the Republic,
Adjutant General's Office,
446 14th Street, Washington, D. C.
May 5, 1868.

"General Orders, No. 11.

"I. The 30th day of May, 1868, is designated for the purpose of strewing with flowers, or otherwise decorating, the graves of comrades who died in defence of their country during the late rebellion, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village, hamlet and churchyard in the land. In this observance, no form of ceremony is prescribed, but posts and comrades will, in their own way, arrange such fitting services and testimonials of respect, as circumstances may permit.

"We are organized, comrades, as our regulations tell us, for the purpose among other things, 'of preserving and strengthening those kind and fraternal feelings which have bound together the soldiers, sailors and marines, who united together to suppress the late rebellion.' What can aid more to assure this result than by cherishing tenderly the memory of our heroic dead, who made their breasts a barricade between our country and its foes. Their soldier lives were the reveille of freedom to a race in chains, and their deaths the tattoo of rebellious tyranny in arms. We should guard their graves with sacred vigilance. All that the consecrated wealth and taste of the nation can add to their adornment and security, is but a fitting tribute to the memory of her slain defenders. Let no wanton foot tread rudely on such hallowed grounds. Let pleasant paths invite the coming and going of reverent visitors and fond mourners. Let no vandalism of avarice or neglect, no ravages of time, testify to the present or to the coming generations that we have forgotten, as a people, the cost of a free and undivided republic.

"If other eyes grow dull, and other hands slack, and other hearts grow cold in the solemn trust, ours shall keep it well, as long as the light and warmth of life remain to us.

"Let us, then, at the time appointed, gather around their sacred remains, and garland the passionless mounds above them with the choicest flowers of springtime; let us raise above them the dear old flag they saved from dishonor; let us, in this solemn presence, renew our pledges to aid and assist those whom they have left among us a sacred charge upon a nation's gratitude—the soldier's widow and orphan.

"II. It is the purpose of the commander-in-chief to inaugurate this observance, with the hope that it will be kept up from year to year, while a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of his departed comrades. He earnestly desires the public press to call attention to this order, and lend its friendly aid in bringing it to the notice of comrades in all parts of the country in time for simultaneous compliance therewith.

"III. Department commanders will use every effort to make this order effective.

"By order of
John A. Logan,
Commander-in-Chief.

"Official: N. P. Chipman, Adjutant General."

Chicago Journal of that day, invited a party consisting of his niece Miss Anna Wilson (later Mrs. Horatia May), Miss Farrar, his fiancee (all now dead); General Logan, and myself, to visit the battlefields around Richmond in March, 1868. The importance of some measures then pending in congress prevented General Logan, at the last moment, from going, but he insisted upon my going with these friends. We made a tour of every battlefield, fortification, temporary barricade and cemetery around the erstwhile Confederate capital, driving about in old tumble-down vehicles, drawn by lean, jaded horses, driven by thinly clad, poorly fed men, who had survived the long siege of Richmond. We saw the colored men, women and children digging out the lead and iron which had been shot into the fortifications, almost the only support of these wretched people. Visiting cemeteries and church yards, we were deeply touched by the withered wreaths and tiny flags that marked the graves of the Confederate dead. In the bleak March wind and light-falling snow, the desolation seemed most oppressive.

Returning together to the old Willard hotel where we then lived, sitting in our parlor after dinner, we recounted to General Logan the incidents of the trip and how deeply touched we were by the devastation and ravishes of war in the churchyard around an old historic church in Petersburg, every foot of the ground seemed occupied by the graves of the Confederate dead. Upon them lay wreaths, once beautiful flowers, now crumbling, which had been placed there by loving hands. Little faded Confederate flags marked each grave, mute evidence of the devotion of the southern people to their loved and lost. General Logan was much impressed by our description, saying, "The Greeks and Romans in the day of their glory were wont to honor their hero dead by chaplets of laurel and flowers, as well as in bronze and stone," and that as commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic and member of congress from Illinois, which he then was, he would issue an order establishing Memorial Day, then called "Decoration Day." He declared at the same time that he believed that he could secure the adoption of a joint resolution making it a national holiday and a national ceremony. He then took up a pencil and paper and wrote the matchless order No. 11.

As a result of this order formal exercises were held at Arlington, Va. (later the site of the present Arlington National cemetery) on May 30, 1868, the principal ceremony being the decoration with flags and flowers of the monument to the "Unknown Dead," a memorial that had been erected to the memory of 2,111 unidentified dead found on the fields of Bull Run and the route to Rappahannock. The day was also observed in other parts of the country by strewing flowers on the soldiers' graves, in accordance with General Logan's order, but the term Memorial Day or Decoration Day had not yet been adopted.

The idea spread rapidly, however, and at the ceremonies held by the G. A. R. in Monument cemetery in Philadelphia on May 29, 1875, it was recorded that "the annual floral decoration of the graves of our dead soldiers has become a national custom." For it was doing much to heal the wounds of the war and, in uniting to honor their dead, the North and the South were forgetting the bitterness of a few short years before. One of the most significant bits of evidence of this occurred in Brooklyn when on the eve of May 30, 1877, a great throng assembled in the Academy of Music to hear the chief orator of the day—Judge Roger A. Pryor, formerly brigadier general in the Confederate army.

From that time on Memorial Day celebrations were increasingly a symbol of a nation reunited. Especially was this true of those which followed the Spanish-American war, in which sons of men who had worn the Blue fought and died beside sons of men who had worn the Gray. And it was even more true of Memorial Day celebrations since 1919. The World war has left America this heritage—a Memorial Day of broader and deeper meaning than it has ever had before. It knows no North, no South, no East, no West. It honors the fighting men of no particular war, but of all wars. It is a trumpet call to all Americans to pay reverent tribute to the memory of their honored dead—the AMERICAN soldier.

VELVET APPLIQUE IN BOLD DESIGN; MILLINERY TAKES TO WIDE BRIMS

WHILE velvet in itself is not a novelty, the fact that it is playing an all-year-round engagement on the stage of fashion is decidedly novel and modern. It is significant that prominent creators catering to the fashionables and elite of society in Paris whose decisions are generally accepted as setting style are paying much attention to velvet. This is true not only in regard to velvet as a trimming, but velvet jackets and coats are quite the smart style item of the moment.

Creating no end of excitement among those who aspire to the unusual are the new-vogue slender pastel-colored velvet coats. They are certainly lovely and one can readily foresee the triumphs they will score in the coming months. Just now they are being worn over matching crepe frocks, but later they will, no doubt, top frocks of sheer flowery prints. Short velveteen jackets are also modish, especially with silk plaited skirts.

As to velvet in millinery, it is scheduled to trim the majority of wide-brimmed black milan straws. The large drooping horsehair capelines in lovely colorings, simply trimmed with wide velvet ribbon are a joy of summer promise.

Used in a trimming way on frocks and coats, velvet shows a distinguishing mark of chic. Applique velvet scrolls and circles enhance many a costume of crepe or satin. In the instance of the models in the picture thus embellished, the designer uses for both the dress to the right and the cloak to the left black velvet on black, for all-black is in supreme favor with the haute couture of the French capital.

Another stunning effect is the black dress elaborated with a rich applique done in royal blue velvet.

Colorful crepe frocks to which the velvet design is perfectly matched, are also in high favor. A Lanvin green garnitured with velvet of selfsame shade is charming. A navy blue crepe with navy velvet patterning is handsome and practical.

A close second to black is beige and very wonderful are coats and ensembles created of crepe in this color, combined with velvet in matching shade.

With the Parisienne a favorite is the beige crepe or crepe-back luster satin frock over which is worn a slender coat of the material which is all-over quilted, then collared and cuffed with matching velvet, with the added attraction of a big velvet ribbon bow.

Wide brims? The large hat is not only a summer fashion to be, but it is an immediate spring mode. Surely the capriciousness of millinery is manifesting itself in the matter of brims this season. The pendulum swings from the brimless to the wide, wider, widest brims. Not that the caplike snug shape is losing its popularity, not at all, but the mode now includes both types in its program.

As to the favorite wide-brim hat, it is undoubtedly the large black milan straw, such as is the stunning model in the center of this group. Just such a one should be included in every wardrobe of hats for immediate wear and the coming summer. Black satin borders and bands this elegant milan, two sparkling ornaments completing the effectiveness.

Velvet is regarded very smart as a hat trimming. It is velvet which so handsomely bands the crown of the huge-brimmed model shown first in this picture. The rhinestone semi-band shows off resplendently against its velvet background.

We are so accustomed to seeing the tiny snug crochet hat that a broad-brim crochet type such as is pictured at the top to the right seems almost a novelty by way of contrast. This exquisite crochet visca is turned up at the back, has a fabric facing and a grosgrain ribbon band.

A wide-brimmed leghorn is always apropos for summer. The one in the picture, being finished and trimmed in a tailored way with handsome black taffeta, will be in taste with either one's suit or one's flowery chiffon frock.

Striped ribbon in enjoying a big vogue this season. It is therefore very modish for the hat below to the right to be banded with colorful striped grosgrain.

Summer will witness large drooping horsehair capelines in the full measure of their lovely coloring and transparency. Velvet ribbon in same tone as the hat is heralded as a favorite trimming for these exquisitely dainty shapes.

6 things to understand about used car allowances

1 When you trade-in your used car for a new car, you are after all making a purchase, not a sale. You are simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of the new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value; i. e., what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

4 The largest allowance is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not.

5 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

6 First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

OBITUARY OF REV. GREIMANN

that he labored more zealously in the span of his life than we who are still in the world of sin and death. He was a better man than we are in many ways. Often we marvelled at his fortitude, tact, skill in handling difficult problems, and above all, his fearlessness and tireless endurance. Whatever he chose to do, was done right, there was no shirking, no sidestepping, nothing done by halves. It was thus in his home, in the congregational duties and whatever was entrusted to him.

"An example to all, he yet would accept no merits and credits. He did not desire to be served, but to serve others, and in answer to expressions of gratitude he might quote Luke 17,10: 'When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say we are unprofitable servants, we have done that which was our duty to do.' Let us not overlook that he often neglected his own well-deserved leisure and somewhat impaired health to do others a favor. We owe him more than we may suspect, and that undoubtedly applies specially to the congregations which he served. Let us not withhold our gratitude in voice and deed from the bereaved and distressed family now in their great calamity. And may the Lord and God, our Savior, Jesus Christ, guard and keep them and us all blamelessly unto the resurrection of the body, to the glory of His holy name."

Card of Thanks

The family and relatives wish to express their sincere appreciation of gratitude to all who stood by them so faithfully and were ever ready with hand and heart and voice, day and night, helping during the illness and death of Rev. Greimann, easing the weight and distress and sorrow in the hours of greatest tribulation. For the wonderful sympathy and love and care expressed in word and deed unstintingly, we extend our heartfelt thanks committing all of you, as loved ones, to the grace of God, who will reward you a hundred fold for every kind word and deed. —Mrs. H. H. Greiman and children; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Greiman, sr., and family.

Surely Some Occasions When Lie Is Justified

The deepest recesses of the heart grow warm toward the bishop of Southwell. This British ecclesiastic justifies a lie which is uttered under certain circumstances. There are few human beings but do condone, in themselves, certain untruths. And to have public approval of this bishop, expressed in an address to Nottingham (Eng.) teachers, is comforting to a degree.

The bishop of Southwell, however, does not go far enough, according to the quoted text of his remarks, in his justification of a lie. From the cabled quotation the bishop, seemingly would be prepared only "to exonerate a person who tells a lie to save an innocent life, if I thought it was reasonably sure that not to lie would mean the loss of such a life."

We believe the moral code of many normal human beings, laymen or men of the cloth, permits a wider latitude than this. But, to the credit of the bishop, there are not so many who will admit any such feeling to the public, even to the extent "of saving life." What harm is possible in telling an innocent child that its father is ill, when one knows he is suffering from overstimulation? That certainly is a lie, unless we would quibble with words, and no life is involved. But the faith of a child may be at stake.

The bishop of Southwell probably would not be willing to condone such a lie, as he "deprecated, for instance, such untruth as 'the doctor has brought us a new baby,'" according to the news cable. Doesn't the bishop believe very young children may know too much at too early an age for their own good? And, believing this, would he not approve the harmless employment of harmless fiction? Where truth results in a disservice and no harm is done by expressing a lie, why tell the truth?

This distinguished English divine said he did not believe in telling children legends about Santa Claus "in such a way as to make them believe that the stories were true." Why not repeat the legends surrounding Santa Claus, when we all know they are true, and when a great many of us have ourselves seen the merry old soul?

Just Dog

A primary school teacher once made an oral composition assignment to her third grade. The pupils were to discuss the subject of dogs, give the descriptions of their canine pets, names, ages, breeds, etc.

One youngster whose name was James completed a long recital about his dog Tiger, but forgot to mention its stock.

"James, you didn't tell us what kind of a dog Tiger is," reminded the teacher.

"Oh, yessum—I forgot. Well, he is part bull," said the lad.

"What is the other part?" he was asked.

The boy studied for a while and answered: "Oh, just dog, I guess."

Uphold Human Sacrifice

A youth who vanished from his parents' kraal in the Elydsdorp district of the Transvaal, South Africa, was murdered as a sacrifice for rain. Witch doctors burned the body at night on a pile of medicinal roots on a hilltop. The police were unable to make headway with their investigations, because rain fell almost immediately after the sacrifice. The parents would have lodged a complaint if the drought had continued, but now they glory in the fact that the sacrifice of their child had the desired effect, and they have refused to divulge any information concerning the culprits.

Monument to Apple

The craze to erect monuments has in late years been extended to cover memorial shafts to such things as hogs, chickens, cows, oranges, corn, etc. But the first monument to the apple, it is claimed, was recently unveiled at Cornelia, Ga. Incidentally, it is said to be the largest replica of that fruit ever made. The "apple" is of steel, measures 22 feet in circumference, and weighs 5,200 pounds. It surmounts a pillar. An inscription on the base reads: "Habersham County, Georgia, the Home of the Big Red Apple." This odd monument was made possible by local apple growers.

Spoiling Her Drive

Suzanne Lenglen, the French professional tennis champion, said at a luncheon in New York:

"I am very fond of golf, but when I took it up in Nice everybody laughed at me. Everybody said I'd be a failure.

"The first day I played at the Nice Country club I was getting ready to tee off when Baron De Malpurgo ran out of the clubhouse and shouted excitedly:

"'Mademoiselle! Mademoiselle Suzanne! Be sure to save me all the worms you turn up—I'm going fishing.'"

Prisoners Have Journal

Produced by prisoners in Wakefield prison, Yorkshire, England, a weekly newspaper is being published. Its circulation is confined to the institution. The paper is named "The Venturer," and contains topical articles, life sketches, prison gossip and the general news of the week. There is a correspondence column and the prisoners vie with each other for literary supremacy. "Wakefield prison is mainly for young people," said a home office official, "and special training is emphasized there more than is possible in other prisons."

The "hookey" season is opening up.

Electric Rates are 52 Per Cent Cheaper if You Consider the Lessened Purchase Power of the Dollar

A leading authority has recently made the statement that electricity is today being furnished in his country at prices that average 52 per cent under the prices of 1913. This is due to the lower average cost per kilowatt hour of electricity, lessened purchasing power of the dollar today as compared with 1913—and the tremendous growth of the electric light and power industry which today has an output SIX TIMES as large as in 1910 and now employs THREE TIMES the number of employes in this service.

It is expected that during the next ten years the growth of this industry will be even greater because oday 38 per cent of the power requirements of the nation are furnished by electricity and only about one-half of the homes are electrically lighted and hardly a start has been made in furnishing lighting and power to the farms.

With the increase in the distribution of electricity its cost to the users can be expected to continue to decrease. Compared to nay other useful commdity electricity is the cheapest and within the reach of all.

Nothing is so cheap as eletcricity

Respectfully.

WILL MAKE TOUR TO MEMBERS OF BABY BEEF CLUB

Tour Will Be Headed By J. S. Quist Of The Club Department

Plans have been made for the Baby Beef Club tour to be made in Hancock County Monday, June 6th Mr J S. Quist of the Club Depart-ment will be here to help. Every Baby Beef Club member will be visited.

The first stop will be made at the M Townsend farm west of Britt, promptly at 9:00 o'clock. It is hop-ed that all club members can be here at that time.

The members of the other clubs in the county are urged to go on this trip. Some training will be given in judging and at this time we will start keeping the records in order to determine who is to be chosen on the judging team. There are twenty-eight calves in the club this year. It will certainly be interesting to see the calves and see the way they have been developed.

HANCOCK COUNTY FAIR DATES SET FOR SEPT. 13, 14, 15, 16

Home Furnishing Projects Will Be Given Booths This Year

The dates for the Hancock County Fair have been set for September 13, 14, 15 and 16. Plans are being made for a big show. The 4-H Club show will be bigger than ever. Plenty of prize money will be offered so that it will be well-worth while to the club members. The regular township booths will not be put on this year, but in their place the township women will exhibit the results of the Home Furnishing project. It is hoped that every township will put on this exhibit, is the wish of fair officials.

BAYSIDE AMUSEMENT PARK TO OPEN FOR SEASON SUNDAY

Hancock County Band Engaged For Opening Day At Resort

The Bayside Amusement Park at Clear Lake, Iowa, will open next Sunday, May 29th, for the 1927 season. On this opening day the Hancock County Band, uder the direction of Mr. A. Felix, will furnish the music. It is a large band and several concerts will be played afternoon and night. A ball game will be played at three o'clock in the Bayside Park. Gallagher's O-P team will play a good fast semi-pro team which the committee is selecting. The ball park is being overhauled this week and will be in fine shape for the first game of the season, May 29th.

The Bayside manager, Mr. Ritz, has booked a number of entertaining attractions which will be presented on the open-air stage in the afternoon ad evening These vaudeville acts are free to everyone in the park. Attractions are always booked that will please the children as well as the grownups.

Roller skating is one form of amusement at Bayside every afternoon and evening Skaters will find the music exceptionally good this season beginning Sunday.

A new fun house has been added to the attractions at Bayside Park, the merry-go-round has been repainted and workmen have things in shape for the opening day.

The lake is higher and bathing is fine. Visitors are welcome to use the free picnic grounds and tables and the children's playground.

ATTRACTIVE

All over the country has come a much needed awakening to the fact that towns, as well as people, must be made to look attractive.

More strangers pass through our towns in a week nowadays than were wont to pass in a year. These travelers will always judge a town, as they would a person, by first appearances, and miss any hidden charm that further acquaintance might reveal.

Klemme has much natural beauty, an attractive park, many fine homes, well-kept lawns and gardens, beautiful trees, vary-colored flower beds, etc., but it could easily be made more attractive. The first step would be to tidy up generally, to make vacant lots look attractive by special planting and to remove unsightly billboards and to clean up alleys and streets.

The tourist season is on; let's leave our visitors a pleasant memory of Klemme, in Iowa.

In Memory

We can but halt a moment, as we cross the threshold of the beautiful month of May, in silent honor of those who gave their all that we might prosper and live in a world of happiness and peace. "Their" day comes in May. A single day out of a year of length—yet more hearts and minds, and love, will surrender on Decoration Day than on any other of the year.

The torn hearts of the mothers who lost their "boys" on the battlefields of Europe will rest easier as the Almighty casts His reflection over the world on Decoration Day. The graves of those "boys" will again feel the tears of the loved ones they left behind.

No honor is too great for those who laid down their lives in the wars of our nation, since its birth. No flowers are beautiful enough to grace the graves of our Soldiers.

It is our prayer, and the prayer of countless others in all parts of the world, that Decoration Day, this year, will serve to tender the resting places of our great, and ease many heavy hearts.

PLANS BEING MADE FOR ANNUAL PICNIC

FARM BUREAU PICNIC TO BE HELD AT STATE PARK

Plans Have Been Made To Hold Bureau Picnic June 15th

The date for the Hancock County Farm Bureau Picnic has been definitely set for Wednesday, June 15 and will be held at the Eagle Lake State Park.

W. F. Schilling will be the principal speaker. One of the main features of the program will be the pageant, "Iowa, the Garden Spot of America." Several hundred people from all parts of Hancock County will take part in this pageant.

GIRLS CLUB CAMP

Plans are developing rapidly for the Girls Club Camp to be held at Clear Lake June 7, 8 and 9. Enrollments are already coming in. It is hoped that every club in Hancock County will be able to send their two members and leader to this camp. A good program is being arranged and a good time is assured to everyone.

Good Roads

With the automobile has come our remarkable road system. Twenty years ago we had no paved highways through the country. Today paved roads aggregate tens of thousands of miles, and it will be but a few years until unbroken pavement on several routes will stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific, just as it now reaches from Canada to Mexico on the Western Coast.

4-H CLUB TO HAVE RALLY DAY AT BUREAU PICNIC

Speaker Will Be Present To Address Members Of Clubs

The 4-H Club Rally Day and the Farm Bureau Picnic will be combined this year. It was thought that this would give more people an opportunity to attend both events. The Club Rally program will be held in the forenoon, at which time the election of club officers will be held and probably a club speaker will be there to talk to the boys and girls. All club members should remember this date and plan to attend, June 15 at Eagle Lake State Park.

HANCOCK COUNTY HOGS WORTH LARGE FORTUNE

County Agent's Report Shows What Three Months Business Figures

Over three hundred thousand dollars worth of hogs alone were shipped thru six of the ten livestock shipping associations of Hancock County during the first three months of 1927, according to a report issued by County Agent L. T. Nutty. This represents the value of shipments from Klemme, Crystal Lake, Garner, Stilson, Britt and Kanawha. The reports from the other associations are not available, but it is known that a large number of carloads were shipped through them. Over 172 carloads were shipped by these associations for 856 owners.

Garner lead the list with 58 loads of hogs and Klemme was a close second with 45½ loads.

The shipment of cattle through these associations would also run into large figures.

It is certainly interesting to note the increase in shipments through associations and to see that the livestock producers have begun to realize that the shipping associations are real cooperative marketing agencies.

"OUST" ROOSTERS FROM FLOCK

They Should Go As Soon As Breeding Season Is Over

Infertile eggs will keep much longer than fertile eggs and will stand up better for trade during warm weather, states Roy L. Watkins, poultry extension specialist, Iowa State College, Ames, in advocating the disposal of all cockerels as soon as the breeding season is over and the market is favorable.

Candling tests have shown that a fertile egg will show deterioration in 12 hours or less, according to Mr. Watkins, and in the ordinary warm weather or summer, a fertile egg will become unfit for use within 36 hours after it is laid.

In addition, a rooster eats 15 to 20 times its own weight in grain or its equivalent each year, and for this reason alone, Mr. Watkins says, it is uneconomical to keep cockerels after the breeding season is over.

BUY GAS GUNS TO KILL PESTS

Hancock Farmers Are Waging War On Rats And Ground Squirrels

Armed with gas guns and supplied with calcium cyanide ammunition, about a dozen farmers in Hancock County are waging a winning war against rats ad ground squirrels on their farms, reports F. G. Churchill of the Iowa State College Extension Service, who recently held six demonstrations in the county, showing how to use calcium cyanide to kill these rodents.

At the six demonstrations this yoar, 156 rats were found dead following the use of the calcium cyanide. There were eight similar demonstrations held in the county last year, and 10 farmers bought gas guns as a result. These they have used the past winter against rats with good results.

THE DEBT WE OWE

The church is the constructive force in any community. Its influence extends through generations. The standards of life, the conception we have of right and wrong, in fact the very foundation of our character may be traced to our parents, grandparents or our friends who have been diligent in chuch attendance and believed in the constructive force of the church.

The stamp of the church is to be found on every Christian life. Pick the Christian characters whom you have known and you will find that they were staunch supporters of the church.

The church is broadening, uplifting and guiding influence of the community, and today is putting its stamp upon our children and the children's children. Only as the church is supported today will these ideals and standards be stamped upon future generations.

Are we doing our part to pass on to others what we have already received from the ones who have traveled before us?

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Word comes to us of very fine services last Sunday, conducted by Supt. J. R Mounce and Principal C. H. Tompkins, of Garner. We appreciate very much the good service rendered by these men and are sure that good will result therefrom.

Like good reports came to us from time to time of the services that were rendered by all others filling our pulpit during our absence and our gratitude goes out to all.

The pastor is glad to get back home after a real siege of hospital. We are making splendid recovery, even tho slowly, and hope in due time to take up full work again.

The fine spirit of love and sympathy manifested so profusely in person, by letter, or by the sending of the many beautiful flowers during our stay in the hospital as well as some other very tangible signs that we received, are gratefully acknowledged.

During the pastor's inability to take up the work it will be cared for in a splendid way until such time.

Next Sunday Dr. Lease will be with us during the entire day. To those who heard Dr. Lease during his stay with us last winter nothing more need be added. They will be out in full numbers.

On Sunday evening the Sacrament of the Lord's Super will be celebrated in the local church. The Liberty congregation will join in fellowship on this occasion.

Monday being Decoration Day the usual exercises will take place at the park. Dr. Lease has been secured by the American Legion to be the speaker of the day. Watch for further announcement.

Mr. M. F. Ponrod expects to leave the latter part of the week for Sebeka, Minnesota, to look after his farm. He says he may attend summer school at the University of Minnesota for a few weeks.

The Balkan Puzzle

IF YOU will look over a map of Europe you will see three great peninsulas jutting into the seas that wash the south shores of the continent. The southernmost and farthest east of the three is known as the Balkan peninsula. It comprises Turkey in Europe, Greece, Serbia, Bulgaria, Montenegro, eastern Roumelia, Rumania and other lesser divisions. Incidentally, that same peninsula has for a thousand years been the hotbed of revolt, intrigue and violence.

No other district of the same size contains so many races, nor so many people who are so widely different in religion, politics, customs and characteristics. This jumble of nationalities dwells side by side, yet never blending. Turk, Greek, Bulgar, Albanian and a half score of other peoples live shoulder to shoulder, yet each sharply divided from all the others. The Turk is the bully of the peninsula. The other races spent centuries fighting and intriguing against each other, but have merged their various difficulties in a common hatred against Turkey. The Turks, strongest of all Mahomet's followers, became masters of the peninsula in the Thirteenth century, being at that time the foremost military power of the world.

Most of the Balkan states are Christian. For this reason, as well as because of the frequent plots and revolts against the sultan's government, Turkey has, from time to time, punished her rebellious subjects by wholesale slaughter and outrage. The Armenian and Macedonian massacres have, at one period and another, aroused the horror of all civilized countries.

In May, 1876, Bulgaria and Herzegovina (then Turkish provinces) started one of the periodical insurrections. The peasants of the Batak district of Bulgaria were preparing to rise when suddenly a large Turkish force under Achmet Agha appeared, surrounded the town of Batak and commander the natives to yield; promising that not one of them should be harmed. With a credulity unusual in people having experience with the "Unspeakable Turk," the patriots obeyed. Then the massacre began. The prisoners—men, women and children alike—were slaughtered like sheep. Some took refuge in a church. It was burned over their heads. Achmet Agha received a decoration from the sultan for this great killing.

At news of the outrage the six great European powers sent a formal protest to the sultan. He had, earlier, promised reforms, but had disregarded his pledges. Now he gave the envoys no satisfaction whatever. This was the chance for which Russia had waited. Twenty years earlier Turkey (backed by England, France and Sardinia) had beaten Russia in the Crimea. The wound still rankled. Russia, moreover, had for a long time yearned to absorb her eastern rival or to annex as much of the latter's territory as possible. The other nations, however, had no idea of allowing the "balance of power" to be thus shifted, and Russia had been able to find no occasion to promote her schemes. Now, under pretext of avenging the injuries inflicted on Balkan Christians, the czar declared war (1877) against Turkey.

A Russian army crossed the Danube June 27. On July 13 General Gourko made the difficult passage of the Balkan mountains and advanced on Adrianople, but was driven back. In December he recrossed the Balkan range, vanquishing a Turkish army of 32,000 at Shipka pass (January 9, 1878). Osman Pasha, the sultan's best general, meantime had held his own against the invaders and had at length occupied the city of Plevna. Here he endured for twenty weeks a memorable siege against superior numbers, but was in the end forced to surrender. With the fall of Plevna the Turkish cause weakened. Philippopolis and Adrianopolis were taken, and the Russian armies marched unchecked on to Constantinople.

Here, however, with the fruits of victory within their very grasp, the conquerors were halted by the powers. The old menace of "destroying the balance of power" seemed about to be fulfilled, and the Russians were forbidden to enter the Turkish capital.

By the peace treaty of San Stefano, however, Rumanian Bessarabia and part of Armenia were ceded to Russia. Bulgaria was made a principality with home rule; Rumania, Serbia and Montenegro were declared free countries, and Bosnia and Herzegovina came under Austro-Hungarian sway. So ended the Russo-Turkish war of 1877-1878. Turkey, far from profiting by her lesson, continued to oppress her Christian provinces. In 1895 massacres of Christians in Armenia, and even in Constantinople, horrified civilization. Christians in Crete revolted, by way of showing their disapproval, and asked Greece to annex their island. A Greek military force was sent to Crete. Turkey at once declared war, thrashed Greece in one brief campaign and wrung from the beaten country a heavy war indemnity.

The Balkan peninsula still teems with plot, counterplot, intrigue, misrule and discontent. The Balkan problem will, perhaps, never be solved.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Demented Michigan Farmer Dynamites a School, Killing Forty-Four.

BY EDWARD W. PICKARD

ONE of the most extraordinary and shocking crimes of recent years was committed at the little town of Bath, near Lansing, Mich., resulting in the death of 44 persons, 37 of whom were children, and the injury of some forty others. Andrew Kehoe, farmer and school district treasurer, his mind unbalanced by financial troubles which he laid to the necessity of paying school taxes, planted a big dynamite mine in the basement of the community school, wired it carefully, carried another load of explosive to the building in his automobile and set both off. The north wing of the school was destroyed and the ruins were full of the shattered bodies of the little pupils. The principal and one teacher also were killed, as were two men who were passing the building. Kehoe himself was among the dead. Before blowing up the school he had killed his invalid wife and burned his own house and farm buildings. State troopers from Lansing, who took charge of the situation, found in the basement of the undestroyed wing of the school dynamite planted in eight places. Had this been exploded the death roll would have been doubled. Hundreds of pounds of the explosive had been stolen recently from a contractor's store house, presumably by Kehoe, and the plot had been worked out carefuly during a number of days by the insane farmer, who was considered to be an expert electrician.

PROTECTION for the Mississippi valley from future floods will be demanded and planned at a great conference of representatives of the 27 states, called by Mayors Thompson of Chicago, Miller of St. Louis and O'Keefe of New Orleans. The meeting will open in Chicago on June 2 and will be attended by senators, congressmen, army engineers, bankers, lumber trade members and other business leaders. Secretary of Labor Davis will represent President Coolidge.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover has told the President a special session of congress is not necessary to deal with the flood situation, as the Red Cross will be able to care for the refugees efficiently. The relief fund is still growing, and the continuance of contributions is urged. Last week the most serious development was the inundation of the town of Melville, La., on the west bank of the Atchafalaya river. The waters broke through the levees during the night and about ten of the inhabitants were drowned. The rest took refuge on the levees, where they soon were isolated. The Bayou des Glaises levees gave way, as was expected, and hundreds of persons in that section, northwest of New Orleans, were driven from their homes.

The Mississippi fell slowly along the lower river, the weather bureau at New Orleans estimating that half of the water from the Tensas basin was being diverted into the Atchafalaya basin through the crevasses. The crest of the flood still was in the Tensas basin, far above Bayou des Glaises.

VIOLENT storms in Iowa, Illinois and Indiana in the middle of the week caused some loss of life and the injury of many persons, especially in Peoria and Indianapolis. Rain, hail and wind resulted in severe property loses.

Eight lives were lost when a wall of water from what is known as the "slide" dam in the Gros Ventre river swept over the little town of Kelly, 25 miles from Wilson, Wyo. The dam, created when Sheep mountain shifted several feet two years ago, had collapsed.

SEVERAL thousand members of the American Medical association attended the seventy-eighth annual meeting of the organization in Washington, and were welcomed by President Coolidge. The house of delegates of the association directed the trustees of the organization to co-operate with the internal revenue department and the Treasury department in the preparation of a bill to be submitted to congress in December, modifying the "unfortunate" Volstead act provision which now limits the amount of whisky which may be prescribed to one pint in ten days.

Among the important announcements made before sectional meetings was that of Hideyo Noguchi of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, that he had at last succeeded in isolating the micro-organism responsible for trachoma, an eye disease that has baffled physicians. Dr. William S. Thayer of Baltimore, Md., was elected president of the association.

ILLINOIS lawmakers took another swat at prohibition when the house of representatives voted, 79 to 64, to submit the repeal of the state prohibition act and the state search and seizure act to a referendum of the people. The expressed view of some of the members who voted for the referendum was that prohibition has been worse than a failure, a sumptuary regulation that has brought more harm than good to society, to the nation, and to the state. The drys put up a strong fight and argued well, but were outvoted. Several weeks ago the Illinois house adopted a resolution calling upon congress to call a constitutional convention for the purpose of revising the eighteenth amendment.

Vacating a disbarment order against a Nebraska lawyer, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Kansas City held in effect that the manufacture and possession of liquor for personal use in the home is not a felony and cannot serve as ground for disbarment of an attorney. The decision said that "a court has no regulatory power over the private life of a member of the bar."

DISARMING the warring Nicaraguans is turning out to be not all play for the American marines who have the job in hand. At La Paz Centro, near Leon, a guerilla band of Liberals attacked a small detachment of the marines and a battle ensued in which Capt. Richard B. Buchanan and Private Marvin A. Jackson were killed and several other leathernecks wounded. About fourteen of the "Liberals" were killed. Brig. Gen. Logan Feland said: "I am glad to state this marine detachment, under most difficult circumstances and although outnumbered ten to one, has upheld the reputation of the marine corps. Captain Buchanan and his detachment showed bravery of the highest order."

GREAT BRITAIN and Russia were on the verge of a break last week, and the rupture of relations was expected almost any day. The Soviet government made a formal and indignant protest against the raid on the Soviet trade headquarters in London, declaring continuance of commercial relations with Great Britain was possible only on the condition of exact fulfillment of the provisions of the commercial treaty of 1921, free from violations growing out of "interparty maneuvers and the fantastic beliefs of one minister or another." Furthermore, Moscow declared it reserved the right to make claim for violation of the agreement by the British government, for the insult offered thereby and for material losses growing out of the raid. The note concluded:

"The absolutely, uncalled for raid on a government institution of another state, apart from the question of treaty rights belonging to it, is a most serious and hostile act, without doubt jeopardizing the further preservation of relations between the interested states, with all the ensuing consequences. The fact that the trade delegation by its activity gave no justification for such a raid can be proved by the circumstance that the British government has not made a single representation or complaint about this activity."

The official version of the raid was given in the house of commons by Sir William Joynson-Hicks, home secretary, and a debate on the question involving relations with Russia began. The documents found by the police have not been made public, but there was reason to believe they were decidedly incriminating. The government officials prepared three notes as replies to the Russian protest, the choice depending on the decision of the cabinet and the parliamentary debate. One of them denounces the trade agreement on the ground of its flagrant violations by the Russians. The second says a final break off of diplomatic relations between Britain and Russia must come if the Soviets do not amend their conduct. The third announces a direct break of diplomatic relations immediately, laying the whole blame on Moscow.

The Russian government already has played a strong card in the quarrel by announcing the grant of special trade privileges to Germany, Latvia and Lithuania, which states have signed or initiated neutrality treaties with Moscow. In the Soviet capital there were carefully staged demonstrations against the English trade mission, the members of which were so closely guarded by political police that they were virtual prisoners.

BRITISH officialdom was very busy entertaining President Doumergue of France and Foreign Minister Briand, who made a state visit to London. There were banquets, parades and other colorful functions, and Briand and Chamberlain took the opportunity to hold an important conference concerning immediate evacuation of the Rhineland.

NAVAL experts of England say their government has decided to propose, in the Coolidge naval conference, the reduction of capital ships from 35,000 to 20,000 tons and cruisers from 10,000 to 6,000 tons, apportioning a tonnage of 100,000 tons each to the United States and Great Britain and 70,000 tons to Japan. According to the Daily News expert, Japan has decided to back this program.

TWO editorials in Osservatore Romano, organ of the Vatican, express the pope's opposition to Mussolini's charter of labor and the Fascist doctrine which places the right of the state above the right of the individual and practically denies that individual rights exist when important necessities of the state are involved. The relations between capital and labor, according to the doctrine expounded in the editorials, are ethical problems and as such must be approached, discussed and solved on the basis of ethical principles which "the centuries old experience of the church and its superhuman knowledge dictate."

Mussolini sought to demonstrate his friendliness to the church by having placed in the Colosseum a gigantic cross, which was unveiled by Queen Elena at an impressive ceremony. This cross replaces the one torn down by Mayor Nathan 65 years ago, and its dedication completes the Fascist plan to return this Christian symbol to the schools, courts, and public buildings, from which they were removed during the anti-Catholic days following the unification of Italy.

TWO well-known figures in the amusement world died last week. Sam Bernard, German dialect comedian, who was on his way to Carlsbad, succumbed to apoplexy on board the liner Columbus. Maurice Mouvet, known the world over as just "Maurice," noted ballroom dancer, died of tuberculosis in Lausanne, Switzerland. He had been ill for several years but did not quit his work until two months ago.

GOVERNOR GENERAL WOOD has dealt successfully with another dangerous affair in the Philippines. Entrancherado, an insane fanatic, started a revolutionary movement on Panay island and was joined by a large number of followers. Wood went there himself and persuaded the excited natives to disperse, and their crazy leader was sent to an asylum in Manila.

EXPOSURE of the alleged corruption of Indiana politics by the Ku Klux klan was furthered by the arrest of Mayor Duvall and Controller Buser of Indianapolis on charges of conspiracy to commit a felony. Duvall is accused in six other affidavits of violating the corrupt practices act, perjury, and other offenses.

PETER UNDAUNTED BY PERSECUTION

LESSON TEXT—Acts 5:11-42.

GOLDEN TEXT—We ought to obey God rather than men.—Acts 5:29.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Shows His Courage.

JUNIOR TOPIC — Peter Speaks Bravely for His Lord.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Standing Firm Under Persecution.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Courage.

The vindication of the house of God against the hypocritical act of Ananias and Sapphira had a salutary effect upon the people. The hypocrites were deterred from joining the church, but true-hearted men and women were all the more attracted to it, even identifying themselves with it. So great was the stir in Jerusalem that even the sick folk were brought where but the shadow of Peter might fall upon them.

I. The Apostles in Prison (vv. 17-18).

The marvelous success which accompanied the teaching of the apostles was too much for the Sadducees to endure. Their jealous wrath was aroused to such an extent that they laid the cruel hand of persecution upon these witnesses for Christ. Cain was jealous of Abel; Joseph's brethren sold him in slavery because he was the favorite of Jacob. Saul was jealous of David when the women ascribed greater glory to him.

II. The Apostles' Miraculous Deliverance (vv. 19-21).

1. The Lord sent an angel to open the prison and let the prisoners free (v. 19).

There are no doors, nor bolts capable of shutting out God's angel.

2. They were commanded to go at once and speak to the people. (v. 20).

The message they were to deliver was the "Words of this life." Most likely this means eternal life through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

3. Their prompt obedience (v. 21).

By daybreak they were teaching in the temple.

III. The Apostles Tried (vv. 21-32).

1. The meeting of the council (v.21).

In the early morning the Jewish council was convened by the high-priest.

2. Their perplexity (vv. 22-24).

The officer was sent to bring the prisoners, but lo, when they came to the jail it was empty. This news greatly perplexed the council.

3. The apostles again arrested (vv. 25, 26).

When one came with the news that the apostles were teaching in the temple, officers were dispatched to bring them before the council. They refrained from the use of violence because they feared the people.

4. The apostles questioned (vv. 27, 28).

The council demanded of them the reason for not heeding the charge which they had previously given that they should not teach any more in the name of Jesus. This persistent testimony the officers interpreted as an effort to bring the guilt of Jesus' blood upon themselves.

5. The apostle's answer.

Peter boldly replied that they were under obligation to obey God rather than men. He further told them that they were guilty of the murder of Jesus Christ and that God had raised Jesus from the dead and exalted Him to be a Prince and a Savior to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel, and also that He had made the apostles, with the Holy Spirit, witnesses of these things.

IV. The Result (vv. 33-42).

1. They determined to kill the apostles (v. 33).

Peter's stinging words cut to the quick, but their desperate wickedness filled them with murderous hatred instead of moving them to repentance. They could not answer the message, so the only way was to kill their accusers.

2. Gamaliel's counsel (vv. 34-39).

He advised neutrality, assuring them that if it be a work of men it would come to nought, but if it be of God they could not overthrow it because they would be engaged in the hopeless task of fighting against God.

3. The apostles beaten (v 40).

While heeding Gamaliel's advice, they vented their rage by beating the apostles and charging them not to speak in Christ's name.

4. The behavior of the apostles (vv. 41,42).

They departed with hearts full of joy that they were counted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. They continued to preach Jesus Christ in public and in private.

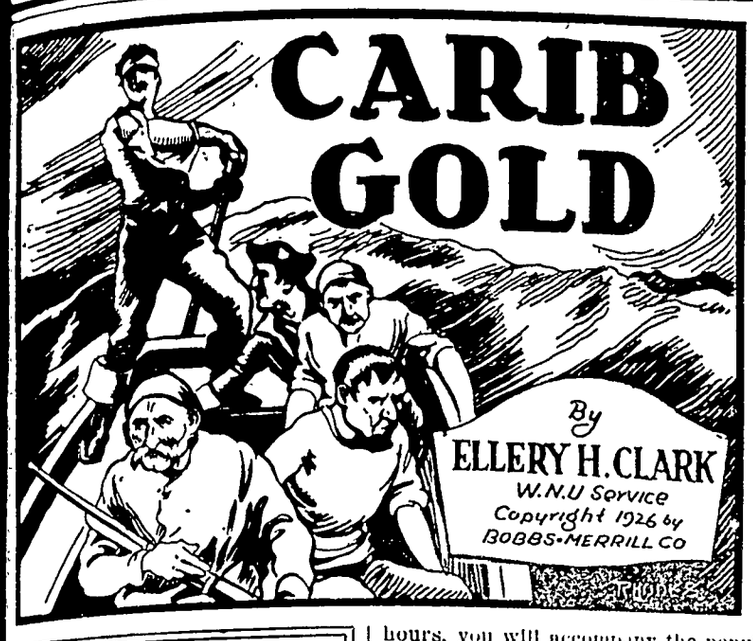
CHAMBERLAIN'S TABLETS "Help You Stay Well"



STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1719, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, gives an exhibition of his marksmanship before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern. The conversation turns on a notorious pirate, whose ship, the Black Panther, is thought to be in the vicinity. Next morning Lindsay, after wild ducks, is sitting in a "blind" when three strangers land on the beach near him. They bury a chest and then one of them, Burford, recognized by Lindsay as the man he talked with the day before, kills one of his companions. Lindsay's presence is discovered. The third man is Captain Barclay of the Black Panther. The three go aboard. Lindsay meets there a youth to whom he bears a remarkable resemblance, Robert McAllister, whom Barclay captured on his way to his uncle's plantation in Jamaica. Barclay has sworn to kill the elder McAllister. Bob is asked to act as a spy in his uncle's household. He refuses and is killed. Lindsay is asked to take his place. Realizing his helplessness and under threat of a lingering death, Lindsay agrees to assume young McAllister's name and take his place in Andrew's household. The Black Panther comes upon a plundered ship, with all on board murdered. Barclay declares it the work of McAllister's pirate ship, Shark. The Black Panther overtakes and destroys it with all on board. Lindsay is set ashore in Jamaica to pass himself off as Robert and find out all he can about McAllister's plantation. He rescues a negro jockey, Quashy, who had been kidnaped to prevent his riding in a race the following day.

Presently, as the tide in the bottle bbed, I improved the opportunity to k for the colonel. At the mention his name George laughed heartily, nd assured me that it would be a mple matter to find him. On the ght above, not in the ballroom, where he dancers were enjoying themselves, t in the spacious eating-hall—that as where the redoubtable colonel ould be found. "He is," Lewis conued, "a confirmed gourmand, not to y a glutton. The phrase, my dear cAllister, is not an elegant one, but ingleton is literally digging his grave ith his teeth. We shall find him, to certainty, for this is the night of all ights, to be devoted to revelry and be concluded, at sunrise, by the reat match between the horses of he colonel and of Major Mostyn."

I had never doubted Quashy's story, t if I had, this would have coninced me of the truth. And when we nished our bottle, George conducted e upstairs to the dining hall, where, s he had predicted, we found a dozen plcures seated about a round table, much enthralled with their supper were the younger folks with their ancing and their roulette. When we aused at the colonel's seat, I found hat as Quashy had said he most cerainly possessed a red and flaming ountenance, and a large protuberant tomach. He greeted Lewis cordially nough, and shook hands with me omewhat perfunctorily, but when I sked him for a word apart, he shot e a suspicious glance, and therefore, o clinch the matter, I showed him, eld in the palm of my hand, the ribon from Quashy's cap. At once his hole attitude changed, and in a low one he said, "All right. In a few moments. Wait for me in the dance all."

Accordingly, George returned to the ower floor, while for perhaps a quarer of an hour I watched the evolutions of the dancers until I felt a hand n my arm and discovered that the olonel was standing at my side. Without a word he drew me into a recess ear the window, and said abruptly, Now, then! What's up?"

It took me but a few moments to make the situation clear to him, and hen I had finished, his eyes glistened ith mirth. "Dear Mostyn!" he ejaculated. "What an extraordinary idea. A bit crude, perhaps, but how decidedly effective. And you had to happen along and spoil all his plans. Poor Mostyn. How exceedingly distressing."

He sat in silence for some moments; hen nodded his head abruptly as if e had decided on his course of action. Then, fumbling in his pocket, e drew out a small purse and handed t to me. "Really," he said, "I cannot hank you sufficiently for what you ave done. But as one gentleman to nother"—and he cast an appraising lance at my clothes—"I should be delighted if you would take this small um and wager it on Satan. You will nd the professional bookmakers on he floor below. Most of them are onest—they live longer if they are—ut I should bet with a man named endez, a dark little chap with fierce ustachios; he is thoroughly reliable. ow, to avoid suspicion, I shall return o my friends. Later, if the odds suit e, I shall certainly make some more agers on the gentle Satan. I thank ng again, sir; doubtless, in a very few hours, you will accompany the population of the Port to the race track."

I assured him that I should not miss the race for anything under the sun, and strolling downstairs again, I found Lewis in the company of some officers, who were urging him to take part in a rubber of whist. But Lewis did not seem eager to play, and when he saw me came forward with a whispered word, so that shortly, with the inevitable ceremony of ordering a bottle of wine, we found ourselves again seated in the seclusion of one of the nooks at the side of the room. Then, after swearing him to secrecy, I told him the whole story; and as I expected, he was delighted. "Splendid!" he cried. "Wonderful! Each trying to outwit the other. And we mustn't miss our chance. Here, take part of my winnings, and let's wager all we can on Satan."

Mendez was easily found from the colonel's description, a short, dark little man with bellicose mustachios and hands sparkling with diamonds; and Lewis, thoroughly at home amid such surroundings, at once approached the booth and inquired the odds. The betting, it appeared, was two to one against Satan. These odds, in the face of what we knew, were naturally most satisfactory, and we made haste to bet heavily on our choice. I, indeed, was like a man possessed; and stimulated, I fear, by the wine I had consumed, I promptly forgot the advice I had received from Barclay, and wagered all that he had given me, all that the colonel had given me, and all that George had given me, retaining, however, just sense enough to keep back three or four gold pieces, so that, if anything went wrong with Satan, I might not be shot for failure to pay my reckoning at the inn.

The remainder of that night is somewhat hazy in my mind, for I confess with shame that I drank more wine than was good for mo, so that I seemed to move about as if in a dream. Still, I can recall a good deal. I can remember Colonel Singleton, resembling an ancient but magnificent old turkeycock, as he gamely made wager after wager on his choice; and I can remember Mostyn and his followers, outwardly demure but inwardly hardly able to restrain their mirth as they thought of the grand hoax they were putting up on the colonel.

At last the night came to an end; upstairs the music and the dancing ceased, and the ensuing silence had something rather horrible about it, as of death after life. The mulatto spun the wheel for the last time; the bookmakers, equally businesslike and impassive, left their booths; and a motley crowd of men and women, in various stages of inebriation, filed from the Palace of Delight into the beauty and freshness of the dawn, men and women both, winding their unsteady way in the direction of the track.

Near the track itself was a long, low, white structure, evidently for the accommodation of the jockeys and their mounts, and as we neared it, we saw a handsome bay mare, already saddled and bridled, being led up and down by a stable boy, while beside her walked an ebony jockey, young and with a distinctly knowing air, in a costume of blue, slashed with silver, of which he was evidently proud. This, I at once decided, must be Flyaway, and though I was but an ordinary judge of horseflesh, I noted the mare's broad forehead and tranquil eye, noted, too, her slender yet muscular limbs, and a sudden feeling of uneasiness came over me, the realization that I had probably been far too rash in staking my fortune, such as it was, against this dangerous opponent.

This, in itself, was sufficiently depressing, but a moment later my fears, instead of being allayed, were intensified. From within the building sounded a sudden chorus of exclamations and ejaculations; there was a drumming of hoofs on the stable floor, the rush of a door thrust back, and out into the faint light of the morning danced a black demon, front legs pawing for the sky, on his back a terrified jockey who called shrilly for help. Somehow, I cannot remember exactly how, they managed to reach the track; and there Satan, with a guile that justified his tactics, and with hind legs kicking madly in the air, shot his jockey neatly and decisively over the inner rail. The boy landed on his head and lay motionless, while Satan gazed reproachfully around him, the very picture of righteous indignation.

I had watched, fascinated, and with my mind intent on my own misfortunes. But now I was to realize that the fortunes of others were even more deeply involved, for a voice, obviously menacing, sounded at my elbow "What the devil does this mean, sir?" it cried; and I turned to behold Colonel Singleton, if possible still more indignant than his fiery steed.

I could only stare. Words would not come. But the colonel encountered no such difficulty; he was fluency itself. "What the devil do you mean, sir," he cried, "by bringing me these tales about Quashy? Where is Quashy? I believe this is all an infernal swindle, and that you're in Mostyn's pay!"

Fortunately for me, just at this juncture Mostyn approached, a smile upon his face. "Well, Colonel," he inquired blandly, "are you ready? Sunrise was the hour, I believe."

The colonel turned, if possible, a shade or two redder than before. "Sunrise, sir," he roared! "And how in the devil, sir, do you know that it is sunrise? Have you eyes that can see through mountains? When I see the sun, I'll say it's sunrise, and not a moment before."

The remark, however, was unfortunate, for as he uttered it there appeared, to my consternation, above the tops of the distant hills the glowing ball of light, beautifying all nature, but throwing into pitiless relief the worn and dissipated faces of the crowd of pleasure seekers in its path. In desperation I glanced about on every side for some sign of the absent Quashy, and for a moment, to my delight, I actually thought that I saw a figure in crimson emerge from the strip of woods beyond the track. The next second I thought I saw it rise again, then stumble and lie prostrate. Any chance, however desperate, was worth taking; we had nothing to lose and all to gain, and with a hurried word to George we started at a run across the field. Never in my life have I felt less like a burst of speed, and George's course, I am confident, must have been a zigzag rather than a straight line. Yet we did our best, and presently, with a great throb of joy, I saw that it was indeed Quashy, crawling feebly on his hands and on one knee, with the other leg dragging awkwardly behind him. His face was ashy, and the sweat poured down his face like rain. As he glanced up and saw us coming, he tried manfully to force a grin. "Twist my leg," he gasped. "Fall into d—n gully. Where Satan?"

Without a word, for this was no time for talking, George and I crossed hands, bent, and bidding him hold fast, swung him up between us and hurried toward the track. Presently we reached the spot where Satan stood watching our approach.

He eyed us, as it seemed to me, ironically, for if a horse ever had the expression of a human being, it was that black whirlwind. He showed no affecting joy at sight of Quashy; he did not even whinny; but we were in a position to be thankful for small mercies, and felt that it was something to have that beast stand quiet while we bundled Quashy into the saddle. Evidently, as he had told me, he and Satan "ascertained" each other.

And now, while the mare cantered by us, and the starter, a fussy, pompous little man, waved us to the start, I had a chance to examine Quashy's leg. It was not a reassuring sight. His foot, indeed, he could get into the stirrup, but when he tried to bear weight upon it, I thought he would have fainted with the pain. The colonel bustled up, slid his hand over Quashy's knee, and with a groan departed.

"You can't do it," I whispered. "Give it up."

But he bit his lip till a trickle of blood showed. "It only way, buckra," he grimly answered. "You say prayer."

There was no chance for further talk. The starter had arrived, and began lecturing the two jockeys. George plucked my sleeve. "We'll go back to the finish," he said. "We must be there to see our money go."

High up in the stand, far removed from the rest of the crowd, we took our places, feeling, as many other men have felt under similar circumstances, a great disinclination for companionship of any sort. Our eyes sought the quarter post, where the horses stood prancing, and we waited breathlessly for the start. Flyaway, we could see, had drawn the position next the rail; at once I felt this to be a bad omen, for if the race were close it might, indeed, spell just the margin between victory and defeat.

Through the clear morning air we could hear the starter peremptorily lecturing the jockeys, for both were past masters in the craft of the track, and both, as we all knew, meant to get the advantage at the start. Evidently the starter's patience was all but exhausted; once, twice they seemed to have started and both times were called back; the horses themselves seemed to be victims of the strain, for Satan was fighting for his head, and even the mare was acting like one possessed.

And then—just as I felt as if my overwrought nerves were about to snap—suddenly they were off, leaping forward in unison to a perfect start. Almost immediately the mare began to draw away—a half length—a length; George gave a groan. "We're beat," he ejaculated. "Look at Flyaway go!"

I could not pluck up heart to contradict him, for I have never seen a prettier sight than the gallant little mare, her jockey, gay in his blue and silver, crouched low in the saddle, as she tore down the track at terrific speed. With the showing of the black, after the tales I had listened to, I felt the keenest satisfaction. He ran easily enough, to be sure, but altogether too easily; there was no sign of that fire and energy he had displayed at our first sight of him, when, before the race, he had assisted his hapless jockey to alight. Yet, of course, even to a boy as ignorant of racing as I was, one thing was evident; and that was that Quashy, clearly handicapped by his injured leg was not helping his mount along as did the jockey on Flyaway; and though he managed to keep his seat well enough, there was not that marvelous union between horse and rider which makes the great jockey a rarity, worth many times his weight in gold. When the first quarter of the final mile was covered, Satan was three lengths astern; at the half the mare's lead was even greater, and Lewis, with a sigh, observed philosophically, "It's no use, Bob, we're done."

It looked so, indeed, and even as he spoke it seemed as if further disaster might bring the race to a finish then and there, for suddenly I saw Quashy go forward in his saddle, fairly lying out along Satan's neck, as if he had lost his balance or turned faint with pain. Yet what looked like irretrievable disaster was really the turning point in our hopes, though it was not until afterward that we learned what had really happened; that Quashy, risking everything on one desperate chance, was actually talking to this black demon whom he "ascertained"; was exhorting him in his wild African lingo, to be a gentleman and a sportsman, and not to let the mare acquire the name of being the fleetest racer on Jamaican soil.

All this, as I say, we did not learn till later; but the result was immediate, for suddenly the whole complexion of affairs began to change, and though at first I could not believe my eyes, soon George and I exclaimed in unison, "We're gaining, gaining fast!" It was true. Here, at last, was the speed we had heard of; slowly, steadily, the gap between them diminished, until at the three-quarters mark Flyaway's lead was again reduced to the two lengths which had separated them soon after the start.

Might Work Injustice on Deserving Ghosts

This is a callous and unbelieving age. A little correspondence in a contemporary on Christian ghosts has produced an assurance that it is perfectly easy to distinguish between a genuine ghost and a mere hallucination.

All you have to do is to squint at the apparition; if the poor ghost is really there "the distortion of the line of sight will cause it to be seen double." But if the apparition remains unaltered after this treatment it is proof that it is really an hallucination from within and not something which exists outside the percipient.

This habit of pulling ugly faces at what may be perfectly good ghosts, hardworking and deserving in every sense of the words, will be deprecated by all courteous and right-thinking humans, the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian comments. Moreover, the choice between a double ghost and a single one does not exhaust the possibilities from this harsh test. The apparition may give an eldritch shriek and vanish clean away. And what will that prove? Simply that the experimenter has squinted so vilely at the visitor that he has frightened the poor thing out of its wits.

No Blue Hibiscus

In many of the pink hibiscus the eye is crimson while the various shades are faded, at times, into the merest pink wash in an almost white flower, says Nature Magazine. Often there is more or less of the pure scarlet color, and then there is the dilution—the scarlet pink. There are all mixtures of crimson and scarlet combined in various forms with a tinge of yellow or orange. No blue has been found.

Fond Memory of a Memorial Day in the Far Past

DOWN in a corner of the old-fashioned trunk kept sacred to treasures of long ago, is a little box marked "Father's regimentals." The rubber band drops from it as I lift it gently from its place and raise the cover.

Within are a cord and tassel of gold, dimmed and darkened by the years; a Grand Army badge bearing the inscription Post 8 G. A. R., and a pair of white cotton gloves, yellowed with age.

Back through the years they take me to Memorial day of long ago—always a sunny day in memory—when Mother pinned the badge to Father's coat of blue, dropped the gold cord over his soft hat, directed him into his gloves and sent him off to post headquarters, where the "boys" were forming to march with their burden of flowers to the flag-decked graves in the little cemetery.

A goodly procession of strong men, they stepped bravely to the music of the home town band—"Marching Through Georgia," "John Brown's Body," and other songs familiar to the lads of '65—their minds filled with memories of Gettysburg, Southern prisons and Appomattox, as they marched to the little graveyard where their comrades lay.

Mother, a member of the Relief corps, rode in the parade.

Brother bore the colors of the Sons of Veterans, his boyish strength bending under the weight of the heavy banner and staff.

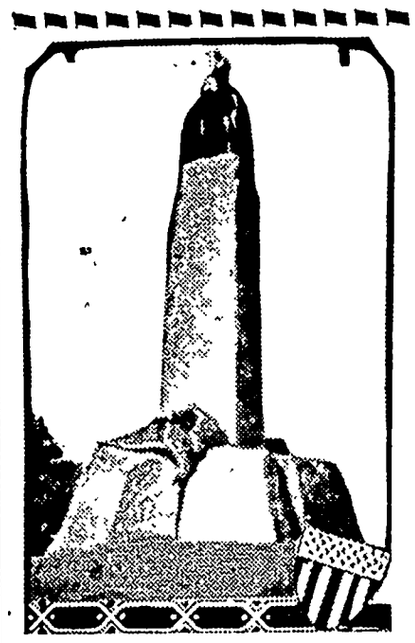
Small Sister, transported to the cemetery by some forgotten means, all a-flutter with excitement and sinful pride in her new white frock, perched on a tall tombstone at the edge of the ceremonial circle, recited "The Blue and the Gray."

Oh, it was all so long ago when there were only the veterans of Grant and Sherman to march to the hallowed graves.

Now Father's grandson, who served under Pershing, steps at the head of his regiment and lays a wreath on Grandfather's grave where the Stars and Stripes flutter.

I cover the little box of Father's regimentals and put it back in its place in the corner of the trunk—one of the countless links in the chain of our country's honor and freedom.—Detroit News.

To War Prisoners



A World-war monument for Sweden seems incongruous at first thought since that country was neutral during the struggle, but a memorial has been erected and unveiled in Trelleborg to recall one of the tragic sidelights of the conflict. It is in honor of the prisoners who died in Sweden while being exchanged between Germany and Russia. A stone shaft, surmounted by a bird apparently grieving for its dead mate at the bottom, is the conspicuous part of the memorial.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

"Victory Bugler" Paid High Honor by France

Corporal Pierre Sellier, the French bugler who blew the "cease firing" call to permit the German plenipotentiaries to enter the French lines on November 7, 1918, to negotiate the armistice, was decorated a chevalier of the Legion of Honor a short time ago. General Debeney, who commanded the troops which received the Germans on that memorable occasion and is now chief of the general staff, had charge of the exercises.

The famous "bugle of victory," which Corporal Sellier blew and which since has been in his possession, was at the same time deposited in the army museum at the Hotel des Invalides after impressive ceremonies presided over by General Gouraud, military governor of Paris.

Captain L'Huillier, who ordered Sellier to sound "cease firing," and who escorted the Germans to General Debeney's headquarters, stood just behind the little corporal.

First Formal Ceremony

May 30 was designated as Memorial day by Gen. John A. Logan, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, in General Orders, No. 2, dated May 5, 1868. Exercises were held at Arlington cemetery on May 30 of that year, over which General Logan presided. The platform was erected in front of the Lee mansion.

THIS NURSE NOW HAS GOOD HEALTH

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time and I would not be without it in the house. As I am a children's nurse, I have to be on my feet a great deal and your medicine has helped me wonderfully. I was hardly able to do my housework when I began taking it, and now I am a strong and well woman, able to do all that and go out nursing besides. I have also used the Sanative Wash and found it beneficial."—Mrs. Gertrude L. Stewart, 103 Davis St., Greenfield, Mass.

Valuable for Weakness

"I have found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a valuable medicine for weakness."—Mrs. J. A. Pietsch, Box 397, Lancaster, Pa.

Hundreds of letters like these are received by the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Grateful women from Pennsylvania to Washington, from Texas to Illinois and from Rhode Island to Nebraska say that their health has improved since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It takes half a life to learn how to live. Even then we practice little of what we teach or know.

Feel Stiff and Achy?

TO feel constantly lame and achy is too often a sign of sluggish kidneys.

Sluggish action permits waste poisons to remain in the blood and is apt to make one languid, tired and achy, with dull headaches, dizziness and often a nagging backache. A common warning that the kidneys are not acting right is scanty or burning secretions.

Assist the kidneys at such times with Doan's Pills. Since 1885 Doan's have been winning friends the country over. Ask your neighbor!

50,000 Users Endorse Doan's:

George Facemire, 22 Orange St., Bridgeton, N. J., says: "My kidneys were not acting right and the secretions were scant and painful. Every morning I felt tired and languid and my back was so lame I had to have assistance in dressing. I started using Doan's Pills and in a short time was in splendid health. I gladly recommend Doan's."

Miss Lenora Wheatman left Sunday for her home at Decorah, Iowa, to spend the summer vacation before returning to Klemme next fall to resume her duties as primary instructor.

The commencement exercises at the school auditorium last Thursday evening was well attended. Attorney Jas B Weaver, of Des Moines gave a very interesting address. The 1927 Class this year had eleven graduates.

Mrs. Florence Smith and daughter Alaine, left Saturday for Ft. Atkinson, Wisconsin where they formerly resided before coming to Klemme about a year ago Mesdames S A. Harvey and F H Ridder took them as far as Mason City

L E Hockey left Saturday in his car for Barnes City for a few days visit before attending summer school at Cedar Falls He will return to Klemme again next week to put the manual training room in shape and store away the tools.

Edwin Josten is having his old barn torn down and in its place in a few weeks will stand a modern large barn, constructed of block for the lower part and lumber above The barn will have all of the modern improvements

Rev. A. W. Gauger returned home from the hospital at Rochester Friday afternoon. Mrs. Gauger and the children drove to Belmond to meet him. He is getting along well and is feeling fine following his recent operations.

Bull head fishing at Morse Lake, west of Belmond, has been exceptionally good the past week and local fishermen have had fine luck. The other day Earl Finn and Oscar Wenig caught sixty-four nice ones in a short time.

Miss Iva Hubbard has returned to Mason City to spend the summer vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Al. Hubard. She has been attending the Klemme school during the past year. Mr. Wil Kirkwood and Mrs. A. Kirkwood took her over Sunday in their car.

Matt Edmundson who was formerly employed at the Garner Auto Co. garage here and who moved to Sheffield a few months ago where he purchased a meat market which he later sold, has again gone into the meat market business. Saturday he purchased the meat market at Ventura and took possession Monday morning. Matt formerly owned the same market before coming to Klemme, so he and his family will feel right at home in Ventura.

Klemme Local Items

This vicinity has had plenty of rain the past week, which has slowed up corn planting. However, the pastures and small grains and the haylands look better this spring than they have for years, and the farmer who has a good dairy herd is greatly benefited.

The Daily Bible School opened at the Reformed Church Monday with an attendance of 42 pupils enrolled Rev. Grosshuesch is assisted by Miss Edith Haupt in the work of teaching. A number of other pupils are expected to enroll which should bring the attendance tu to fifty or more.

The Klemme Royal Neighbors go to Forest City today where their well trained degree team will put on the initiatory degree at the District Convention in the evening. The Klemme Royal Neighbor lodge has one of the best degree teams in this part of the state and they are in demand every year to put on work at the annual convention.

Mrs. J. B. Spitler, of Belmond, was calling on Klemme friends last Thursday. Mrs. Spitler informed us that they had traded their property in Klemme, where W. C. Keaus now resides, for a 3 acre tract with buildings adjoining the property they now own in west Belmond. Mr. Ryerson, of Belmond, now owns the Spitler property in Klemme.

Mr. and Mrs. Herb Bailey and daughter, Ruth, and Miss Gladys Wilson, left yesterday in the former's car on a tour of inspection to the various nearby colleges and will visit Ames, Des Moines, Indianola, and perhaps others. Miss Ruth will attend college next fall, but as yet she has not selected the college she will attend.

Buy a Poppy Saturday!

This vicinity was visited by what appears to be a small twister early Monday morning just before the heavy rain and wind came up. A windmill was blown over on the R. R Lemke farm, a number of trees were blown over in town, some of the doors on the North Iowa Grain Co building were blown off. Reports are that Williams was struck by a cyclone that morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Grange and son, Dorance, drove to Ruthven Saturday for an over Sunday visit with relatives. They were accompanied as far as Spencer by Mrs. P W. Johnson and two little daughters, who visited with relatives there Mr. Johnson drove to Spencer Sunday morning and returned with his family Tuesday afternoon. The Grange family returned from their visit on Monday.

Herb Bailey returned Friday afternoon from Sioux City where he had been on business since the first of the week Near Belmond Herb reached around in his car to hang up his coat and before he knew what happened he had hit the ditch, but the only thing that happened was that one tire was torn off and a passing motorist helped him get the car up in the road again and he came merrily on his way.

Eric Josten drove to Mt. Vernon, Iowa, Monday to bring Earl Josten home for the summer. Earl has a position as principal of the consolidated schools at Harris next fall.

Mr and Mrs. C. F. Keraus, Mr. and Mrs W. C. Keraus and boys, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Waterman and daughter Marion, and Mr. and Mrs. T F Mitchell, of Swea City, all spent Sunday at the Keraus cottage at Clear Lake.

The 4-H Home Furnishing Club of Ell Township met at the home of Mrs. Fred Greiman, Jr. Ten girls were present. New officers were elected, and Milded Hampel was re-elected president, Elizabeth Stewart vice-president, Dorothy Hampel secretary-treasurer. Plans for the coming year wee discussed and the program for the year was made. This year's program will deal chiefly with the making of decorative objects for a girl's room. Health and picture study will be included. Seven of the ten girls are new members and they are very promising along club work. Delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. Greiman at the close of the meeting. The next meeting will be held at the home of the Misses Ethel and Norma Baack, Wednesday, June 1st.

The "Liberty Lassies" the 4-H club in Liberty township, met Saturday at the home of Louise Griffen Miss Norma Lenz gave a report on "Is it our duty to have good health?" Miss Ethel Beier and Miss Norma Lenz were elected at this meeting to represent the club at the Girls Club Camp and tri-county meeting at Clear Lake June 7, 8, and 9th. The election was followed by a demonstration on binding of books. Miss Lenz played the accompaniment for club singing and a vocal duet by the Misses Ethel and Ruth Beier was greatly enjoyed.

CREAM CHECKS

Of $80 or over

FROM APRIL 1, 1927 to APRIL 30, 1927. PAID TO PATRONS—

Here is another big list of patrons of the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery Company whose cream checks for the month of April have been $80.00 and over, paid by us for cram delivered. This list compares very favorably with the list of last month.

Farmers—this might not be the best kind of weather for corn—but say it is sure great for pastures, haylands and small grain and the farmer with a fine dairy herd is not worrying as it is olling dollars his way in increased cream checks for this tme of the year, when otherwise it begins to get dry and pastures do not produce the feed.

Not So Rosy

It cannot be denied that the farmers as a whole have been in hard lines during recent years. But when compared with the destitution and sufferings of those who live in the city's slums, the hardships f the farmer seem insignificant. Only a small percentage of those who remove from the country into the densely populated communities benefit because of the change. Many of them live and die in poverty.

The young man or the young woman who is doing even fairly well on the farm or in the small town should deliberate long and seriously before severing the home ties and joining the rush to the urban centers.

MADE BUSINESS OF AFFAIRS OF "HONOR"

Hungary is still the land of expert saber wielders and duelists. There is nothing many Hungarians would like better than to fight a duel on a misty morning, provided it could be got over with in time for them to walk up and down the Corso, alongside the Danube. Usually the swords or sabers cleave the air or draw just a sight of blood. For a duel one needs seconds and weapons as well as the time and place.

A Budapest lawyer supplies these needs, and in time developed quite a business, with seconds ready to be called upon at any hour, usually a very early one An army captain who did not favor this commercial way of carrying out duels brought the lawyer to court on the charge of taking money for organizing duels. The lawyer replied a very indignant no when the judge asked him if he accepted money for arranging affairs of honor

But he admitted accepting gifts, and added, sadly, "Alas, the gifts are becoming smaller and smaller, and the seconds are charging more and more."

Volcanic Zones

There are volcanoes in the Atlantic, though not in such numbers as in the Pacific basin. Volcanoes are limited to certain regions in the earth. Probably the most important belt of volcanoes is that bordering the Pacific ocean. Another broad belt, however, borders the Mediterranean sea and extends westward into the Atlantic ocean. Narrower belts are found in both the northern and southern portions of the Atlantic on the margins of the Caribbean sea. Bands of active volcanoes are found wherever mountain ranges are paralleled by deeps on the neighboring ocean floor These are the zones of the earth's crust which are undergoing the most rapid change of level at the present time.

The Spirit Behind

Mayor Hackett of Albany said in a recent address on economy:

"I saw a profiteer the other day riding in a $15,000 car, and I asked myself if the man wasn't too fond of show. Suppose nobody was ever to see him in this car, would he have troubled to spend so much money on it?

"A good deal of the extravagance we see around us has a hasty spirit behind it It is like little Willie:

"'Why don't you eat your nice cake, Willie?' said his teacher.

"'I'm waitin' for Samuel and Arthur,' Willie answered; 'it'll taste better with Samuel and Arthur lookin' on.'"

Hatched by Electricity

It takes the combined earnest efforts of a quarter-million hens to supply enough eggs to run a single hatchery at Petaluma, Calif., where electric heat warms a "setting" of 1,800,000 eggs at a time, and electric power turns them all six times a day, hatching an average of 70,000 chicks every 24 hours.

Perfect Daddy

He was a loyal little fellow and he wouldn't let anything said against his parents go unchallenged. One Sunday afternoon a boy friend said:

"Listen to your father snoring."

"Dad isn't snoring," was the indignant reply. "He's dreaming about a dog an' that's the dog growlin'."

Study Railroad Systems

In line with the plan of the Turkish government to develop its railway, the Anatolian railways administration will send a number of its employees to study construction and repair in Germany. Another delegation of workers now is studying western European railway administration.

Matrimony has spoiled many friend ships.

Much of the charity that begins at home is too weak to travel.

Most people are good nurses when it comes to nursing animosity.

Unless a man has some knowledge of figures he doesn't count.

Entertaining a hope is never a disinterested act of hospitality.

A man may not be too old to learn, but too old to realize it.

The wife plays the leading role on many a domestic stage.

We are the mere instruments of time; so why worry much about the passing?

Usually, where two people are closely associated, one has all the patience.

Few want to divide their money with their brethren if they haven't got much to divide.

A man might lay up something for a rainy day if it didn't rain all the time.

After one studies medicine, then he has to study people. They're all different.

Laughter makes wrinkles. The face has to be lifted because it has been lifted thousands of times.

Absence of worry is something to be thankful for, like absence of pain.

ORANGE GROWERS IN DISPUTE OVER SEED

All orange trees in California sprang from a seed from Robinson Crusoe's island, according to T. A. Van Norden Pacific Grove. And the first tree to grow in the state was the "mother tree," soon to be dedicated by Native Sons of the Golden West at Bidwell's Bar, Butte county.

The Crusoe island theory was explained as follows:

In 1849 Van Norden's brother, R. T Van Norden, came around the Horn in a sailing vessel. They called at the island of Juan Fernandez, commonly called the island of the original Robinson Crusoe. From this island Van Norden brought orange seeds.

One of these seeds grew into a tree near a ferry at Bidwell's Bar on the west branch of the Feather river, where Van Norden planted it. This is the mother tree to be dedicated.

The Van Norden theory of the origin of oranges in the state is questioned by many, who claim the "mother tree" was brought from Sacramento in 1856.

Knew the Rest

A story is related of a mayor who, in the presence of the prince of Wales, lost the thread of his oration.

"Not only do we welcome your royal highness as a representative of his majesty the king," said the mayor, "but we, we, we—" Then he began a frantic search for the next page, which he had displaced in his nervousness.

"We, we," he began again The prince prompted him. "We welcome you for yourself," he said, in a voice that reached farther than the platform, and the audience howled with delight.—From "H. R. H.," by Major Verney.

"Yes" Disappearing

Prof. Louise Pound of the University of Nebraska has recently published a report of a speech study she has made which brought to light the fact that the word "yes" is fading out from the English language. A canvass of substitutes for it among a large group of young persons produced "all right," "you bet," "O. K." and the various nasal sounds, such as "uh-huh," etc.

Midget Pony

A pony in Baltimore is so small that it is feared that its hoofs would split if shoes were put on it. The animal, though eighteen months old, weighs only 56 pounds and is only 18 inches high, rivaling in size the extinct five-toed horses whose bones have been found in the West, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine.

The Intrusive Idea

"Have you any ideas for your next speech?"

"None, whatever," answered Senator Sorghum; "I'm hoping to get back to the good old way of shaking hands with the crowd and letting everybody make up his ideas to suit himself."—Washington Star.

Easy

Landlord (to lawyer)—My tenant threatens to kill me if I turn him out. What am I to do?

The Lawyer—Well, I wouldn't turn him out!

This latest flying feat will bring about other tests, with more speed, greater endurance and longer flights In the meantime those who would promote safety in the air will be busy, and we may expect in the end that all long-distance travel will be through the air, and will be safe and comfortable as a sea voyage on an ocean liner.

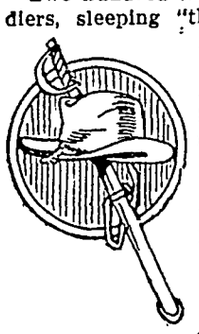
Honors Paid to Wearers of Gray

Graves of Southern Prisoners Remembered.



Two hundred and six Southern soldiers, sleeping "the last long sleep" in a little burying ground on Johnson's island in Sandusky bay, four miles north of Sandusky, Ohio, again claim the recognition that is annually theirs.

The graves of these two hundred six, mostly officers of the Confederacy of the '60s, collectively referred to in history as "the flower of the Southern army," have come to be Sandusky's own. They are never forgotten.

When the first Memorial day was observed the thoughts of the "boys" of the locality who had worn the blue, turned to their brothers of "the enemy," the boys who had worn the gray.

"They're far from friends and home, comrades," said the late Gen. Isaac Foster Mack, of Sandusky, orator of the occasion. "Let us remember them as the valiant soldiers that they were, the soldiers who gave their all for the cause they espoused, and honor them accordingly."

Flowers were plucked in the dooryards of the dwellings of those boys in blue, flowers which later rested on the graves in the Johnson's Island cemetery, of boys who had worn the gray.

Flowers on "Gray."

And so a custom was established that endures today—a custom in the continuation of which sons and daughters of those men who established it are always active in the morning of Memorial day.

Bright and early on the morning of Memorial day a boat puts out from Sandusky with Johnson's island as the destination of the dozen or so aboard. Within the island burying ground a prayer is said and a hymn sung. Then flowers are strewn upon the graves.

Who are those southern sons who sleep in the little burying ground on Johnson's island? Available records fail to disclose the names of all. They do, however, show that each man—and the men were officers with but few exceptions—was brought to the lonely island as a prisoner of war between the autumn of 1862 and the early spring of 1865.

Grave No. 1 contains the mortal remains of Coy. J. E. Crugg or Scruggs, who commanded the Eighty-fifth Virginia troops, and who died March 5, 1863.

In grave No. 2 rests Capt. E. J. Tuggles, Company H, Thirty-fifth regiment Georgia infantry, who died March 6, 1863.

The records do not show who sleep in graves 8, 4, 5, 6 and 7, their headstone bearing the single word: "Unknown."

On down the list of known soldiers buried in the cemetery one notes names of which not only the Southland but the nation today is justly proud.

Monument Marks Graves.

Through the efforts of the membership of Martha Patton chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy of Cincinnati, needed money was raised by subscription and, in 1905, the cemetery plot was purchased by the chapter, thus insuring its retention to posterity. The price paid was $1,200.

June 8, 1910, a monument erected at the entrance to the burying ground—the first monument ever erected to the memory of Southern soldiers in the so-called "North"—was dedicated. The United Daughters of the Confederacy supplied the necessary money, which was also raised by subscription.

The unveiling of the monument was made the occasion of elaborate ceremonies. The late Gen. George W. Gordon, the last major general of the Confederate army and, at the time, commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, delivered the dedicatory address. Prominent men and women of the "South" and the "North" met and fraternized.

The monument, unveiled by Mrs. Mary Patton Hudson of Cincinnati, daughter of Col. Robert W. Patton, a West Virginia ranger after whom Robert Patton chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, was named, was designed and executed by Sir Moses Ezekiel, a soldier under Lee and was donated to the United Daughters of the Confederacy by him. The cost, had not the sculptor given, would have been approximately $8,000.

Louisiana Tiger.

The statue at the entrance to the Johnson's Island cemetery represents a "Louisiana tiger," with one hand clutching a musket and the other raised above the eyes, giving the figure as a whole the appearance of peering into the distance. It has been so set that it faces the south.

The monument is 21 feet in height. The base beneath the plinth was contributed by the state of Mississippi, through its Grand Lodge of Masons and bears the inscription:

"The stone upon which this is inscribed was placed by the Grand Lodge of Mississippi in remembrance of the Masons who sleep here."

The foundation of the monument is of Winnsboro (S. C.) marble.

Foraker's Good Work.

That the Johnson's Island cemetery is to endure is due to the activities of the late United States Senator Joseph Benson Foraker of Ohio, almost as much as to the endeavors of the women of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Senator Foraker personally negotiated the procedure that vested Robert Patton chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, with title to this little plot of hallowed ground, and, later, saw to it that markers for the graves were provided by the federal government.

First Interment at Arlington in 1864

Arlington National cemetery was instituted by an act of congress for the interment of United States soldiers and sailors who have fallen in battle, or all men and women who have died in the regular or volunteer military or naval service of the United States, after having been mustered out or honorably discharged. The presentation of the commission warrant, letter of appointment, certificate of discharge or pension certificate, provided there were no dishonorable charges connected therewith, are sufficient evidence for interment.

The cemetery is the largest of interment places for our soldiers and sailors. The first interment was made at Arlington on May 13, 1864, when the body of a Confederate soldier was buried there at Abraham Lincoln's request.

COSTUME FOR BRIDE'S MOTHER; FROCKS FOR THE BRIDESMAID

WHAT shall the mother of the bride wear to her daughter's wedding? Likewise, who shall say what best becomes the mother of the groom?

As to matrons' modes for the fashionable wedding, what with a revival of the lace vogue as is for this season, the question is easily solved. The lace theme covers a vast range of ideas. At present leading couturiers are artfully combining laces, that is they use black chantilly with white lace or with silver or even tinted laces. How successful the outcome one can easily judge from the comeliness of the exquisite model to the left in this picture. For this costume black lace is posed over a flesh-colored georgette foundation which itself has been handsomely enriched with insertions of creamy lace, the same showing a light embroidery of rhinestones and tiny colorful glass beads.

If the mother of the bride or the groom is interested in the popular black-and-white ensembles, "saying it" with lace is an highly endorsed-by-the-mode way of solving the problem of "what to wear" to the wedding of the daughter or son of the house.

A lace costume in brown, in ecru or some modest tone is also recommended. With the beige or ecru lace dress, a brown malines hat with matched satin slippers would be in excellent harmony and style.

Beaded frocks, because of the slenderizing silhouettes they achieve, are preparation for June wedding festivities. At mention of frocks for the bridesmaids, visions of shimmering taffeta immediately rise before those schooled in the ways of fashion. The advent of the robe de style brings taffeta more directly into the limelight than ever, for no other fabric so yields to bouffant handling as does taffeta.

The exquisite tones and tints of taffeta always achieve a color scheme of incomparable beauty. A walk in a flower garden on a summer's day will reveal no lovelier color than does a display of gleaming taffeta.

The bodice is usually semi-fitting for the taffeta frock and with little or no trimming. But the skirt, that is a different story. It is very bouffant, and hemlines are nothing less than temperamental. According to mood, they go up in front, down at back, veer sideways, or become deeply scalloped, or perhaps they acquire a deep border of tulle.

Typical of current bridesmaids' array are the two lovely taffeta frocks in the picture. These are models of American creative genius, being designed by members of the Fashion Art League of America. The frock to the left alluringly reveals a muchly beruffled petticoat of the silk, thus subscribing to the short-length vogue, at the same time acquiring quaint grace in the bouffant skirt.

Two style items are set forth in the gown to the right, namely, the introduction of a broad lace inset at the top of the hemline and a bow of velvet ribbon at the waistline. Both ribbon and lace are doing much to feminize the mode this season.

While taffeta tells a considerable part of the fabric trend for bridesmaids' frocks, it does not tell it all. Interest is also divided between diaphanous flowery prints, colorful tulle and organdie has elicited a renewed enthusiasm among stylists. As to the prints, they are made long-sleeved with velvet bow trims. The all-tulle gown must be tres bouffant. Hand painting often adorns organdies.

ever a favorite with the matron. The one in the picture is in delicate pink worked with crystal beads and silver. The patterning purposefully shows vertical line effects.

Very smart, in fact, a latest style note, is the frock of colorful georgette print with long close-fitting transparent sleeves, and this may be charmingly adopted by the matron for wear at the smart midsummer wedding.

Benefited by Violet Rays

In an English school the experiment was made of glazing the windows of one of the classrooms with glass which permits the passage of ultra-violet rays, and it is reported that the 30 boys, nine to eleven years of age, gained three pounds more in weight and a half inch more in height than a similar group of boys in a classroom with windows of ordinary glass, says the United States Department of the Interior Bulletin.

The children exposed to the ultra-violet rays were found also to have 8.63 per cent more coloring matter in their blood and their school attendance was 3.73 per cent better.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

PEACHES PICKED AT PROPER TIME

Picking peaches at the right degree of ripeness is one of the secrets in the successful harvesting and marketing of this fruit, Dr. J. W. Lloyd, in charge of fruit and vegetable marketing investigations at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, says. The picking should start as soon as any ripe peaches can be found in the orchard and enough force should be available so that the entire orchard can be picked over in two days. Usually at least four or five pickings will be required in order to harvest the various specimens at the right degree of ripeness, according to Doctor Lloyd.

"The peach is a tender fruit and every possible precaution should be taken to avoid injury to the specimens while they are being prepared for market. Pickers and packers should be required to keep their finger and thumb nails closely trimmed to avoid puncturing the fruit. Padded baskets should be used for picking. The fruit should be hauled on spring wagons from the orchard to the packing shed. The rule should be made and observed that no fruit is to be dropped tossed or thrown in any of the picking or packing operations. Each specimen must be gently laid or placed where it is wanted.

"In years of heavy crop it is especially difficult to sell peaches unless they are carefully graded. For best results, they should be graded according to the U. S. grade specifications which have been adopted as the standard grades for Illinois peaches.

Most Illinois peaches are packed in bushel baskets. It is especially important that the baskets be well filled and that the top layer of peaches be arranged systematically in concentric rings. The peaches in the outside ring should reach at least half an inch above the lip of the basket and the facing layer should be distinctly crowned toward the center of the basket. Corrugated paper pads should always be used under the covers to protect the fruit.

The packing of peaches is greatly facilitated by proper arrangement of the packing shed. The fruit should be received at one side of the shed and gradually worked across the shed during the various steps in the process of grading and packing until it is finally removed from the opposite side of the shed to be loaded for shipment.

In years of a heavy crop the individual grower will usually receive low prices if he attempts to market his fruit alone. The best way for a peach grower to make money in a big crop year is to join with his neighbors in the formation of a co-operative organization for the purpose of grading and packing the product of all the members.

Such a local association of growers is the proper organization for preparing peaches for market. A more comprehensive organization handling a large volume of fruit is much better equipped for doing the actual selling.

Apple Aphid Controlled by Nicotine Sulphate

Experiments conducted by E. J. Newcomer of the United States bureau of entomology show that, during summer, nicotine sulphate, one-fourth pint to 100 gallons water in combination with ½ per cent oil, gave 100 per cent control of the apple aphid. Identical results were also obtained in experiments conducted by the Idaho experiment station. "In our tests last season we learned, also, that nicotine sulphate used at the rate of one-fourth pint per 100 gallons water was not effective in controlling the apple aphid in summer sprays where calcium caseinate was used instead of oil emulsion. Furthermore, when one-fifth pint nicotine sulphate was used instead of one-fourth pint in combination with oil, it gave only partial control. It appears that we cannot safely decrease the nicotine sulphate beyond the minimum doseage suggested by Newcomer."

Different Methods to Propagate Gooseberries

Gooseberries can be rooted from cuttings, but it is not an easy or sure method for the inexperienced. Hilling up the clump is a better plan.

Select a strong clump with a good many canes coming from the base. With a sharp knife cut notches half way through some of the canes as low as possible. Bank soil all through the canes three or four inches higher than the cuts, and if the season is dry water the soil now and then.

By the next spring all the cuts should have grown a fine bunch of roots, and the cane is cut just below these roots and set out where it is wanted.

Harm by Codling Moth

In addition to the fruit injury that the codling moth has caused, it has been largely responsible for the increased use of oil sprays, while the heavy applications of lead arsenate for control provoked an outbreak on the part of the public against fruit with visible spray residues. The result has been expensive wiping machines, and now a new process of washing the fruit in dilute hydrochloric acid. All of this is blamed on the codling moth.

Home-Grown Feed Saves Dairymen

Not Difficult Matter if Crop Rotations Are Correctly Arranged.

(By F. B. MORRISON, Assistant Director, Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Wisconsin.)

Right now, many dairymen, who have been paying heavy feed bills month after mouth, are asking themselves, "Is there not some way of growing the feeds on my own farm which will make a balanced ration for my herd?"

It is entirely possible for them to do this if they will plan their crop rotations right.

Experiments have shown that a simple ration, made up of plenty of good alfalfa hay and corn silage, with a mixture of ground corn and oats is satisfactory for cows producing not over about one pound of butterfat daily. Ground barley may be substituted for the ground corn.

Home-Grown Rations Stand Test.

In each of two trials a ration of alfalfa hay, corn silage and a concentrate mixture of equal weights of corn and oats was compared with another ration made up of the same feeds plus linseed and cottonseed meal. One mixture was fed to one group of cows and the other to another lot, the same amounts being fed in both cases. In each trial the home-grown ration maintained the yield of milk and butterfat as well as the ration to which the linseed and cottonseed meal had been added.

These trials, together with the results of nutrition experiments by the agricultural chemistry department, show that when cows have plenty of choice alfalfa hay there is no need of purchasing expensive protein-rich concentrates to keep up a fairly good production. This is because alfalfa hay is sufficiently rich in protein to balance the ration.

For the best cows, those producing more than a pound of butterfat daily, it is advisable to add some protein-rich feed to the ration even when there is plenty of alfalfa hay.

Soy Beans for Emergency Crop.

If a farmer will have no alfalfa this summer, soy beans will prove a good substitute. The county agent or agricultural college will tell how to get a good stand and care for the crop.

Feeding experiments carried on by the agricultural college during the last four years have shown that soy-bean hay is worth about three-fourths as much as alfalfa for dairy cows, which gives it a high rank as a dairy feed.

Clover hay is much lower in protein than alfalfa, making it less suited for an entirely home-grown ration. Therefore, even with plenty of first-class clover hay and corn silage, considerable protein-rich feeds such as cottonseed meal, linseed meal, wheat bran or gluten feed are necessary to balance the ration even though the cows are not producing more than a pound of fat daily.

System of Brooding and Rearing Chicken Flock

Proof is definite that improperly brooded chicks never produce as many eggs and never are as vigorous and healthy as the same quality of chicks properly brooded.

Poultrymen cannot safely depend on buying pullets of good quality each fall to replenish their flocks. They must raise their own young stock to be sure of getting the desired quality. Since the chicks must be raised by some method it ought to be by some good system of brooding and rearing the flock.

If best results are to be obtained during the brooding season, practices adapted to the chicks and to the region they are grown in must be adopted.

Adding New Blood

Although promiscuous and yearly additions of new blood is undesirable, an occasional introduction is advantageous where the poultryman does not have time to trap-nest his stock. Decided improvement can be made by this method if it is known that the stock from which the blood comes is superior to one's own flock. The purchase of hatching eggs is one of the cheapest methods of introduction of new blood.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Women Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, colds, or sour, gassy stomach.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Klemme Meat Market

What Is Germozone ?

Without a doubt, Germazone is the most widely used poultry remedy on the market today. Its unusual popularity is due entirely to the merit of the product.

Because Germazone is purple in color, some people have assumed that it is only a solution of Permanganate of Potash and water, but many discriminating poultry raisers who have experimented with both, have found that there is something more to Germazone—a something that very often means the difference between saving and losing their fowls.

Germazone Is Marvelous For Poultry

Germazone is especially valuable in preventing and controlling the diarrhoeas and digestive disorders of little chicks and grown fowls, and will be found of great value in practically all cases of mold poisoning in cattle, horses, sheep and swine. The regular use of Germazone in the drinking water every other day, is a big factor in preventing disease among poultry. There are hundreds of uses outlined in the free Lee Text Book.

We Now Have Lee's Stock Dip In Bulk!

We carry a complete line of Le's Products: Germazone for Poultry, Hogs and Sheep; Lee's Louse Powder for either Poultry or Stock; White Diarrhea Remedy; Lee's Poultry Wormer; and other Products.

HN TANNER DIED SUNDAY MORNING

S A PROMINENT MAN IN THIS COMMUNITY

ondent Over Wife's Health Is Thought Cause Of Act

nis entire community was great- hocked Sunday morning to hear he death, by hanging, of Mr. n Tanner, who resided on his six miles south west of Klemis thought that Mr. Tanner be- e despondent over his wife's ill th, as last fall she became men- ill and was taken to the state pital at Cherokee for treatment this caused him such great con- that the burden was more than ould undergo. However, we un- tand Mrs. Tanner is making a ked improvement and it is be- ed that it is only a matter of e until she will be restored to lth.

r Will Schaper of Charles City, rother-in-law of Mr. Tanner had staying at the home for a visit. heard Mr Tanner arise Sunday ning at five o'clock and later him in the yard feeding the kens. Breakfast was prepared failing to hear Mr. Tanner re- nd to the call a search was made his dead body was found in the of the cow barn.

r Tanner was one of the well do men of his township. By d and honest labor he had built himself and family a fine home, ed his farm which is one of the in the community and had al- s taken an active part in both c and church matters in the com- nity He had no financial wor- as far as is known and was not peculator Mr. Tanner was suc- ful especially in stock raising. s a man, Mr. Tanner was highly pected by all who knew him and honest and fair in all his deal- s. He is a man who will be atly missed by his many friends.

TUARY OF MR. JOHN TANNER

(By Rev. A. W. Gauger)

lr John Tanner was born Oct 1877, at Kankakee, Illinois, a of Frank and Lena Tanner who e natives of Switzerland.

When the deceased was but four rs old his family moved to Hum- t, Kansas, where he spent his hood days and there acquired education in the district schools, ich he attended to fourteen years age.

He then began to work as a farm d in his native state and later in community, working for some the prominent farmers of Han- k County.

At the age of 27 years he began farm for himself by renting land. thus acquired the means which bled him to purchase the fine m which became their permanent me in Twin Lake Township.

On February 20, 1904 Mr. Tanner s united in marriage to Miss Rosa aper Their married life until heavy clouds of the last while e upon them was a happy one eed. They companioned together d they planned together, they rked out their plans together. us they succeeded to build a fine me for themselves and their chil- n and to acquire a goodly portion this world's goods.

Six children came to gladden their me. They are: Clarence, Bernice, ther J., Robert, Frances and Flo- ce.

While Mr Tanner was signally cessful in the acquiring of ma- ial things by honest, industrial l, he also took an interest in ngs spiritual and religious.

We are not able to state how far k in his life ths dates, however, learn that somewhere along in 00 or 1901 he joined the United esbyterian Church in Garner while worked near there, being induced do so by friends who were inter- ed in his spiritual welfare.

Upon moving to their present m south west of Klemme. they ited with the Liberty Methodist iscopal Church. He took a vital erest in church matters and be- came a staunch supporter not only of the local church but also for the advancement of God's Kingdom elsewhere During the last years he served his church in official capacity as trustee.

As a citizen, a neighbor, a friend, he enjoyed the respect and goodwill of everybody.

During the last months of last year and the first months of this year heavy clouds began to hang over their home. The mind of the companion of the deceased became clouded. It threw a pall over this once happy home. From the very beginning the husband and companion suffered with her and it had a telling depressing effect on him, the reach of which no one will ever know.

He sought refuge in God and prayer and found it It seems, however as time went on that the load became so unbearably heavy that he felt that he could no longer endure it when he gave way to the strain and the life string snapped.

He died at the age of 50 years, 7 months and 17 days Besides the children who survive him, he is survived by his companion and by his aged mother of Chanute, Kansas, and who was present at the services. Three brothers and two sisters also survive him They are. Frank, f Idaho, Albert of Klemme, William of Goodell, Mrs. Herman Pilgrim and Mrs. Elmer Rowson both of Chanute, Kansas, and all were present at the funeral with the exception f Frank. Brothers and relatives of Mrs. Tanner persent were, Mr. and Mrs William Schaper of Charles City, L E. Schaper, of Wapello, Ia., and Miss Roxanna Schaper, of Sioux City, Iowa.

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon A short service was held at the home at 1:30 o'clock and at the Klemme Methodist Church at 2.00 o'clock, conducted by Rev. A. W. Gauger, pastor and who was assisted by Rev. Van Metre of the Garner Methodist Church. The music and singing was by the Liberty Methodist Church choir and was beautifully given.

Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery.

YOURS PINK OR BLUE?

Comes now the pink step-in for the virile American male. In cities throughout the country there are being sold delicate underthings to encase the bodies of the grandsons of those hardy pioneers who wore no undrewear at all.

Of course, it's all right After all, is there any logical reason why a man shouldn't wear pink or blue silk underwear if he wants to?

No, there isn't And yet—well, in our mind's eye we can see the knobby knees, spindly calves and sunburnt neck of Mr. Average American emerging from the silken folds of a dainty orchid chemise, and the effect is ludicrous.

BRICK SCHOOL HOUSE TO BE BUILT IN LIBERTY TWP.

Is First Brick Country School House In Hancock County

John Suckow, Klemme building contractor was the successful bidder at the school house letting held on Tuesday evening, for the building of a brick school house in Liberty Township, District No. 7.

The new school house will be of brick construction and will be the first brick country school house in Hancock County.

The new school will replace the old frame structure, known as the Wm Stille school, two miles west of Klemme.

Contractor Suckow will begin work on the new structure soon.

School officials believe that in the future new school houses will be largely brick construction Liberty is contemplating the building of another such structure in the near future.

EPWORTH LEAGUE MAKE PLANS FOR SUMMER

Group Expects To Attend Summer Camp At Lake Okoboji

Adventure! Is there a person who is not thrilled at the thought of adventure? If there is, it's a sure indication that he's either dead on his feet, or getting old. And who wants to be considered old?

The theme "Adventure" will occupy a prominent place in the Epworth League discussion Sunday evening at 7.15 The topic "Playing the Game Together," will be presented in part by Earl Josten. There will be special music and an appropriate reading.

The Epworth League is gathering its forces for its summer activity. Institute enthusiasm is rising, and plans are being worked out for a group to attend the Okoboji Institute in July. Gladys Wilson and Elvira Stille compose the Institute committee. A contest and a party are also on the calendar for the near future.

A few of the members have left to attend summer school, but others are returning to take their places. The temporary cabinet for the summer months will be:

President, Earl Josten; First V. P., Ruth Bailey and Harvey Nelson; Third V. P., Leona Poort; Fourth V. P., Elvira Stille; Secretary, William Gauger, Treasurer, Orvis Poort.

As a special feature of the Institute this year there will be a Bible story telling contest, with a prize of seventy-five dollars Ruth Bailey is in charge of the preliminary contest here.

TWENTY FIVE PIECE BAND AT BAYSIDE PARK SUNDAY

Fast Ball Game Expected Between Gallagher's O-P And Rudd

Charles Ritz, manager of Bayside Amusement Park at Clear Lake, has arranged for a good enteraining program for the Park visitors next Sunday, June 5th. A concert band of twenty-five pieces will play popular concerts on the open-air stage both afternoon and night. A fast ball game between Gallagher's O-P team and Rudd will start at three o'clock at the Bayside ball park. Rudd has a good team, according to reports, and a well balanced contest is expected. All amusement concessions including the skating rink, will be open Sunday and all are invited to visit the park for a day of fun and pleasure. The Bayside management especially invites you to bring your dinner and make use of the free picnic grounds and tables, as well as the playgrounds for children.

ACCIDENT CAUSES TELEPHONE COMPANY INCONVENIENCE

Service Held Up A Few Days While Cable Was Being Dried

The telephone system was out of commission for a few days the past week due to a break in the cable which became wet following a heavy rain. One of the new speed sign posts was accidently driven over a cable near the Billmyre home and the lead case was pierced by the steel post. It took several days to dry the cable by opening it up and pouring hot parafine onto it. It is a slow process but the only way it could be dried

Have Enrolled For Summer School At Cedar Falls

Klemme is indeed well represented at the summer school at State Tachers College, Cedar Falls. Those from Klemme attending are Ethel Wellemeyer, Fern Stille, Hallie Greimann, Marie Gauger, Lawson Hockey, Dora Swanson and Mabel Schaefer. They may be one or two others of whom we do not know.

NEW TRAFFIC SIGNS INSTALLED IN KLEMME

New Speed Signs Placed At Various Points To Govern Autos

The Twn Dads have purchased a number of new traffic signs which are installed at various points leading into town, and others placed in town. The speed limit in the business district is now 15 miles and it will pay to observe the rules. The school zone is protected with signs warning motorists to slow down to 8 miles. Observe the signs and help prevent accidents in Klemme.

FIRST BALL GAME OF SEASON HERE NEXT SUNDAY

Coulter And Klemme Will Cross Bats On Local Diamond

A ball game is announced here for Sunday, June 5th, between Coulter and Klemme on the local diamond.

Klemme and Coulter mixed up a lively game last fall at Meservey for "Watermelon Day," when the locals were defeated by a small margin.

This is the opening game of the season for Klemme.

FLOOD RELIEF

Plans are already under way for loans to rehabilitate farmers in the flooded area of the Mississippi basin, in order that they may sow crops and restore their homes as soon as the water recedes. Business men of Arkansas contemplate a corporation to make loans direct to farmers, and the aid of the intermediate credit banks is assured by the federal farm loan board. The Red Cross has made provision for feed and seed, which will be required for a million acres exclusive of Louisiana. It is said that flood relief and control will be made the outstanding feature of the President's message at the December session of congress.

Higher And Faster

Two American aviators have set a record for continuous fying by remaining in the air for more than fifty hours. In doing so they drained the fuel tank which contained 385 gallons of gasoline, and traveled 4,000 miles at an average speed of 80 miles an hour. This feat was a remarkable test of endurance, not only of the two aviators themselves, but of the flying machine and its motor.

SHERIFF'S SALE

Bohemian Savings Bank, of Protivin, Iowa vs. J. M. Fisher and C. K. Moe

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virtue of a Special execution issued out of the office of the Clerk of the District Court, in Hancock County on a judgment rendered May 6th, 1927, May Term of said Court, A. D 1927, for the sum of Six Thousand Eight Hundred Two & 46-100 Dollars debt, and One Hundred Forty-Six & 15-100 Dollars costs, in favor of Bohemian Savings Bank, of Protivin, Iowa, and against J. M. Fisher and to the Sheriff of Hancock County directed, I have levied upon the following described property, to-wit:

The North Half of the Southeast Quarter (N½ SE¼), of Section Eleven (11), Township Ninety-Four (94), North Range Twenty-Three (23), West of the 5th P. M. Hancock County, Iowa.

NOW, THEREFORE, Public Notice is hereby given that I shall, on the 13th day of June 1927, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., at the front door of the Court House, in Garner, in Hancock County, offer and sell at public outcry, to the highest bidder for cash, all the right, title, and interest that the above named Defendans had on the 14th day of May A. D. 1927, or now have in and to the above described property, or so much thereof as is necessary to satisfy said execution together with costs and all accruing costs, unless the same shall be sooner satisfied.

Dated at the Sheriff's office in Garner, this 14th day of May, A. D. 1927.

E. P. HANSON,
Sheriff of Hancock County, Iowa.
(Publish June 2-9, 1927.)

Still Working

Most of the world's store of real gold is in Uncle Sam's vaults at Washington, but its soul goes marching on. It is not idle, though inactive.

Earl Josten and Eric Josten drove to Harris, Iowa, Friday, to look over the high schol there, of which Earl has been elected principal for next fall. They liked te "lay-out" real well. With his other work Earl will also have charge of the school band.

NO MORE MOVIE SHOWS IN KLEMME

MANAGER M. O. BARR CLOSES PICTURE SHOW HERE

Venture In Theatre Business Here Proved Unprofitable

M. O. Barr, who has been managing the Idle Hour Theatre for the past several months, or since last fall, ran his last movie show at the theatre last Saturday night.

Mr. Barr has been putting on high class pictures but the small crowds he has been getting many times did not even pay for the cost of the pictures, let alone many other items of expense It has been a losing proposition for Mr. Barr so he decided that as matters did not improve he could save himself a lot of money by closing the theatre.

Klemme is now without a moving picture show and the prospects do not look very rosy for a show in the near future as all who have tried their hand at the business have all given up the experiment of trying to make it pay out, or even break even.

While Mr. Barr had the show he gave the people of Klemme an opportunity to see high class pictures, as good as any appearing in larger towns, but this does not seem to be a movie comunity.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

With the memory of the fine services of last Sunday lingering we are planning for most profitable services next Sunday. The same speaker will fill both the pulpits morning and evening. Special music will feature.

Let the Epworth Leaguers come out in full number and get information on the Epworth Convention to be hheld at Clear Lake in June.

The Juniors are planning a real picne to be held on the coming Saturday. Their plan is to go to some woods. Leave it to the Juniors to have a real time.

Our midweek services are held at the parsonage this weke.

INFANT OF MR. AND MRS. JOHN PANHOFF DIED THIS A. M.

Six Weeks Old Baby Died Suddenly At home Of Parents

Ivan George, ix weeks old infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John Panhoff passed away suddenly this morning. The little one had been suffering from stomach disorders and this is thought to have been the cause of its death. The infant was found dead this morning when the parents awakened. When last given attention during the night it was apparently quite normal, and it's sudden death was a great blow to the grief stricken parents.

Funeral services will be held at the home Saturday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock, conducted by Rev. C Grosshuesch, and burial will be made in the Klemme Cemetery.

WE THANK YOU!

We wish to thank all those who took part or helped us in our Memorial Day Services. We thank the various business houses for closing during the exercises. The Adam-Schaefer Post, Klemme American Legion and Auxiliary Unit.

Kicking!

It is impossible to please everybody. The prosperity of the automobile business is a matter of almost general gratification. However, there is one envious exception. The shoemakers are "kicking." In convention recently they bewailed the fact that men are now buying two pairs of shoes a year where formerly they bought three. And they blame it all on the prosperity of the automobile business.

Albert Yahnke and family drove in from Garden City, Minnesota Saturday for a few days visit with Klemme relatives and friends.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE hundred and fifty years ago the United States had arrived at a crucial moment in its struggle for independence from the mother country. Despite Washington's brilliant victories at Princeton and Trenton, which had retrieved the earlier disasters in the campaign of 1776 and which had raised the hopes of the patriots for the ultimate success of their cause, the year 1777 opened with the promise that the decisive struggle was yet ahead.

For one thing, the British had realized by this time that in Washington they had to deal with a master strategist and that in the Continental army which he led they were no longer dealing with an "undisciplined rabble of farmers." So the bulldog qualities of the Briton which are brought out best by defeat began to assert themselves and the British ministry began to make adequate preparations for the stern task ahead The first evidence of Great Britain's determination to strike a telling blow at her rebellious colonies was to plan a campaign which would split the colonies in two and isolate New England, which it looked upon as the head of the rebellion.

The plan, as conceived was a sound one and with every promise of success. The natural line of operation to bring about this split was the route between Lakes Champlain and George and the Hudson river. Gen. John Burgoyne was to start from Canada and come south via Champlain and George while Lord Howe, who then held New York, was to proceed up the Hudson and meet him at Albany. A third force, starting from Canada, was to move from Oswego on Lake Ontario, proceed down the Mohawk river, ravage the rich interior of New York and with the stores thus accumulated supply Burgoyne's and Howe's forces when the three armies met at Albany.

Out on the western frontier, where the city of Rome, N. Y., now stands, there was situated a fort which was destined to play an important part in the breaking up of the British campaign and where one of the most dramatic events of the Revolution was to take place. Originally it was known as Fort Stanwix, built by colonial troops in 1758 as a protection for the western frontier against the French and Indians and named for Gen. John Stanwix, a gallant Irishman, who had served in the French and Indian wars.

After the menace of the French and Indians had been removed, Fort Stanwix was allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, its wooden buildings and stockade rotted to the ground and its earthworks almost leveled by the elements. Early in 1776 Gen. Philip Schuyler, commander of the American forces in the north, ordered Colonel Dayton to occupy this important place, which guarded the western gateway to the Mohawk valley, and to rebuild the fort. Dayton set about to do this and gave the new fort the name of Fort Schuyler, in honor of his commander.

In the meantime the British expedition which was to sweep through the Mohawk valley was under way. It was commanded by Col. Barry St. Leger, who started at the same time that Burgoyne started south. St. Leger ascended the St. Lawrence, landed at Oswego about the middle of July, 1777, and set out for Fort Schuyler. Meanwhile that post had been garrisoned by troops commanded by Col. Peter Gansevoort, an officer in the New York line, who had served with Arnold and Montgomery before Quebec and who had been ordered there to finish the work of repairing the fort started by Dayton. He was later joined by Col. Marinus Willett, an able officer whose later services were brilliant.

On August 2 Lieut. Col Mellon, bringing with him 200 men of the Ninth Massachusetts regiment and two bateaux of provisions, arrived at the fort to reinforce Gansevoort and Willett. The fort now had a force of about 750 men and on August 3 the post was surrounded by St. Leger's army of some 1,700 British regulars, Tories and Indians. According to the tradition which is now generally accepted, with Mellon's supplies came the news that on June 14, 1777, the Second Continental congress had adopted a resolution whereby the flag of the United States was to be composed of thirteen alternate red and white stripes and a blue field upon which appeared 13 stars. Upon his arrival St. Leger had sent a formal demand to Gansevoort for the surrender of the post. The reply was an emphatic refusal and to add point to the refusal a new flag which had been hastily contrived was run up to the top of the mast and a cannon that had been leveled at the enemy's camp was fired. This flag is described in Colonel Willett's diary as follows: "The necessity of having a flag had, upon the arrival of the enemy, taxed the invention of the garrison a little, and a decent one was soon contrived. The white stripes were cut out of an ammunition shirt, the blue out of the camlet cloak taken from the enemy at Peekskill, while the red stripes were made of different pieces of stuff procured from one and another of the garrison."

But this historic event is only one of the several which took place at Fort Schuyler, or Fort Stanwix, as it is so often called. At the approach of St. Leger, General Schuyler had called out the Tryon county militia under the command of the veteran Gen. Nicholas Herkimer, who with an army of some 800 men was on the way to Fort Schuyler. Near Oriskany creek, eight miles from the fort, Herkimer halted and sent messengers to Gansevoort, requesting him to fire three guns immediately upon their arrival. Gansevoort was then to make a sortie against the enemy and Herkimer would advance and try to break through the enemy to join him and thus raise the siege.

The plan was an excellent one, but unfortunately it was upset by the impatience of the militia, and especially some of Herkimer's officers, who demanded to be led against the enemy at once. The general pleaded with them in vain to wait until the guns of Fort Schuyler announced that Gansevoort would support their movement. But they insisted on rushing forward to their own destruction for they fell into an ambuscade prepared by a large party of Tories and Indians, and half of their number was slain in the fierce little Battle of Oriskany.

In the midst of the battle Herkimer's messengers reached Gansevoort, who had heard the distant firing and then realized for the first time what it meant. He immediately dispatched a force of 250 picked men under Willett, who fell upon St. Leger's camp, stampeded a part of his force with heavy losses, captured twenty wagon loads of plunder, five British flags and returned to the fort without losing a man. These flags were hoisted on the flagstaff of Fort Schuyler under the new flag as a further gesture of defiance to the enemy. It was more than that—for it was also a prophecy of the ultimate triumph of the cause for which that flag stood.

St. Leger continued the siege, but could accomplish little against the stout defense of Gansevoort and Willett. Colonel Willett had volunteered for the duty of making his way through the enemy lines and carrying news of the fort's condition to Schuyler. That general immediately dispatched Brig. Gen. Benedict Arnold with a force of 1,200 men to raise the siege. By this time the Indians, dismayed by their losses at Oriskany (for St. Leger's allies had suffered as heavily in that engagement as had Herkimer's men) and frightened at the reports of the strength of Arnold's force which was moving against them, got out of hand and finally deserted St. Leger in a body. That commander realized that he was up against a hopeless proposition. So he raised the siege of Fort Schuyler and retreated precipitately.

So Fort Schuyler is more than a landmark where Old Glory first flew in the face of the enemy. It was the first American victory in the decisive campaign of the war. St. Leger's failure was the first blow struck at the success of the British plan. The second came at Bennington, Vt., on August 10 when Gen. John Stark and his Green Mountain Boys won their victory over the Hessians whom Burgoyne had sent to that place to capture a store of supplies. By this time Burgoyne was in a predicament. The British ministry, after laying its ambitious plan, by some strange blindness to the necessity of assuring absolute cooperation of all units in it, had failed to notify Howe of his part. So he did nothing while Burgoyne hoped in vain for help from that quarter. Fate held in store for Burgoyne Saratoga and surrender!

This year marks the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of those stirring events which made world history. New York is planning to celebrate their anniversary with sesquicentennial celebrations which will have nation-wide interest because they were events of vital importance to the whole nation. No doubt the most important of those celebrations will be the one which will be held near Saratoga on the anniversary of Burgoyne's surrender. But on August 3 there will be one which will commemorate one of the most dramatic events in all American history. It will take place where Fort Schuyler once stood and it will commemorate the day on which Old Glory first faced the enemy. So Flag day this year has a particular significance, not only because June 14 marks the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as our national emblem but because it foreshadows the anniversary some six weeks later of the day when Americans first fought in defense of that emblem and the principles for which it stands.

The author of this article, Elmo Scott Watson, is a well-known writer on the history of the United States, particularly that of the American frontier, and he has made a special study of the thrilling and romantic Revolutionary war period in the famous Mohawk valley of New York. In preparing this article, which deals with an incident in that period, he has drawn upon the most authentic sources of information available in order to present here an accurate account of the events recorded. Read it and you can tell your children on Flag day the story of the historic occasion, "When Old Glory First Faced the Enemy," an army of British and Indians one August day 150 years ago on the old New York frontier.

FRUIT PACKAGES ORDERED EARLY

A good supply of packages in the shed is what saves the fruit grower from the merciless traveling buyer and trucker. With barrels or baskets on hand, the grower is always prepared to pack, ship or store his crop if the local markets are not satisfactory.

Many growers put off buying packages until just before the crop is ready to pick. This generally results in delay in harvesting the fruit and sometimes a loss in rehandling the crop. The crop should be carefully estimated and extra containers ordered, as most crops over-run expectations and packages can always be held for another year if there is a surplus.

Growers having a local trade find the basket an excellent container, although a supply of large, heavy manila bags holding from one to two pecks are very handy, and relatively inexpensive. The bushel hamper and round bushel are very satisfactory shipping baskets, but should be ring-packed and carefully handled to get the best results.

The barrel is the standard package for the average grower. It is easy to handle, relatively easy to pack and handles a large bulk with small trouble.

A good product deserves a good container. Cheap or second-hand packages should be avoided, whenever possible, except for temporary storage or hauling. Barrels and baskets should be made of good clean stock, free from knots and discoloration. On the other hand a good package deserves a good pack, and too much attention cannot be given to the grading, sizing and packing of the fruit.

Removing Arsenic Residue on Apples Is Easy Task

There need be no hesitancy about spraying fruit because of the danger from spray residue. If there is an excessive amount of residue, a solution of salt, soda ash and water will remove it.

This new solution was devised by Dr. W. P. Headden, chemist at the Colorado experiment station. It is made by taking four pounds each of soda ash and ordinary table salt and dissolving them in 100 pounds of water. This solution can be used in either wooden or iron vessels. It should be heated to 100 degrees Fahrenheit, but should not be raised materially above that temperature.

Enough apples are then added to the solution to cover the surface thickly. The apples should be stirred gently with a mop or some equivalent instrument, care being taken not to bruise them. The stirring should be continued for ten minutes. On removal from the bath, the apples should be rinsed to remove the wash liquid.

Go ahead and spray. Use lead arsenate for the codling moth, or use some of the new sprays that leave no poisonous residue. It is easier to get rid of the residue than to remove insect injury.

Grape Crop Is Borne on Current Season Shoots

The grape crop is borne on current season shoots arising from one-year-old wood. This year's shoots automatically becomes next year's canes. Therefore, the pruner is, of necessity, most interested in the past season's shoots or canes for the coming year.

Canes vary in their ability to produce fruit. Partridge, at the Michigan station, and others, have shown that Concord canes with a diameter of one-fourth inch or over and with internodes averaging about five inches are the most productive type. It is not always possible to secure enough of the most desirable canes, since no two vines are exactly alike. It becomes necessary at times to use the over-vigorous, much branched, or "Bull" cane. Rather than remove these branches, and depend on the weak axillary buds at the base of the laterals, it is recommended to spur the branches to at least three buds.

Is summer pruning of Concord grapevines advisable? It is a widely used practice in some localities. An experiment conducted at the Arkansas station the past year indicates strongly that anything, whether it be pests or shears, which reduces the leaf area has deleterious effects on the immediate crop.

December Eggs Are Desirable

Possible to Increase Profits by Developing Better Laying Strain.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The average farm hen lays less than 60 eggs a year and she lays them during the season of lowest prices. It is quite possible to increase the egg profits from the farm flock, says Dr. M. A. Jull, poultry husbandman of the United States Department of Agriculture, by developing a flock that will not only produce more eggs in a year but will produce them in the fall and winter. Ten eggs laid in December, he says, are worth 20 laid in April or May.

Lowest Egg Prices.

A study of the trend in the average monthly farm prices from 1910 to 1924 shows that the lowest wholesale egg prices prevail in April, and that there is a slight increase in July and August, with a more perceptible increase beginning in September. The highest price is reached in December. The important point for farm flock owners to realize is that it takes fewer eggs from October to January to pay for a given quantity of feed than during any other time of the year. Although the price of grain or of eggs cannot be controlled on the farm, egg production can be regulated to a considerable extent.

Ability to Lay Eggs.

The ability to lay eggs is inherited. To develop an egg-laying strain requires careful selection and the adoption of a consistent breeding policy. The average farm hen should not only lay at least 144 eggs in a year but most of them should be laid from October to March. This can be accomplished by building up the flock from selected females that have these characters and with males produced by such females. Four guides to improvement are the selecting each year of (1) those hens which mature early; (2) those which lay best after they begin; (3) those which seldom go broody; and (4) those which lay well throughout the late summer and fall. Furthermore it is important to hatch the chicks as early as possible.

Increasing Demand for Capons at High Prices

As there is a growing demand for good capons at top prices, a few of the more important things to follow to produce good capons may be of some benefit.

In the first place, only stock from good vigorous breeders should be used. While most any breed may be used for producing capons, a bird of good size and plumpness makes the better carcass. The different breeds of the American class such as the Rocks, Reds, Wyandottes, Lavas, Rhode Island Whites, etc., make fine capons. In the English class are the White or Buff Orpington or Dorking. The Asiatic, the Brahma, White Cochin or Langshan. The Jersey Giant also makes an exceptionally fine capon. The Mediterranean, while very easily caponized, do not make top price birds.

Important That Chicks Be Confined Near Stove

It is important that chicks be confined near the brooder stove when they are first put into the brooder. This may be done by putting a wire screen around the brooder so that the chicks cannot get out of the warmth until they have learned to go where the heat suits them best. If there is any floor draft it is advisable to make this retainer out of tin or some similar material. After such a retainer is removed, the corners of the brooder house should be rounded off with some material so as to prevent the chicks from crowding into the corners. Proper regulation of the heat will also prove an important factor in preventing chicks from crowding.

Workers Finding More Time for Recreation

The five-day week has been a bugbear to many an employer, but think how near we have come to it already. A hundred years ago the workman labored for 12 hours a day for six days a week, and in return got shelter, food and clothing and not much of any of them. Now, in many industries, the 44-hour week is common, so that the step to 40 hours is short.

And the employers' habits have changed. The afternoon off for golf, the winter vacation in addition to one in the summer, the week-end that begins on Friday afternoon—how many are shocked by these?

The sage Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York American league baseball team, thinks his possession worth $3,000,000, due to the added leisure of Americans. And golf, he says, has added to the attendance at baseball parks. Interest in one has aroused interest in the other.—Nation's Business.

New York Planning to Put Streets on Roofs

New York city talks of a 16-mile roadway to be built on the roofs of 12-story buildings from the lower part of the city to Yonkers. Gotham's traffic problem is costing the city a million and a half dollars a day. This elevated highway on the roofs would be a motor-express thoroughfare. The man living out of town could motor down to his work without interference of cross-traffic and park his car on the roof of the building in which he makes his living. The improvement would soon pay for itself. Part of the plan calls for a series of moving platforms for pedestrians, along the second floor, the platforms running from a speed slow enough to step on easily, up to 20 miles an hour, to provide free transit on two new north and south avenues. It all reads like an H. G. Wells novel, but it may be realized.—Capper's Weekly.

FACTS about used car allowances

Most new car sales now involve the trading-in of a buyer's used car. More and more people are asking: "Why should my used car seem to have several values?.... Why should dealers in different makes of cars offer me allowances differing materially?.... Does the largest allowance offered mean the best deal for me?"

Here are basic facts:

1 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value: what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 The largest trade-in allowance which is offered on your used car is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; but sometimes it is not.

4 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

5 Judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

WHEN YOU are ready to trade-in your present car, remember that after all you are making a purchase and not a sale. You are buying a new car and simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of a new car.

HOW A FARMING COMMUNITY WAS REBUILT AGAIN

Glass factories and coal mines had kept the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker and the banker busy the year round in Point Marion Pennsylvania. Hired men left the farms followed by the farm owners to get their share of the attractive wages.

Suddenly labor saving machinery was brought in to the old hand method window glass factories. The coal business took a drop and hundreds of people had to find new employment Savings accounts dwindled. Deposits of the two banks dropped off almost a million dollars.

"Bring in more industries," was being suug at luncheon clubs all over the land, every town seemed to be advertising unlimited water supply cheap fuel and free factory sites Competition was keen and the reward doubtful.

The question came, "Why not stimulate the argricultural pursuits of the community which have lain dormant so long." Farm income might be increased and production costs lowered in many instances.

The first move of one of the banks was the purchase of healthy chicks These were furnished by the bank at wholesale to interested farmers payment to be made by note payable in six months. The bank followed through by aiding in the dissemination of culling and eeding knowledge and by helping to market the cockerels which in most instances paid the initial cost of all the chicks.

When the pumpkins began to turn yellow, plans were laid for a great community exhibit. Besides the poultry display, farm produce exhibits from the surrounding country were entered. Altogether it made an impressive exhibit, bringing home the lesson to Point Marion people that there were great undeveloped opportunities within their own door yards which they had overlooked.

The annual exhibit will be continued in the future by the bank. A horse show is sponsored, better seed corn and seed potatoes are made available to the farmers for planting and the bank will continue to build agriculture in the community as a sound basis on which to work. "It will probably be some time before we shall see larger fruits of our endeavors," the banker says, "but we are looking ahead ten to fifteen years."

Flying-Machine Idea Older Than Balloon

Contrary to popular belief, the principle of the flying machine was introduced long before the balloon came into notice. But the lighter-than-air carriers were for a long period considered the only possible method of air travel, and for that reason have become the symbol of pioneer aeronautics.

Without even considering Ovid's mythological tale of the mechanical flying bird, Aulus Gellius, in his "Attic Nights" writes of a wooden dove invented by the Greek mathematician, Archytas of Tarentus, in the year 400 B. C. The same Archytas is said also to have invented a navigable kite.

There is then a long gap in "aeronautics" until the Fifteenth century when Leonardo Da Vinci, famous as the painter of "Mona Lisa," is reputed to have in about the year 1480 outlined the plan of a flying machine Nothing has ever been found of the draft.

Two hundred years later one Borelli presented a pair of mechanical wings to a wondering public, while in the same period Besnier, a French locksmith, built a pair of oscillating wings with which he is reputed to have traveled short distances.

Perhaps the most definite and practical plan for an airplane left to posterity, prior to the modern conceptions of Maxim, Langley, the Wrights and others, is that conceived by Swedenborg, the extraordinary universal genius of the Eighteenth century. His carefully worked out draft was planned about 1720 and is now in the archives of the government of Sweden. Swedenborg also left plans, or working drafts, of a submarine, air-gun, universal musical instrument, a mechanical carriage, etc.

Then Play Was Resumed

Two small boys in Garfield park were recently overheard quarreling about their comparative intellectual abilities. The older said: "If your brains were dynamite, there would not be enough of them to blow your hat off." To this the younger replied, "Well, if your brains were red ink, there would not be enough of them to dot an i."—Indianapolis News.

Machine Induces Slumber

MRS. BASSETT ALWAYS TIRED

Now in Good Health by Using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lansing, Michigan.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound whenever I needed it. When I first used it I was so bad I could hardly walk across the room without crying. I was tired all the time. I think my trouble was coming on me for six months before I realized it. I read of your wonderful medicine in the paper, and * * * my husband bought me a bottle, and after the first few doses I felt better, so kept on taking it until I was well and strong. I take it at times when I feel tired and it helps me. I will always have a good word for your medicine and tell anyone what good it has done me. I recommended it to my neighbor for her girl, who is sixteen years old, and it was just what she needed. She is feeling fine now, and goes to school every day."—Mrs. E. F. Bassett, 216 South Hayford Avenue, Lansing, Michigan.

Do not continue to feel all run-down and half sick when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is sold by druggists everywhere. It is a root and herb medicine and has been used by women for over fifty years.

Wives Should Be Picked

Dr. Thomas Galloway, noted biologist, says if social hygiene were interpreted correctly and taught with kindness and careful guidance, young men would learn how to pick mates instead of marrying for infatuation. "Clear understanding of life would eliminate a large number of marriage failures. Divorces would fall off. I do not mean, however, that marriage is a failure, for there are fewer matrimonial failures in proportion to business failures. Marriage is a sound institution."—Capper's Weekly.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Capt. Lindbergh Is Recipient of Unprecedented Honors in France.

THE notable event of the week ending May 27 was the completion of Capt. Charles Lindbergh's successful crossing by airplane from New York to Paris at 10:21, Paris time, Saturday night, May 21, after 33 hours 29 minutes in the air.

Paris gave the intrepid American flyer a wildly enthusiastic reception, in which there was no evidence of the reported enmity for American contestants in this transoceanic air race that had resulted in the loss of two French flyers, Captains Nungesser and Coli. From the moment his plane came to a stop on Le Bourget flying field, just outside the French capital, he became the acclaimed hero of the civilized world. In Paris no such tumultuous scenes have been witnessed since the signing of the armistice at the close of the World war, and for the week following the landing he has been sought for and feted by all classes. The king of Belgium wired him an invitation to be his guest at Brussels, King George of England extended him an invitation to visit him in London, organizations of many kinds contended for the honor of being host to him; the French government conferred upon him the medal of the Legion of Honor. From Captain Lindbergh's own countrymen came hundreds of offers of employment at fabulous salaries. Motion picture producers, vaudeville theater managers, managers of lecture courses, offered large sums for his services, and if he wishes, it is estimated that he could within the next twelve months easily make a million dollars as a result of his heroic exploit. So far he has refused to consider any of the offers, asserting that he had no idea of commercializing the flight which he made solely for the purpose of advancing the science of aviation.

It is not known at this writing when he will return to America. Before doing so he will accept the invitation from the kings of Belgium and England and will visit Stockholm and other European cities. The United States government has offered to bring him back on board a battleship as the guest of the American people and it is probable that he will accept this invitation.

Captain Lindbergh covered the distance from San Diego, Calif., to Paris—6,725 miles—in actual flying time of 56 hours and 46 minutes. He left San Diego, Calif., on the afternoon of May 10 and arrived in St. Louis—1,000 miles—the next day. After a rest there he hopped to New York—900 miles—crossing the American continent in an actual flying time of 23 hours and 15 minutes. After a few days' rest he started from New York to Paris—3,660 miles. This is a new world's record for nonstop straight line distance, the previous record being 3,400 miles.

ANOTHER event of importance in the field of aviation was the attempted flight of the Italian aviator, Francesco de Pinedo, from Newfoundland to the Azores islands, a distance of 1,200 miles. He left Trepassey Bay, N. F., Monday morning, May 23, but became lost in the fog and landed on the ocean some 300 miles from his objective point and his plane was towed into port by a sailing vessel that had picked him up.

A MOVE of unusual importance in the field of international relations was the break between Great Britain and Soviet Russia following the revelations resulting from the raiding by the British government of Arcos, Ltd., the Russian trading company operating in England, and the official Soviet trade delegation. In the house of commons Prime Minister Baldwin announced that on the basis of Sir Windham Child's findings in documents seized in the raid on May 12 the British government had decided to break off diplomatic relations with Russia.

In his address the prime minister referred at length to the documentary evidence of the Soviet Internationale's network of Bolshevist plots in England, the United States, Canada, New Zealand, and said:

"In the face of these breaches of the trade agreement and international comity, his majesty's government has shown patience and forbearance which is probably without parallel.

"Diplomatic relations when thus deliberately and systematically abused are in themselves a danger to peace, and his majesty's government therefore has decided that unless the house expresses disapproval on Thursday, the government will terminate the trade agreement, require the withdrawal of the trade delegation and Soviet mission from London, and recall the British mission from Moscow."

"The Soviet government itself cannot escape the responsibility for the action of the trade delegation and the abuse of the facilities afforded it," the prime minister continued, "but the matter does not rest there, because it is difficult to believe that, while one organ of the Soviet government was breaking its solemn undertaking, the Soviet mission and Soviet government did not pass on these proceedings."

The prime minister explained that the police for months had been watching the activities of the Soviet secret agents who had arranged for photographing secret documents in the Soviet house. Their suspicions were confirmed early this year when two British subjects employed by the air force were discovered stealing two documents for the Reds, he said.

Mr. Baldwin then referred to a "further document of an official and highly confidential character," which turned up missing and which was discovered by the police to have been photographed on the Arcos premises. Armed with this knowledge, the police staged a raid, going straight to the subterranean photostat room, where they found a cipher clerk known to be connected with the secret agents.

Documents found in another room showed that this clerk's chief function was the carrying out of secret communications abroad. In his possession were found codes in envelopes addressed to well-known Communist individuals and organizations in England and the United States. The envelopes contained directions from the Red Internationale to Communists and organizations in both countries.

"The investigation shows," said Mr. Baldwin, "that both Arcos and the trade delegation habitually used subversive propaganda. The correspondence dealt with the Communist seamen's club, the 'hands off' China movement, the anti-trade union bill, the distribution of Communist propaganda and industrial affairs in America."

This action on the part of the British government means again outlawing Russia in the family of nations, and the lining up of England with the United States in its attitude toward the Soviet government. The American government has consistently refused to recognize in any way the Soviet government of Russia on the basis that that government was engaging in propaganda with the purpose of undermining other governments with which friendly relations had been perfected. This government has refused to permit any official representative of the Soviets to land in the United States, and this investigation on the part of England has demonstrated the wisdom of the officials at Washington.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Mellon has announced the resignation of Assistant Secretary L. C. Andrews, effective August 1. At the same time announcement was made of the appointment of Dr. James M. Doran as prohibition commissioner to succeed Roy A. Haynes. The resignation of Mr. Andrews was unexpected. Secretary Mellon announced that he has recommended to President Coolidge the appointment of Seymour Lowman, former lieutenant governor of New York, to succeed him.

It was indicated by Mr. Mellon that while the new assistant secretary of the treasury will have supervisory authority over the bureau of prohibition, as well as over the bureau of customs and the coast guard, he will not have such broad powers as Mr. Andrews.

Doctor Doran, it was stated, will have full authority as prohibition commissioner, although general determination of policies will remain in the hands of the secretary of the treasury. The date of Haynes' retirement was not indicated.

GERMANY claims that with the recent blowing up of the 27 concrete dugouts on its frontier at Koenigsberg it has completed the disarmament provided for by the Versailles treaty, and is now demanding that the allied troops evacuate the Rhineland provinces. The allies are insisting that the interallied military commission must inspect the work of dismantling the fortresses, but Germany holds that the interallied military control commission expired on February 1, as promised by the allies, and that for reasons of prestige, Germany cannot permit a renewal of the interallied control. There the matter stands with nothing definite as to when the remaining French troops will march out of Germany.

FLOODS continue to ravage Louisiana parishes. Five additional parishes, with an area of 1,100,000 acres, and the homes of 80,000 people were thrown open to invasion by the inland sea when the river tore aside the protection barriers at McCrea and spread over the low lands of Pointe Coupee parish. Before the flood waters have vanished into the Gulf of Mexico they will have cut a path 50 miles wide and 200 miles long from the Arkansas border to the gulf.

AT WASHINGTON Justice William Hitz sentenced Harry F Sinclair, millionaire oil operator, to serve three months in jail and to pay a fine of $500 for contempt of the United States senate in refusing to answer questions in connection with the investigation of the Teapot Dome lease scandal in 1924. The sentence was more severe than had been generally expected by those who have followed the case and who did not believe that the term of imprisonment would exceed the minimum of one month which had been imposed, in an earlier case, on Elverton R. Chapman, a New York stock broker, in 1896. In sentencing Sinclair, Justice Hitz declared that he believed the decision of the United States Supreme court in the Mal Daugherty case was binding on him.

Pending an appeal to the United States Supreme court Sinclair was released on $5,000 bail.

PAYNE WHITNEY, prominent sportsman, one of the richest of Americans, son of the late William C. Whitney and brother of Harry Payne Whitney, died suddenly May 26 on the tennis court of his country home at Manhasset, L. I., of acute indigestion.

Payne Whitney was born in New York 51 years ago, the second son of William C. Whitney. Like his father and elder brother, he went to Yale, where he was graduated in 1898. While there he achieved fame as an oarsman and was captain of his college crew.

After leaving Yale he took a law course at Harvard, and in 1902 he married Miss Helen Hay, daughter of the late John Hay, secretary of state and at one time ambassador to Great Britain.

Mr. Whitney was for many years a power in financial circles, although comparatively little was heard of him in that field. He was an active philanthropist in a generous but unostentatious way, so that almost nothing was known of his benefactions.

Wall street estimates his wealth as more than $300,000,000, basing the estimate on the income-tax payments that Mr. Whitney made for the years 1924 and 1925.

SOME progress was made at Philadelphia in the efforts of the union miners and operators to negotiate a new wage agreement.

After two days of discussion of conditions in the Pennsylvania soft coal fields and in the bituminous territory generally a sub scale committee of six members each was appointed to get down to work and attempt to arrive at a basis for negotiations.

It was made clear by both sides, however, that no concrete proposition had yet been advanced. The miners said the joint conference was called by the operators and any proposition must come from them.

PETER PREACHING TO GENTILES

LESSON TEXT—Acts 10:1-11:18.

GOLDEN TEXT—For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him.—Rom. 10.12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Tells a Foreigner Abqut Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter Takes the Gospel to Gentiles.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Taking the Gospel to All Races.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How the Gospel Overcomes Race Prejudice.

The missionary program of the church having broadened to include the Samaritans, we see in this lesson it still widening and embracing the Gentiles. Through the conversion of Cornelius, the "middle wall of partition" was broken down (Eph. 2:4).

I. Cornelius (10:1, 2).

1. His official position (v. 1).

He was a Roman officer over a company of 100 soldiers.

2. His character (v. 2).

(1) A devout, pious man (2) He was a praying man. (3) He was charitable. He gave much alms. (4) He was respected by his family.

II. The Supernatural Preparation for the Transition of the Gospel to the Gentiles (10:3-33).

This was of divine arrangement. No barrier is too great to prevent the coming together of persons whom the Lord desires to meet. In order to bring this about:

1. Two visions were given.

(1) The vision of Cornelius (vv. 8-8).

While engaged in prayer, an angel of God announced that his prayer and alms had come before God as a memorial, and instructed him to send to Joppa for Peter who would tell him what to do.

(2) The vision of Peter (vv. 9-16).

This took place while Peter was praying (v. 9). He saw a certain vessel containing clean and unclean animals let down from heaven, and heard the command, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat." Peter protested that he had never eaten any unclean thing. God replied, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common."

2. A messenger sent from Cornelius (vv. 17-22).

Peter was greatly perplexed over what he had seen, but not for long, for messengers from Cornelius made inquiry at the gate for him. The spirit informed Peter of the matter and bade him go, nothing doubting.

3. The meeting of Cornelius and Peter (vv. 23-33).

(1) Peter took six witnesses along (v. 23).

(2) Cornelius waiting for Peter (v. 24).

He called together his kinsmen and near friends.

(3) Cornelius about to worship Peter (vv. 25, 26).

Peter repudiated his act and protested that he was but a man.

(4) The reciprocal explanation (vv. 27-33).

III. Peter's Sermon (vv, 34-43).

1. The introduction (vv. 34, 35).

He showed that God is no respecter of persons. This does not mean that Cornelius was already in a state of grace, thereby saved, but that he was eligible to hear the gospel and accept the terms of salvation.

2. His discourse (vv. 36-43).

In the discourse he touches briefly upon the mission of Jesus, showing that by means of His baptism and anointing with the Holy Spirit, He was qualified for His work as mediator. He then exhibited the work of Christ:

(1) In His life (vv. 36-39).

It was one of beneficence. He went about doing good, even casting out demons as a proof that God was with Him (v. 38).

(2) In His death (v. 39).

The just suffered for the unjust that He might bring us to God (I Pet. 3:18).

(3) In His resurrection (vv. 40, 41)

In this discourse is set forth:

(a) The basis of salvation—the crucifixion of Christ.

(b) The scope of salvation—whosoever believeth in Him.

(c) The method of appropriating salvation—believing on Him.

IV. The Holy Spirit Poured Out (vv. 44-48).

This was a new Pentecost.

V. Peter Vindicates His Ministry to the Gentiles (11:1-18).

Being called to account for visiting and eating with Gentiles, Peter rehearsed the whole story in such a way that his narrative took the form of logical argument, and showed how God had set His seal upon the work by the miraculous gift of the Spirit.

Closing the Day

Says Dr. R. A. Torrey: "No bank ever closes its business day until its balance is found to be absolutely correct. And no Christian should close a single day until his accounts with God for that day have been perfectly adjusted alone with Him."

Modern Sweepers in Rome

Contrasts between the old and the new are plentiful in Rome and one of the most noticeable is the modern motor-driven street sweeper cleaning up dust and dirt from pavements that were laid in the time of the emperors, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. One of the most popular types of brooms is mounted on an automobile chassis. It is of the rotary kind, similar to those used in this country.

A quarter-mile left to go. Not far, deed, to make up the lost distance, r though the mare had traveled fast. e had been enabled to make an easy ce of it, and looked as though she d plenty in reserve. Yet still, inch inch, the sable whirlwind crept up d up. And now they swung around e last turn and squared away for me. Flyaway's jockey had gone to e whip; we could see his arm rising d falling and almost feel the mare's eed quicken under the sting of the ows. And although our horse was last giving all that was in him, ill we could sense, as it were, that or Quashy was all but done for; and at where in his greatest races he as wont to give his mount the most sistance, he was now actually more a hindrance than a help. And yet spite of everything Satan gained. nd my heart want out to him. Anial of evil disposition he might be, t somehow, even at that tense moent, I could not but compare him the pirate captain; a devil indeed, t a devil whose courage could not questioned.

Two hundred yards to go! The an black head, with the nostrils of aring crimson, was even with the oking flanks of the bay. And then, l at once, the impossible happened. uashy, clear nerve from the top of s head to the sole of his helpless ot, somehow, in the face of all laws nature, managed to achieve the inredible. For one instant he gathed himself in his saddle like the uashy of old; for half a dozen strides lifted his mount along; and once. ice and thrice, for the first time the race, he let Satan have the full pact of the whip.

Many a time, since then, I have seen oroughbreds striving for the crowns the turf, in America, England and far-off Australia. Many a splendid cer have I seen thundering down the me stretch to victory; but never in life can I recall a more tremendous d terrific burst of speed than I saw at morning on the track at the Port the Devil. If he had run fast before, w he fairly flew. In one bound, as seemed, he drew head to head with e mare; in another, for the first time at day, he drew clear. We saw that in ophidian head stretched, shooting ckward and forward, and then, all a moment, amid a babel of shrieks, outs, prayers, curses, the race was er, and though by a scant quarter ngth only Satan had won!

Utterly exhausted, too spent for ords, George and I silently clasped nds. I do not think we even so uch as remembered our winnings; it as the race and the race only that d held us spellbound. And then, uch like two figures in a dream, we ade our way down to the track. Flyay, brave little thoroughbred that e was, stood with legs apart, head wn, flanks heaving. Staunch little are, she had given her utmost. Sa-n, quiet for once, still rolled those icked eyes with what seemed to me expression of sardonic humor. Gave you a scare!" they seemed to y as plainly as words. He, too, eathed heavily, and his black sides ipped with foam. Two stable boys ere throwing water on Quashy, who y on the track in a dead faint, his id upper lip, drawn clear of the enched teeth, showing the agony he d undergone. Colonel Singleton aned against the rail, mopping the rspiration from his brow, and look-g like a man on the verge of col-pse. And at sight of him I sud-nly experienced a great reaction. alizing that I, too, felt old and spent d drawn and half-dead for the need rest. I turned to Lewis, and in a ice which seemed to me to come om an immense distance I managed falter, "George, I think we need me sleep."

He stared at me as if making a eat effort to understand. He looked I imagined that I did; his face was ay; blue circles lay deep under his inking eyes. "Bob," he answered owly, as if picking his words, "you e a man of sense." And linking ms for mutual support, we turned r erring footsteps in the direction the Palace of Delight.

CHAPTER VII

Under the Moon.

When I next opened my eyes I was semi-darkness, and for a moment ared about me in that curious, half-zed condition which follows a heavy mber. Then, with a start, con-lousness returned, and the events the day before came crowding to y mind. Looking at my watch, I dis-vered it was evening, and rising has-y, I found that my head ached sav-ely, while the floor of the room aved under me like the decks of the ack Panther in a heavy sea. Pres-tly, after sluicing my face with wa-, I felt better, and managed to ke my way to George's room.

I found George in the act of rising, d inclined to make merry over my llor and my generally woebegone ap-arance. He himself was in the best spirits, and at supper blithely or-red his usual bottle, while I, with shudder, raised a protesting hand. d found water a cooling and deli-ous draft.

Gradually the palace assumed its miliar aspect. In twos and threes regular patrons arrived; the roulette wheel began to spin; the gentlemen drank and gambled, while the ladies continued their search for conquests. Already, however, I had begun to weary of these things, and when supper was over and George suggested more roulette, I was content to be a looker-on Fortune, we discovered, is a fickle jade, and had now deserted us; for George lost steadily, and at length, in disgust, accepted the proposal of the officers for a game of cards. At this, I confess, I was not overpleased, for further acquaintance with these gentlemen had aroused in me a strong dislike A Captain Johnson, with pink cheeks and straw-colored hair, was my pet aversion, and Lieutenant Renfrew, with bulldog features and a swaggering air, filled me with equal loathing It was therefore not without suspicion that I saw them depart; and after watching the fortunes of the wheel for perhaps half an hour, I took my leave and strolled across the room to where the card game was in progress. By this time the hall was crowded; the players were intent upon their sport; and thus, as it chanced, I had an excellent opportunity to watch them unobserved. Clearly a crisis was impending; gold was heaped in the center of the table, and each man's eyes were riveted on his cards. And then, so quickly that I should never have perceived it had I not been watching them closely, I saw Johnson, who sat opposite George, deftly slip a card from his sleeve, and, without pausing, add another heap of gold to the pile. For an instant I stood thunder-struck, and in that moment the players laid their cards upon the table, and Johnson, with a triumphant smile, encircled his winnings with his arms and calmly swept them toward him.

My blood boiled. I have made, God knows, my share of mistakes in this world; have done many things for which, afterward, I have been sorry and ashamed, but I think that I have, at least, always tried to play the game of life fair and square. And to see this pink-cheeked dandy deliberately swindling my friend was too much. In three strides I had reached the table, and leaning forward, I shook my fist full in Johnson's face and ejaculated, "You cheat, sir!"

For one thing, at least, I will give him credit; there was no hesitation in his reply. His glass of wine stood at his elbow and the next second I gasped and spluttered while it trickled, most uncomfortably, down my neck. At once I lost all control of myself, and unused to the customs of society in such cases, in another moment I should have leaped at him bodily, trusting not to weapons but to mere grip of hand on throat to wipe out the insult and determine who was the better man. I think, too, he read my purpose in my eyes, for he started up and had half drawn his sword when fortunately for me George gripped my arm. "Steady!" he cried. "Don't brawl!" And seeing that he had succeeded in calming me, he led me a little to one side. "Did he really cheat?" he asked.

"Cheat?" I echoed angrily. "Of course he did. Slipped a card from his sleeve, the scoundrel. Let me at him, George."

But his answer brought me to a realization of how these things were properly done. "Nonsense," he rejoined. "You'll challenge him, of course. And I suppose you'll want me for your second. You go to your room, and I'll manage the affair."

There was such au air of finality in his words that I obeyed at once. But on the way thither, and while I sat waiting for him, I had ample time for reflection. I knew next to nothing of dueling, but one thing I did know: That the challenged party had the choice of weapons. That he would choose rifles there was of course no hope; if I could have been assured on that point, I would have counted him already as good as dead. No, he would choose swords or pistols; if pistols, my chance was at least even; if swords, I felt sure that I was the one already dead, for I knew nothing of the fencer's art. I was far from happy in my mind.

Surprisingly soon, however, I heard the sound of footsteps outside, the door opened, and George appeared. "Well?" I queried eagerly, "what do we fight with? Swords?"

Infinitely to my relief, he shook his head. "No," he answered as he seated himself, "it's not to be swords. Renfrew makes an unusual proposal. It seems that there is a long, narrow sand spit a little way off the shore. He suggests that we place one of you at one end of this island, the other at the other, giving each of you a pistol, with one load only, and a knife. At the word you are free to do what you please; shoot, advance, hold your ground, anything. It's a bit unusual, I confess; I've never heard of a duel of just that sort. But I suppose it's fair enough. Don't you?"

I was so relieved that I need not fight with swords that I would have agreed to anything. "Certainly it's fair," I answered. "When do we fight? Tomorrow morning?"

George stared at me. "Oh, I forgot," he cried. "They want to fight now. It's clear moonlight, you know What do you say?"

Once more, I felt that I could not complain of the sporting spirit of these officers. They might do many things which they should not do; might be dishonest where cards were concerned; but at least it seemed to me that they were brave enough as far as fighting went. Yet if I had known at the time that Johnson had fought a duel on this self-same spot only a month previous, had killed his man, and had thus become familiar with his surroundings, I am sure that I should have given them less credit than I did. Nor was this my only error; I was foolish enough to underrate my adversary, and with the cocksureness of youth leaped to the conclusion that he was probably no great shot, while if it came to grips and knives, I felt certain that I could best him there. So that altogether it was with alacrity that I jumped to my feet, crying: "All right! I'm ready!"

George nodded approval. "That's the way to feel," he answered. "Come on, then; let's get it over." And leaving the palace, we walked down to the wharf, to find the officers there before us, already seated in their boat. With a gesture, Renfrew indicated another for ourselves, and thus, since George very properly would not allow me to row for fear of unsteadying my hand, I seated myself in the stern and we set forth for the island in our opponents' wake.

I shall not pretend that I enjoyed the trip. I was reflecting, with some remorse, on the excellent advice given me by Capt. Francis Barclay. He had told me not to drink or gamble, and to avoid quarrels; and I now realized how completely I had managed to disobey him. But presently I banished these thoughts from my mind. This was no time to let my wits go woolgathering; my present business was to get the better of this supercilious Englishman.

By this time our adversaries had reached the island, and after we had drawn alongside of them, it took but a few moments for George and Renfrew to agree upon the details of the fight. Then, stripping to shirt and trousers, we each took our knife and pistol, the latter carefully loaded by our seconds, and tossed a moidore for choice of position. I won, named the easterly end, to bring the moonlight into my opponent's eyes, and an instant later we had landed and were walking away, back to back, while our seconds shoved off and stood ready to give the word of command.

As I passed leisurely along the edge of the islet, I began to reflect on how this curious duel might best be fought. To draw his fire, if possible, seemed the surest way; but I had scarcely realized, until now, what a gamble the encounter was, and I began to feel profound respect for the inventor of the plan. If we had been acquaintances of long standing, each knowing the other's merits as a marksman, that would be one thing; but as it was neither of us had the slightest clue to the ability of the other. Then, too, there was the moonlight, bound to affect the straightest aim. And thus the more I pondered, the more elusive the problem appeared. How far could I advance in safety? I could not tell, but I resolved, more strongly than ever, to try to draw his fire, running the risk that his bullet might find a mortal spot. Nothing short of that, I figured, would stop me; and his pistol once emptied, I should have him at my mercy.

Thus I marched along, the tiny waves rippling into silver at my feet, while away to the north the outlines of the land loomed softly through the haze. And now I had reached the end of the sand spit, and wheeling about, saw the figure of my antagonist at the opposite extremity, while our two seconds had paddled off a short distance from the island, and lay resting upon their oars. There was no need of further delay, and indeed, now that we were fairly at it, I was anxious to have the affair begin. Thus I hailed with relief the sight of Renfrew standing erect in his boat, and then the sound of his voice crying, "Ready! Go!"

Though with no definite plan of campaign, I started forward, and even in the uncertain light could see that my opponent was also advancing, and at a much brisker pace. All at once, and without warning, my antagonist flung up his arm and I saw the moonlight glint on the barrel of his weapon. Instinctively I dodged sharply to the left, screening my face as I did so, but to my mortification no report followed. Clearly he had been testing me—trying to throw me into sudden panic and thus lead me to discharge my pistol with hasty and ill-considered aim.

Warily now, like two wrestlers nearing each other, we slackened our pace so that we scarcely progressed at all. So near, indeed, had we come, and such a tempting mark did Johnson present, that I said to myself: "Three steps more and I fire." One I took—two—and then, like a flash, he threw himself flat on the ground, I saw his arm extended, and the next instant the night seemed filled with noise and flame; something dealt me a terrific blow, and when I came to myself it was to find that I lay prostrate on the sand, without any clear idea of how I came there, or indeed, of exactly where I was. By God's grace, however, my brain cleared, and all at once realizing what had happened, and seeing Johnson racing toward me at full speed, I started to raise my pistol, only to discover, to my horror, that it was no longer in my hand. In one nightmare moment I glanced to right, to left, in front, behind, without a sight of my weapon; then, perceiving a straggling bush to my left, I felt that it must be there, and groping desperately, the next instant, to my inexpressible relief, my fingers closed upon its butt. Yet only just in time; Johnson was almost on me; and shouting aloud in my excitement, I covered his breast with certain aim, and pressed the trigger. Never in my life have I felt so sure of triumph, but either the fall or the clogging sand had done its work, for instead of the flash and roar that I expected, there followed the feeble click of a misfire.

The next moment my opponent was on me; if I had tried to draw my knife from my belt I knew that I should never have succeeded, that he would have buried his weapon in my heart while I was still making the vain attempt. But fortunately for me pure instinct, derived, I suppose, from far-off ancestors in the jungle, came to my aid. Whether my act was within the laws of refined dueling I do not know, nor, indeed, do I greatly care, for my opponent's conduct had been more irregular by far; I drew back my arm, conscious, as I did so, of a darting pain, and as he came leaping in to finish me, hurled my weapon full in his face.

The weapon struck him heavily on the shoulder, checking him just sufficiently to enable me to get to my feet and draw my knife before he had an opportunity to catch me unprepared. Thus here we were, not six feet apart, and after these sudden shiftings of the tide of battle, again on even terms.

Presently, as we shifted and feinted in the treacherous sand I saw my chance, and leaping in, with a quickness born of long experience on the wrestling green at home, I succeeded, to my joy, in gaining the wished-for hold upon his wrist. But my venture was in vain, for Johnson, in the same breath, and with equal dexterity, managed to achieve the same grip on my knife arm that I had on his. And thus, both striving with our utmost strength, we swayed and struggled blindly, until at length the sand gave suddenly beneath our feet, and we crashed together to the ground. And here fortune favored me, for not only did I fall uppermost, but Johnson's head must, I think, have encountered the pistol I had hurled at him, for instantly his whole body went limp, the muscles in his wrist relaxed, and as his knife fell from his hand, I succeeded in wrenching my right arm free.

Historians Skip Many Matters of Interest

An American history written in the old-fashioned way would never mention the rise of the motion picture diversion. The kind of histories to which we have been accustomed don't appear to be in the least interested in the ordinary life of the people, which is as much history as taking a fort or carrying an election, a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat asserts.

Between wars there is almost a blank interregnum; and—from the history—you would never know that a book had been written, a picture painted or a machine invented. We once knew a school history of the United States that did not mention the coming of the railroad; but every Indian chieftain from Massasoit to Sitting Bull was personalized.

These strange silences of formal history leave us to the historical novels for our general information of the times—the clothing our ancestors wore, their pastimes, their religious faiths, their literature, their customs and their modes of thought.

Explaining Meteors

Meteors are never seen from the earth except when they come in contact with the earth's atmosphere. Their speed through the atmosphere causes them to burn and produce the light which we see. They are then within the clutches of the gravity of the earth and always fall toward it. —Pathfinder Magazine.

Very Open

A man had invited a business acquaintance to play a round of golf with him. The guest, who was a very pompous individual, was also a poor player and hacked up the turf with each stroke.

After he had carried away an unusually generous portion with his iron he turned to his host and said:

"You know I don't care particularly for the game, but I like the glorious open country hereabouts."

"Ah, quite," replied the other, as he surveyed the scarred ground, "but do you mind closing up the open country as we go along?"

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

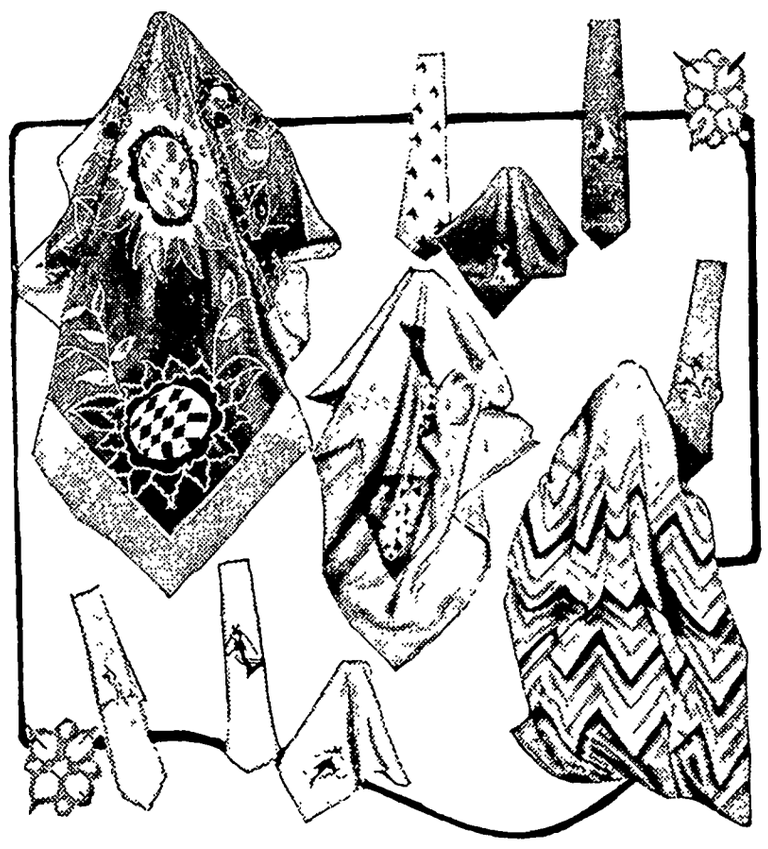
NO MORE time to spend in working cross-word puzzles, now that the mode is calling so insistently for hand-painted scarfs, ties, kerchiefs and like accessories. Of course one can buy most beautiful specimens of neckwear, and silk squares, painted as only professional artists can paint them. Indeed, they are working overtime in studios everywhere in order to supply fashion's demand for accessories such as are here pictured.

However, if really ambitious there is no reason why the amateur should not try out the experiment of transforming lengths of silk, chiffon or velvet into charming accessories, by embellishing them with paint and dye.

It is such fun to work out one's own ideas and that is the keynote of interest in this vogue for hand painting—to illustrate one's finery, so to speak. One paints scenic views on the ends of one's scarf, perhaps waves and a sailboat, and a figure or two across the sleeve of a sailor blouse, or a bizarre dragon on the back of one's satin boudoir or beach coolie coat.

Fashion's latest whim is to paint necktie and handkerchief to match. Clever for the equestrienne is a tie and handkerchief with a horse's head or figure painted on each as shown in this group of accessories. Other of types and demands may be. For the woman who desires to express her individuality to the utmost and still be in the mode there has never been such millinery opportunity.

In sports hats the clever little cloche gives promise of holding its own. It can be had in infinite varieties from dainty viscas in esthetic colors to the new wool crochets. A hat of wool crochet with a stenciled design in contrasting colors and edged with bengaline ribbon would be a crowning glory to any sports ensemble. Such a model is shown at the top to the right in this picture.



Try Your Needle on These.

For the more formal occasions, when good taste insists upon a more elaborate costume, the small hat need not necessarily be eliminated from the picture. Every wardrobe of hats for this summer should therefore include a little afternoon type. What could be more charming than this chic model of brown lace portrayed first in the group? It boasts a tracery of gold and its brim is faced with gold cloth.

In the larger brimmed models, hair, milan and ballibuntal will unquestionably dominate with a range of trimmings which begins with the simplest of ornaments and ends with the most elaborate arrangements of flowers and ostrich motifs An exquisite exponent of the wide-brim type centers the illustration. Black velvet forms the crown and the deep flange is white hair braid.

Hats for Every Occasion.

Below to the left is a small hat in a jade speckled effect, stitched in square design. This model would be a very delightful finishing touch to a shopping and informal luncheon ensemble.

The last hat in the group is made of the new combination of yarn and visca, using coral pink and white for its color scheme.

Hand-blocked silk squares, preferred by many to scarfs, are done in gorgeous colors and in bold modernistic patternings after the style of those here pictured.

Millinery artistry and millinery diversity would seem to have at last reached its goal—that of providing suitable hats for all occasions and for all wearers, no matter what their the tie and handkerchief sets in the picture are also decorated with quaint objects. For the tennis player an appropriate motif would be a tennis racket. Butterflies, birds and flowers are charming subjects for the artist.

BARBER LEADS HERO AVERAGE IN NO.2

HANCOCK NO. 2 COW TESTING ASSOCIATION REORGANIZED

Hancock No. 2 Cow Testing Association at a meeting on Monday evening, May 23 decided that the association should be continuod in operation during the coming year. The enrollment of herds will be complete during June if possible in order that the new association year may start August 1 with a full membership enrollment.

The following officers were elected:

B. F. Higdon, Sr., President.

Julius Jenson, Vice President.

E. W. Kellogg, Peter Benson, Jno. Ostercamp, Directors.

Since the membership agreement used in the past years has not proved to be altogether satisfactory, the association members decided to operate the organization next year in the straight rate basis which has given uniform satisfaction over the state to those associaions organized after this manner. Your tester will be glad to explain the membership agreement fully and point out the advantages of the plan.

S. A. Barber, Kanawha, leads the association herd averages in May with an average for the eight cows all of which being in milk of 965 lbs. of milk containing 34.1 pounds of butterfat.

Johnson and Loats, Kanawha, carried off second honors with an average for the nine cows, all of which were in milk, of 871 lbs. of milk containing 29.8 lbs. of butterfat.

Harry Horecka, Garner, follows closely with an average of 800 lbs. of milk containing 29.7 lbs. of butterfat. All eight cows were in milk during May.

The herds of less than eight cows do not qualify for placings in the herd averages, but two of these herds deserve special mention.

Fred Molander, Britt, with a herd of grade Holsteins and mixed cows made an excellent record of 1029 lbs. of milk containing 35.8 lbs. of butterfat per cow based on seven cows in the herd.

Thos. Everett and Son, Britt, with a herd of purebred Guernsey and grade Holsteins and Jerseys made a good herd average of 920 lbs. of milk containing 35.6 lbs. of butterfat based on seven cows in the herd. One of these cows, a grade Jersey, has just completed a years' test in Hancock No. 3 association and in this association produced 404 lbs. of butterfat in the year ending May 23.

Speaking of marathons, consider these long distance records made by cows enrolled in Hancock No. 2 cow Testing Association:

Julius Jenson, Crystal Lake, has a grade Guernsey cow which at the end of a 304 day period produced 7,030 lbs. of milk containing 333.3 lbs. of butterfat which gives an average of over a pound of butterfat a day for the entire period. This cow produced 48.4 lbs. of fat during May and will no doubt, finish the 365 day period with over 400 lbs. of butterfat to her credit.

E. W. Kellogg, Crystal Lake, owns a grade Holstein cow which at the end of a 304 day period has produced 9,278 lbs. of milk containing 338.7 lbs. of butterfat. At the end of the 365 day period, her record will likely show over a pound of butterfat for every day of the year.

A grade Holstein cow in the herd of Thos. Everett and son, has produced 9116 lbs. of milk containing 325.5 lbs. of butterfat at the end of the 273 day period. She will likely finish in the 400 lb. class at the end of the 365 day period.

Peter Benson's grade Holstein, Hormie, bids fair to lead all cows in the association at the end of the year. Her production at the end of 304 days amounts to 9,347 lbs. of milk containing 365.5 lbs. of butterfat. There is every indication that she will produce over 425 lbs. for the year.

These above mentioned cows are real dairy cows. The marks established by such cows give the farmer dairymen of Hancock County some-

A WORTHY HERO

By refusing to capitalize his wonderful exploit by going on the stage and parading himself before the public as a hero, which he is, Captain Lindbergh, youthful aviator, is displaying a strength of character that is as admirable as his wonderful feat of jumping across the Atlantic at a single hop. A million dollars profit on an accomplishment of thirty-four hours, and he turned it down. Our hat is off to this intrepid Missouri national guards man, who is not looking for cheap sensational display.

Captain Lindbergh is the most spectacular hero in the world today. His name is on every one's lips and he continues to receive front page place, though his nonstop flight from New York to Paris was made nearly three weeks ago. This heroic lad has written his name high on that blazing list of men who have dared and done as they looked into the face of death and laughed.

Other aviators had negotiated the traverse of the broad Atlantic, but no mortal in the long lapse of earthly time ever crossed it as Lindbergh did. This glory and distinction are his alone. No air adventure has ever attracted more attention. The exploits of Capt. Lindbergh have commanded thousands and thousands of columns of newspaper space during the past month. A New York newspaper clipping bureau has announced that it never has handled so many clippings on any one subject in its thirty years of business.

This flight will do inestimable good to the progress of aviation, and Captain Lindbergh faces a brilliant future. He has blazed a path that within a few brief years will be an aerial path.

thing to shoot at, for they have not been forced nor pampered, but managed in the most intelligent manner possible under practical farm conditions.

Every cow added to the list of cows producing between 300 lbs. and 400 lbs. butterfat means and achievement worthy of mention, for cows are all too few hereabouts.

And in the final accounting, it can be proved in black and white that cows making the greatest number of dollars above the cost offered and all other incidents will land in the class of cows producing 300 lbs. or more of butterfat in one year.

Bigger Than Weather Pasture

"There is something wrong with a cow's winter ration if the milk yield is doubled after turning her out on grass." This member of Hancock No. 2 Cow Testing Associatoin states further, "My cows have not yet fully recovered from the slump which followed the change from silage, alfalfa and a liberal grain ration to good pasture and a liberal grain ration."

There is a lesson in this statement which followed the tester's remark that the milk production of several cows in various herds had almost doubled since the previous month before the cows were turned on pasture.

There is yet time to plant some soybeans for hay if you have no legume crop seeded for that purpose.

If you have planned for a silo in the years gone by, by all means erect it early this coming fall, if you wish to make the best of a soft corn crop.

Why not give your cows a chance to make good from now on by having pasture conditions the year around?

Flag Day

The 14th of June, whether by tradition or historical fact matters not, is the accred ited birthday of the immortal Stars and Stripes. Is the day when the true American shows his colors.

The name of Betsy Ross in the popular imagination is ineradicably associated with the brth of Old Glory. No one at this time wishes to rob the young philadelphia widow of an iota of the fame tradition has conferred on her or the part she played in the Arch-street upholstery shop on that historic day in June of 1776.

Though ours is youngest of the present day nations, historians tell us that only two of the present national flags are older han the Stars and Stripes. It symbolizes today what it symbolized when it was first flung to the breeze. It floats above us, whether in peacetime or in wartime, as the emblem of our liberties, our free institutons, our governmental deas.

Every good citizen honors Old Glory's natal day. Let htat honor be made visible by flinging it to the breeze from every home, every business house, every public building in the land on its birth.

ELEVEN CARLOADS OF LIVESTOCK SHIPPED

WEEKLY STOCK SHIPMENTS HIT A HIGH MARK AGAIN

Live Stock Shipments Have Been Excellent This Past Year

The stock shipments from the local yards have been more than holding their own for the past month as compared with other nearby shipping points. Hardly a week has gone by but that six or seven cars of stock were shipped out every Saturday night.

The stock shipment Saturday was, however, the largest it has been for several weeks, when eleven car loads were shipped out of the Klemme yards.

Of the eleven car loads, the Klemme Shipping Association had six car loads, consisting of four car loads of hogs and two car loads of cattle, all billed for Chicago.

C. A. Larsen shipped two cars of stock. One car load of cattle was shipped to Chicago and a car load of hogs to Iowa Falls.

Harry Sandry was a shipper and had three car loads of cattle that were sold on the Chicago market.

SMALL BLAZE AT THE LUDEKE FARM THURSDAY P. M.

Brooder House On Ralph Ludeke's Farm Destroyed By Fire

The screetching of the Klemme fire siren caused some excitement last Thursday afternoon about 5:30 o'clock when an alarm and call for help was sent in from the Ralph Ludeke farm one-fourth mile west of town.

The Klemme firemen immediately responded to the call and drove the fire truck out with a load of chemicals to the Ludeke farm where a brooder house was on fire and might endanger other buildings. The brooder house was beyond saving but nearby buildings were given the protection needed and were not in any immediate danger.

The fire started from a brooder stove which had been put in the building to heat it up for a batch of baby chicks which were to be turned in the following day.

The June brides are already mobilizing. The fighting will occur later.

BAYSIDE WILL HAVE CONCERTS AND VAUDEVILLE SUNDAY

Fast Ball Game Promised Fans Who Visit The Park Sunday

Bayside Amusement Park, Clear Lake, Iowa, will entertain fun seekers next Sunday with a varied amuse ment program. Band conderts in the open-air stage will be played afternoon and night. Vaudeville attractions for old and young will also be presented in the park. Vaudeville acts are engaged that will delight younger folks too. A fast ball game between the Charles City Collegians and Gallagher's O-P team of Mason City, will open at three o'clock on the Bayside diamond. Red Learn will pitch for Charles City and a battle is predicted. Dances are now held at Bayside every Tuesday night and at the White Pier on Thursday and Saturday nights. Both the passenger and speed boats are now operating between Bayside and Clear Lake. Manager Ritz invites you to bring your dinner to Bayside Park Sunday and use the free picnic grounds and tables and the children's playgrounds. New attractions have been added to Bayside to entertain and delight the visitors.

THIEVES OPERATED AT GOODELL PAST WEEK

Thada's Store And Rierson Filling Station Were Robbed

Twe Goodell business places were the scenes of robberies the past week.

On Wednesday night W. L. Thada's general store was broken into but the thieves failed to obtain any loot and apparently nothing had been stolen.

The following night the Mason City Oil and Grease Co. filling station, operated by Lewis Rierson, was entered and over a hundred dollars worth of tires and tubes were stolen. Mr. Rierson sleeps in a part of the building but failed to hear the robbers at work.

Boat Rockers

Now that the summer is coming along we can be thankful that there will be fewer of the sort of folks who find pleasure in rocking the boat. Most of those who dragged shot guns through the fence behind them during the past winter and those who tied in the race with the engine for the crossing have gone to their reward. Such folks are naturally boat rockers.

EPWORTH LEAGUE TO HAVE A PARTY FRIDAY EVE

A Number Of League Members Plan To Attend Clear Lake Camp

An evening of real entertainment is promised those who attend the first Epworth League party of the summer to be held at the home of Harvey Nelson on Friday evening at 7:45.

All those who do not have a way to get there will please notify William Gauger. There will be cars at the church to take those who do not have cars of their own. Notify William before Friday.

A number have decided to take advantage of the Sub-district convention to be held at Clear Lake June 22 and 23. An interesting program has been outlined, and the convention will be practically free from expense. It opens at 1:30 p. m., Wednesday the 22nd and closes at noon Thursday. Lodging and breakfast are furnished free to the delegates.

All those going out for the Bible story contest or desiring further information about it, see Earl Josten.

Watch for a bake sale and an ice cream social soon. The Leaguers are going to raise money to go to the Institute at Okoboji.

Miss Elvira Stille and William Gauger have an interesting subject fr the devotional meeting next Sunday night. 'Friendships," will be discussed.

The attendance increased more than 100 per cent last Sunday evening. If every Leaguer brigs another it should do the same next Sunday.

ELL'S LUCKY THIRTEENS HAVE FINE MEETING

Next Meeting Will Be Held At The Home Of Bernadine Griffen

A very successful meeting of the 4-H Club was held at the home of the Misses Ethel and Norma Baack, Wednesday, June 1st. During the business meeting a new name was selected for the club, "Ell's Lucky Thirteens."

The main lesson of the meeting was the re-finishing of candle holders. Each girl selected a pair of glass holders that she wanted to decorate and then work was begun in earnest. The bottom side of each holder was lacquered white which gave the colored glass a very pleasing two-toned effect. The next step was the application of decorative touches to the top of the holders. Great artistic ability along the lines of painting and good selection of color was shown by the work of various girls. Original floral designs were applied with oil paints which had been "toned" down until a soft and pleasing hue resulted. Not only was the work pleasant but it was worthwhile as is all 4-H club work, in fact, those candle holders redecorated by the club girls would easily retail at seventy-five cents, whereas the actual cost of the holders and paint amounted to about twenty-five cents.

Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Bernadine Griffen, June 29. —Club Reporter.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Next Sunday is Children's Day. Both Sunday Schools are planning programs. The program in Liberty Church will be held during the regular preaching hour. As usual we are asured of a good program.

At the beginning of the program the pastor will conduct a baptismal service. Some have spoken to the pastor about having their children baptized. We shall be glad to have others plan to come in on this.

The program in Klemme will be carried out at the hour of the evening service, which is 8:00 o'clock. Epworth League service at 7:15.

The morning service will be regular. Our local preacher, Mr. Earl Josten wil be in charge.

Junior League will be held on Saturday at the usual hour. Will the parents kindly see that the children, who are members, attend.

Hereafter the midweek services will be held in the church.

FARM BUREAU PICNIC NEXT WEDNESDAY

PLANS HAVE BEEN COMPLETED FOR ANNUAL OUTING

Picnic Will Be held At Eagle Lake State Park This Year

Plans have been completed for the Hancock County Farm Bureau picnic to be held at Eagle Lake State Park on Wednesday, June 15th. The Creamery Associations of the county will celebrate with the Farm Bureau this year.

4-H Club To Have Big Rally

A full days program has been arranged. The forenoon will be given over to the 4-H Club Members of the county. Their program will consist of talks by the club leaders and representatives who were sent to the Short Course at Ames. Election of county club officers will be held.

The program in the afternoon will start promptly at 1:00 o'clock with community singing. Talks will be given by the President of the Farm Bureau and President of the Creamery Association.

Pageant Will Be Attraction

The pageant, "Iowa, The Garden Spot of America," will be presented by the Farm Bureau people from all parts of the county.

Addresses will be given by W. F. Schilling of Northfield, Minn., president of the Twin Cities Milk Producers Association and Clyde Beckelheimer of Waterloo, Secretary of the Iowa Creamery Managers Association. These men are both good speakers and have a message that everyone in the county should hear. Mr. Schilling spoke here at the annual Farm Bureau meeting in October and was so well liked that he was asked to return. Mr. Beckelheimer has been in the county several times.

Music And Sports For All

There will be music by a male quartet and also several solos. Band music will be furnished by the Duncan Band.

A sports committee has arranged a good program of sports consisting of athletic stunts, horseshoe pitching and other interesting games.

The refreshment committee in charge of the Farm Bureau picnic are expecting a very large attendance.

Special arrangements have been made for space to park cars at the State Park. Everyone will be taken

REFORMED JUNIOR CHOIR ENJOYED BIRTHDAY PARTY

Officers Were Also Elected To Serve The Coming Year

The members of the Junior Choir of the Reformed Church were invited to the home of Miss Mabel Schuldt Friday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock to enjoy a very tasty supper which was served at 6:00 o'clock.

After supper the evening was spent in playing games, after which refreshments were served.

The event was in honor of Miss Mabel's birthday and those present were: Rev. Grosshuesch, Elsina Albers, Verner Priebe, Carrie Swalve Edwin Thieman, Florence Swalve, Raymond Barz, Anna Albers, Lucille Kraus, Jennie Albers, Lois Church, Emma Kothenbeutal, Ethel Baack, Viola Thieman, Gladys Kothenbeutel, Annetta Schuldt, Mrs. Rose Fritzel, Freda Schuldt, Edith Haupt, and Adella Kuhlman.

The officers for this year are as follows:

Carrie Swalve, President.

Mabel Schuldt, Vice-President.

Raymond Barz, Sec. and Treas.

All report a fine time, but best of all was the wonderful supper.—By a Member.

LIBERTY W. F. M. S. WILL HAVE ICE CREAM SOCIAL

The ladies of the W. F. M. S. of Liberty Township will give an ice cream social on Tuesday evening, June 14th, at Liberty Church. Ice cream, cake and chicken sandwiches will be sold. Coffee will be free. Everybody invited.

1—Senator Simeon D Fess of Ohio, principal speaker at annual convention of Kiwanis International in Memphis, Tenn. 2—British delegation at celebration of the three hundred twentieth anniversary of the founding of Jamestown, Va. 3—Brig. NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Lindbergh Is on Way Home —Flood Control Conference in Chicago.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

CAPTAIN LINDBERGH is on his way home, due to receive a welcome that will throw into the shade even the remarkable ovations given him in Paris, Brussels and London. Sailing from Cherbourg, he is a passenger on the United States cruiser Memphis at the express invitation of President Coolidge and will go direct to Washington to be the President's guest and to receive the Distinguished Flying cross and to be promoted, presumably to the rank of colonel The young aviator's mother was invited to visit in the temporary White House at the same time. The President appointed Secretary of War Davis, Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, Secretary of State Kellogg, and Secretary of Commerce Hoover a cabinet committee in charge of the welcoming arrangements, but details were turned over to the District of Columbia commissioners.

One of the plans already agreed upon includes the gathering of the largest group of aircraft ever assembled to greet a distinguished visitor to Washington, which will meet the Memphis at a point about fifty miles at sea and convoy the ship to Washington. As the cruiser enters Chesapeake bay the escort will be joined by nine navy torpedo, bombing, and scouting planes, and further up the Potomac more than a score of army planes from Langley Field, Va., as well as seaplanes from Hampton Roads and the naval air station, will be added.

After a day in Washington, Lindbergh will fly to Staten island and put himself in the hands of the New Yorkers, who have planned a tremendous reception.

The international political importance attached to Lindbergh's flight was responsible in part for his speedy return. He earnestly desired to visit a lot of countries in Europe, feeling that it might be a long time before he got over there again. But it became evident that the nations he did not visit would feel slighted, and he was persuaded to give up his plans. Besides, President Coolidge was desirous of receiving the air hero before leaving for his vacation in the Black Hills of South Dakota, his departure for that place being scheduled for June 13.

Lindbergh flew from Paris to Brussels, where he was received in state by King Albert, who made him a Chevalier of the Royal Order of Leopold. Then he flew over to Croydon, England, where a mob of hundreds of thousands welcomed him so vigorously that he and his plane barely escaped serious damage. In London Ambassador Houghton presented him to King George and other notables and the king awarded him the air force cross. He attended various banquets and other functions and went to the Derby as the guest of Lord Lonsdale. Meanwhile his plane was being dismantled for shipment to America, so he borrowed a plane and flew back to Paris to say farewell to the French people and to Ambassador Herrick, whose tactful guidance meant so much to the aviator during his stay in France.

Five leading American engineering societies last week gave to Lindbergh, Orville Wright and his late brother, Wilbur Wright, the Washington award for outstanding engineering accomplishment. Lindbergh's plane was equipped with a Wright motor.

THOUSANDS of prominent men, answering the call of the mayors of Chicago, New Orleans and St. Louis, gathered in Chicago to discuss the great Mississippi valley floods and to try to devise methods of preventing the recurrence of the disaster The participants in the conference included United States senators and congressmen, governors, mayors and other officials, business men of all varieties, engineers and labor leaders. Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi as chairman of the organization committee called the assemblage to order and Secretary of War Davis delivered a message from President Coolidge. Among the other speakers were Secretary of Labor J. J. Davis, Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, chief of army engineers; Senator W. L. Jones and Representative Frank R. Jones, chairmen of the congressional flood control committees, and Speaker Nicholas Longworth. Before leaving Washington for Chicago, Mr. Longworth had a conference with President Coolidge and said afterward that flood control legislation, together with tax reduction would be given the right of way by the house when congress meets in December.

Conditions in the flood area improved slowly, but the "sugar bowl" parishes of Louisiana were being converted into a huge lake as the blanket of water moved gradually to the gulf outlet.

MARSHAL CHANG TSO-LIN'S northern Chinese armies met with great defeats in Honan province, through the forces of both the Hankow and Nanking factions of the Nationalists advancing in the campaign against Peking. The northerners retreated to the north of the Yellow river and Chang prepared for desperate resistance at Paotingfu and Tehchow. The peril of foreigners in the Peking area was so imminent that nearly two thousand American marines were sent there from Shanghai and about as many more were en route there from the Philippines. This will make a force of more than 4,000 Americans in Peking and Tientsin. The British and Japanese also were sending large numbers of troops there, together with many planes to patrol the railway between the two cities. Japan also landed considerable forces at Tsingtao, which action provoked both the northern and the Nationalist authorities.

The diplomatic corps in Peking determined on plans for the defense of the legation quarter in the event of a crisis, but dispatches from Washington say President Coolidge decided that if disorders occurred Minister MacMurray and the American legation should be moved to Tientsin or possibly Shanghai, the navy believing it will be much easier to defend Americans at those points than at Peking. Senator Hiram Bingham of Connecticut, who has been traveling in China, was caught in the disorders resulting from the rout of Chang's troops in Honan. He escaped unhurt but he and his party were robbed of all their valuables.

SOVIET RUSSIA, extremely sore over the break with Great Britain, is determined to keep the Chinese situation as bad as it can. The executive committee of the Third Internationale decided to make a more intensive campaign in support of the Chinese revolution and to appeal to the workers of the world to assist soviet Russia to sabotage other nations in the coming "inevitable war."

Alexis Rykov, president of the council of people's commissars, addressing a plenary session of the Moscow soviet, declared that the British rupture with Russia was a prelude to war. The international situation therefore, was threatened with grave complications. The British government, he asserted, wished to improve its position by provoking war, in which it hoped to play a leading part, leaving "the dirty part of the work" to other peoples, who, being thereby weakened, would be subordinated to Great Britain. To this danger the soviet union opposed a steady policy of peace.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE in his Memorial day address at Arlington told his audience that the United States must maintain armed forces sufficient to protect it from attacks, or expose itself to aggression and destruction. He added to this warning a pledge of his leadership in an effort to end war through international agreements. But while he spoke of the country's desire to discard the element of force and deal with other powers on the basis of understanding and good will, he cautioned that "we could no more dispense with our military forces than we could dispense with our police forces."

Ambassador Herrick, speaking in France, created something of a sensation by making a strong attack on soviet Russia for its attempts to undermine other governments.

FIFTEEN balloons started from Akron, Ohio, in the annual elimination race, and the three winners all landed in Maine. W. T. Van Orman with the Goodyear entry won first place with 727 miles; E. J. Hill with the Detroit Flying club's balloon was second with 665 miles, and Capt. W. W. Kepner, pilot of the U. S. Army No. 3, took third place with 602 miles to his credit. Not an accident of any sort marred the event.

RIOTOUS mobs in Tampa, Fla., made three determined attacks on the jail with the intention of lynching a prisoner who had confessed to murdering five members of a family. The crowds were repulsed first by the police and then by members of the National Guard; the soldiers were forced to fire on the attackers and killed four persons.

GOVERNOR FULLER of Massachusetts, who is studying the Sacco-Vanzetti case, has appointed an advisory committee to aid him in determining his course in that puzzling matter. Its members are President Abbott Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, President Samuel W. Stratton of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Judge Robert Grant.

CHARLES P. TAFT, publisher of the Cincinnati Times-Star, and Mrs. Taft have given their valuable art collection, their residence and $1,000,000 to the people of Cincinnati. Announcement of the gift, made at a meeting of the Cincinnati Institute of Fine Arts, said it was given for the advancement of "the artistic and musical education and enjoyment of the people of Cincinnati."

EGYPT is in danger of losing her independence again. The government, under the influence of the Wafd nationalists, a wealthy Moslem organization, announced plans to reorganize the army without consulting the British and to refuse credits for the British sirdar. The British government sent a prompt warning against such action, accompanied by threats and reinforced the latter by dispatching three battleships to Alexandria and Port Said. Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, explained to the house of commons that if the Wafd politicians got control of the army it would become a potential hostile force and would complicate Great Britain's task of defending the Suez canal.

BELGIUM and Italy are on the verge of a quarrel, the trouble starting with the attitude of the Belgian foreign minister, Vandervelde, who is a Socialist, toward Fascism. His attacks were brought on by Italy's demand that Belgium expel Italian political refugees. Mussolini recalled the Italian ambassador, Marquis Cambiaso, leaving the embassy to a charge d'affaires indefinitely. Vandervelde refused to modify his attitude and was supported by the Socialist deputies.

OPENING of the sale of liquor in Ontario province under government control attracted crowds of thirsty Americans to Windsor and Toronto, and they, together with equally thirsty Canadians, almost mobbed the liquor stores. The demand for bottled booze and for the permits without which it could not be purchased was so great that some places had to close until more supplies could be obtained.

PRIMO DE RIVERA, premier-dictator of Spain, has called a national assembly to meet September 13 for the purpose of drafting a new constitution and a new electoral law giving universal suffrage and absolute freedom of the ballot.

GEORGE SOUDERS of Lafayette won the 500-mile automobile race at Indianapolis on Memorial day, driving his little Duesenburg car at an average speed of 97.54 miles an hour and going the whole route without relief.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S selection of the Black hills as his vacation place gave great joy to South Dakota. He will occupy the state game lodge near Rapid City, and the executive offices will be established in the new engineering building of the State School of Mines in Rapid City.

Here, then, was my opportunity, t, whether it be to my credit or my me, I confess that I have never been, instinct, what is called a fighting n. Often enough, God knows, I ve fought, and fought to kill, but er save where there seemed to be other choice. And so now, with enemy helpless, my arm was powless to strike; it was too much like rder; and as I saw him staring up me with a half-dazed glance, I took sudden resolution. "Johnson," I ed, "I don't want to kill you. Say at you cheated; promise you won't in; and leave town tomorrow. If u'll do this, your life's your own." I shall never forget the look that me over his face at my words; the k of a man reprieved in the very adow of death. On the instant, eorge," I Said Weakly, "I've Had Enough. Get Me Home."

seemed to summon all his remaining energy, and whispered, so faintly at I could scarcely hear him, "I romise."

At once I struggled to my feet, and king care to possess myself of his eapon, I shouted, with what little trength was left to me, to George and enfrew to come ashore. I started, I emember, to walk toward the boats, nd the next that I recall with any istinctness was that George's arm as around me, and that his voice was king me how badly I was hurt. I nswered, stupidly enough, that I was ot hurt in the least, to which he reoined impatiently: "Look at your leeve!" And when I did so I saw here a spreading stain of glistening d. "George," I said weakly, "I've d enough. Get me home."

CHAPTER VIII

I Meet Jack Shively.

George's first act, after getting me bed, was to find a physician. He athed and bandaged my wound, and, my relief, assured me that it was ot serious.

When morning came, I was not only eady, but eager, to leave the Port beind me. I breakfasted, though without appetite; then made my way to eorge's room and tried to persuade im to keep me company. But in ain. The pleasures of the palace still egulled him. And so I bade him ood-by, engaged a light vehicle, and as soon on my way toward McAllisr's plantation.

An hour's leisurely jog trot brought to the estate. No signs of life were isible; evidently it was the hour for uncheon and temporary relaxation om toil. Near at hand stood a large hite house, without doubt the dwelling of Shively.

Dismissing my driver, I made my ay, through the scorching heat, to e house, to find, on inquiry, that hively had just finished his luncheon. e came forth to meet me, a tall, sallow, unsmiling man, with a bald head, hooked nose, and in his pale eyes n expression of perpetual distrust, hich increased, I thought, rather than diminished, when I showed him my redentials and told him that my name as Robert McAllister. Altogether, he as a man for whom I experienced, at nce, a hearty antipathy, and more nd more I felt that Captain Barclay d told me, in every particular, nothng but the truth.

Shively was clearly in an ugly mood. e greeted me with scant civility; hen, apparently dismissing me, for the oment, from his mind, he summoned om an adjoining room one of his ubordinates named Evans, a callow, nprepossessing youth for whom I onceived no greater liking than I had r Shively. "Look here, Evans," he narled, "that watch was stolen, and hat sneaking, light-fingered Sally took hat watch; now you get her here and ake her say so."

The man answered, mildly enough, hat Sally had already been questioned, d had denied all knowledge of the whereabouts of the watch. At which Shively broke forth into a torrent of vain and blasphemous cursing, and wound up by exclaiming: "Trice her up, the black liar. Trice her up till she says she took it. And if she won't own up, set her on the picket. I'll show these black trash who's master here."

I listened, with a sensation of helplessness, to this callous command. At once Evans took himself off, while Shively sat in silence, yet with what seemed to me an expression of sensuous anticipation upon his face, until presently Evans reappeared, followed by a comely colored girl, whose quivering lip and tear-stained cheeks bore witness to the treatment she had undergone. Shively began upon her venomously.

"So you took the watch, did you?"

The girl fell upon her knees before him, with hands clasped in entreaty. "So help me," she cried piteously, "I never see watch. I say I take it 'cause I no bear pain. God's truth, I no take it."

"You lie, d—n you," roared Shively, "but it won't go down with me." And to Evans he commanded, "Trice her up again; we'll see who's master here."

At this the poor girl completely lost control of herself, for, as I could plainly see, she would say anything rather than endure a second tricing up. "No, no," she cried. "I lie. I take watch. No trice up again."

"I thought so," said Shively grimly. Then added threateningly, "Where have you hidden it? No lying, now. Where is it, you black thief?"

It was pitiful to perceive the girl's simple mind thrown into confusion. Since, as anyone could see, she had never stolen the watch, naturally she could not confess where she had hidden it. But Shively, like a god upon his throne, was after her again. "Where? Where? Can't you understand English? Where is it, I say."

Whereupon the girl, clearly snatching at the first thought that came into her head, answered wildly, "I throw watch in river."

Shively exploded in another torrent of rage. Of course I do not suppose that he was stupid enough to believe for an instant that the girl was guilty; all he wished was an excuse for punishing her. With a cruel smile curling the corners of his mouth he said something to Evans which I could not catch; but the woman heard and her frantic pleas for mercy told me that she must be facing some further ordeal more terrible than anything she had yet undergone. But Shively bade her be silent in a tone so menacing that her cries subsided into frightened sobs that fairly wrung my heart. And when the assistant led her away she followed submissively, as if realizing the futility of resistance.

At once, though knowing that my efforts would be vain, I attempted to intercede in the girl's behalf, but the look that Shively gave me and the contemptuous manner in which he heard me made it evident that our dislike was thoroughly mutual. Moreover, I knew, only too well, that these men were within their legal rights, and that Shively's action would doubtless have been approved by half the overseers on the island. Therefore, sorry as I felt for the poor girl, I subsided, only inquiring how soon he could provide me with a boat to take me to the island. To which, doubtless scenting a chance to make me suffer as well as the girl, he replied that he first wished me to see her punished, so that I might assure my uncle that discipline on the plantation was being maintained. Then, reaching for his hat, he bade me follow him.

I answered, curtly enough, that I would stay where I was; whereupon, with a scowl and a shrug of his shoulders, he departed, leaving me upon the veranda, gazing forth, sick at heart, into the blazing sunshine of the tropic afternoon. Presently, after the lapse of what might have been ten minutes, I was startled by the heartrending shrieks of a woman in mortal agony.

It was enough; spurred to instant action, I had traversed, in a twinkling, the space between the house and the spot, in the woods, whence the cries had come. There, in a little clearing, I beheld poor Sally bound hand and foot to a cottonwood, her face pressed close to the trunk of the tree, her brown back bared to the impact of the lash, while Evans and two other assistants stood by, and Shively, whip in hand, was measuring his distance for another blow. A second more, and I would have been on him; was, indeed, in the very act of leaping for his arm, when suddenly, and without warning, a gigantic negro burst from the shelter of the woods and hurled himself full upon Shively. I saw a knife flash, and hoped, for one exultant moment, that it would find a resting place in the overseer's heart. But luck was against the avenger; Shively managed to parry the thrust, the two men, grappling, rolled over and over on the ground, and then the fortune of war was decisively altered as three assistants rushed to the rescue of their chief. Yet even then the negro, whose strength must have been enormous, succeeded in wrenching himself free, and with one final stab which slashed Shively's arm, he bounded off like a deer in the direction of the river.

"Catch him!" roared Shively, and with the blood running from his bared arm, he dashed after the fugitive, with the others at his heels. Making the most of my opportunity, I cut the thongs which bound the woman to the tree, laid her unconscious form on the ground, and then, knowing that I would do more harm than good by trying to help her further, I hastened after these chivalrous rulers of the plantation.

I found them grouped on the margin of the river, pistols in hand. The negro must have been a remarkable swimmer, for I could see no sign of him, but Shively explained savagely, "We saw him dive in. He's swimming under water, but he's no fish. He's got to come up."

The words had hardly left his lips when at some distance from the shore the negro's head appeared above the surface. Almost instantly three pistol shots rang out, but the aim of the marksmen was hurried, their hands unsteady from running, and though the three bullets splashed close to the swimmer's head, no one of them took effect, and he disappeared again like a shadow. Shively alone had held his fire, and running out on a projecting point to lose no foot of his distance, he cried exultantly, "He can't stay under so long this time; watch me settle him when he comes up!"

The seconds passed. Then, suddenly, still farther out in the stream, and as though the protracted effort of staying so long submerged had sapped his energies, the head and shoulders of the fugitive burst from the water, presenting a mark too good to miss. I saw Shively's right arm extended, and prayed to myself that the bullet might go astray. Then came the sharp crack of the pistol, but this time there was no splash to mark a miss. I saw the negro's head snap back sharply, and his arms clutch convulsively at the air. Then, as if retaining his faculties to the end, his blurred eyes sought the shore, he shouted some words I could not catch, and then his muscles relaxed and his lifeless body floated quietly away toward the sea.

Shively, with perfect calmness, turned to his subordinates. "What did he say, Evans?" he queried. "You know their lingo better than I do. He wasn't exactly wishing me luck, was he?"

He spoke in grim pleasantry, but there was nothing of pleasantry in the bookkeeper's reply. "He was an obi man, their chief magician, and the husband of the woman you flogged. He curses you and yours through life and death. And he will come back from the grave, he says, to haunt you."

Shively grinned. "We'll see about that," he answered lightly enough. "I've never been bothered with ghosts yet." Then added, "Get back now, boys, and keep those swine well under. At any sign of an excuse, bear down on 'em; sweat 'em till they drop. If that man was an obi man, as you say, there may be some grumbling. But by G—d, we'll show 'em who runs this plantation."

I sickened at him; my one desire was to get away as soon as possible, and as civilly as I could I asked him when he could ferry me over to the island. He answered, with what I imagined to be irony, that he would be delighted to row me across at once, and led the way to a landing stage where a number of boats were made fast. "Can you pull an oar?" he asked with a disparaging glance, as if he felt that such a faint-hearted youth could do little in the way of manly exercise.

"I can," I responded with equal brevity, and he accordingly selected a light skiff and seated himself on the after rowing seat. I should, as a matter of fact, have enjoyed pulling stroke myself, for I think I might have been able to set a pace that would have made him gasp before we reached the island; but as it was there was nothing for me to do but slip into the forward seat and adjust myself to his leisurely stroke, which sent us skimming, at a good rate, across the placid water of the lagoon.

CHAPTER IX

Calm and Storm.

From a jetty on the easterly side of the island, where a dozen boats lay moored, a wizened, untidy-looking man peered down at us. I knew, of course, that this must be McAllister, even before Shively greeted him by name; yet as I stepped ashore and shook his hand, it was hard to realize that this little man, with bowed shoulders and sidelong glance, had ever been a gentleman of fortune and a ranger of the sea. There are those, however, who rule by craft alone, leaving the actual fighting to their followers, and such a leader, I reasoned, McAllister must have been. He now inquired anxiously as to the disturbance on the shore, and Shively seemed to take malicious delight in recounting the incident and in repeating with emphasis the curses which the obi man had called down on his slayer and on all connected with him. McAllister was clearly both annoyed and alarmed. "Man, man, I'm always telling ye," he complained, "that you're too forth-putting by far. Peace and quietness—that's the bonny way to live."

At these words Shively, who did not appear to be at all in awe of his chief, threw back his ugly head and laughed long and heartily, thinking, I dare say, of the old days on the Caribbean, and of the lonely islet in the Antilles where they had shot down their allies from behind. "Peace and quietness" surely came oddly from the mouth of Andrew McAllister.

As the overseer pulled leisurely away for the shore, McAllister conducted me toward the house. To my surprise, he scarcely noticed me at all, apparently much disturbed by Shively's news. Thus I had an excellent opportunity, with an occasional sidewise glance, to examine him more closely. A little unkempt man, with straggling sandy hair and mustache, curiously bent in the shoulders and with eyes for the most part looking at the ground and seldom raised to your face. And at once I decided that Captain Barclay again had spoken truth, and that here was a man with an evil conscience who was living in a state of perpetual dread.

As we neared the house, I examined it with interest. Evidently it had been built with an eye to defense, for the whole lower story was of stone, with narrow loop-holes in place of windows. Presently, as we drew nearer, Shively, Whip in Hand, Was Measuring His Distance for Another Blow.

I could perceive three or four swarthy-looking men lounging under a tree, and noticed at once that they did not at all resemble ordinary slaves, but were much fiercer in appearance and far more self-reliant in their bearing. Again I recalled the captain's description of the island and its occupants, and correctly enough surmised that these men were a portion of McAllister's bodyguard, specially hired to protect his wizened carcass from harm.

History's Pages Full of Errors of Record

Aesop's fables are really not Aesop's at all, but Babrius' fables. A Graeco-Italian named Babrius wrote and compiled them several centuries after the Phrygian fabulist's death, the date of which is given as 564. Some chroniclers say Aesop never lived at all. The fables he is said to have composed are lost. Socrates and later writers made versions of the Babrian inventions, to which they gave Aesop's name, thus bestowing immortality upon one sage and robbing another of his rightful laurels. A mistake in computation by a Sixth century chronologist is responsible for the common and erroneous understanding that Christ's birth was in the year 1. Christ was not born in the first year of the Christian era but about four years before the beginning of that period. Cinderella's slipper was made not of glass but of sable. Noting these and similar errors, Josh Billings once wrote:

"The trouble with most folks isn't so much their ignorance, as knowin' so many things that ain't so."—Mentor Magazine.

Master of Arts

Why the scholastic degree of "Master of Arts" is sometimes written "M. A." and other times "A. M." arose from the fact that the degree was originally indicated in Latin and in that language the position of words is not so essential to the sense as it is in English. In Latin it was either "Artium Magister" or "Magister Artium," meaning "master of arts."

Thick Skinned Caesar

The play was "Julius Caesar," and no expense had been spared in the production. But the effect of the assassination scene was spoiled when the trick dagger refused to work, and as Brutus frantically jabbed the unfortunate Caesar with the obdurate weapon a voice from the gallery remarked, in a calm, interested voice: "Gee, but 'e's tough!"

Mrs. Ernest Palmby and little daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Nick Roths, of Vernon Center ,came last night for a few days visit with relatives here. Mrs. Palmby is visiting her mother, Mrs. Henry Wille who has not been well for some time and Mr. and Mrs. Roths are visiting the Roths families near Klemme.

"Abe" Lauritsen left yesterday in his car for Greeley, Colorado. He was accompanied by another young man from Britt. "Abe" will attend Teachers College. Besides being summer school at the Colorado State athletic director "Abe" is principal at Renwick next year, with a handsome advance in salary.

Mrs. Elmer Schlei suffered a peculiar accident Saturday evening that resulted in two broken fingers on her right hand. She was assisting with the milking and was closing the stanchions as the cows put their heads into them and in some manner when she fastened a stanchion it snapped shut on her hand resulting in two broken fingers.

Mrs. Mary Wellemeyer and grandson, Bobby Merten, of Guthrie, Oklahoma, came Monday for a visit at the Arthur Wellemeyer home. Mrs. Wellemeyer will remain a few days here visiting her son and family and will then go to Charles City for the remainder of the summer visiting with her daughter, Ruth. "Bobby" will spend his summer vacation in Klemme.

Work is progressing rapidly on Edwin Josten's new barn south of Klemme. Tuesday they finished laying up the block work. The new barn when completed will be 40 x 66 feet and 16 feet to the eaves. The first seven and a half feet will be tile block and the balance lumber construction. Edwin will have one of the best barns in this community.

At the meeting of the ladies of the Twin Lake Farm Bureau held at the home of Mrs. Wm. Greman May 26th the lesson on lamp shades and pillow tops was given by the local leaders. Twenty-three ladies were present to enjoy the lesson after which a dainty lunch was served by the hostess. Mrs. Earl Ruka was appointed secretary to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. Warnock. All reported a fine time.

James A. Fisk, territory representative of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, of Jersey City, was a business caller at the Klemme Creamery Tuesday and Wednesday. The local creamery has been shipping their entire output to this company for the past ten years. The A. & P. Company buy their butter for eastern trade from a select number of Creameries and demand a very high quality product. Mr. Fisk was well pleased with the way the product was handled at the local creamery and spoke very highly of the local plant.

Varieties of Growth in Tropical Forests

In the republic of Haiti, with an area of 10,000 square miles, there are over 100 species of trees, ranging from ones as well known as mahogany and lignumvitae down to those which are so rare that they are scarcely known even in Haiti.

The forests of the tropics are never composed of just one species but of a mixture of many kinds, only one or two of which may be of any commercial importance. Usually the growth is very dense with lots of underbrush, twining vines, low bushes, and so forth, which make the forest hard to penetrate.

Tropical trees may be divided into several classes; those whose wood yields dyes, such as logwood and fustic; trees which yield tanning material; trees yielding special products, such as rubber; trees valuable for cabinet work, such as mahogany, and trees with fairly light and soft wood suitable for general construction.—Mr. Barbour, in Adventure Magazine.

Dollars in your Cream Tanks

In order to get every dollar that is possible from your cream, there are a few important things to consider. First: it is absolutely essential to use clean pails, cans and separator. Second: in order to insure good cream it must be kept sweet, and to best secure this desirable quality it should be cooled quickly. Third: keep it free of all foreign odors in order to give it flavor; barn odors, careless milking must be avoided keep cream from becoming tainted.

Cooling Tanks provide about the best known method to keep cream cool and free from odors and insure sweetness during the warm summer days which are now here.

Quality in butter is the thing that secures the top price for the product and stimulates quality prices. Try to keep up the fine quality of cream you have been delivering to us in the past and we can guarantee you extra prices as we are thus enabled to manuacture quality butter which sells for a premium on the eastern market.

CREAM COOLING TANKS

We have a number of Cooling Tanks for sale at the Creamery. These are of the approved type and are the most reasonable in price we have ever seen.

The American Bible Society put out nearly 10 million volumes of the Scriptures last year. The Bible always leads the world in the extent of its annual placement. No other book can compete with it. No wonder that Hollywood seeks to dramatize it.

A LOTTERY WITHOUT A WINNER

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

(There is presented herewith the first of a series of articles exposing the wiles of sharpers who are after your money.)

ALMOST unbelievable amounts are lost to the American people annually from unwise ventures. This loss, estimated at nearly one billion dollars a year, is accounted for when you take into consideration that practically all of the money "invested" in numerous fake schemes and half-baked projects is forfeited by the investors. In presenting this series of articles regarding sharp practices and various kinds of swindles we hope to prevent thousands of people from falling into the traps already set for them by irresponsible and unscrupulous promoters.

W. R. MOREHOUSE

Through the use of only actual cases selected from several thousand, it is hoped to prove conclusively the futility of taking a "gambler's chance" with your savings, for as in a lottery without a winner you are bound to lose. Much of the material here used has been supplied by the Better Business Bureaus throughout the United States which are non-profit organizations serving the investor without charge and acting wholly in the public interest. Read these cases and then file them away for future reference, for sooner or later you may find yourself on the verge of "taking a leap in the dark",—of speculating with your savings as the people here told about were inveigled into doing.

A "good front" has put over more crooked deals than any other one thing. Every irresponsible promoter specializes in putting on a "good front" in his dealings with those whom he fleeces out of their savings. Whether or not he is successful is due to a large degree on how good a front he is able to put on. In motion pictures, the sets, or "props" as they are called, supply the setting for the scenes. They are used to portray things that seem large, things that seem grand and beautiful. Peer behind those sets and what do you see there? You see that the attractive fronts are supported by braces made of the cheapest, knottiest and poorest timber imaginable.

They serve their purpose in the world of make-believe, but in real life, you cannot afford to buy only good fronts. Your house must have real rooms behind it, your purchases and investments real values. In the field of wild-cat financing if you peer behind the "good front" which the promoter puts on you will find that it is supported only by deception, dishonesty and fraud.

The Lure of Easy Money

Unscrupulous persons of the "good front" type are expert actors in the role of "big brother" to inexperienced investors with money at their command. As protector and advisor to the widow and the inexperienced, which they claim to be, they are in reality wolves in sheep's clothing.

Gaining the Victim's Confidence

In personal appearance they are impressive. As conversationalists they are convincing. As students of the traits of human nature they rate high. In short, they know how to stalk their prey successfully. With Satanic cunning they fall in line with their intended victim's likes and dislikes, his viewpoint and his hobby, and when they have gained his favor and trust they grow more and more confidential, presently taking a great interest in his welfare and happiness. Before long they are offering advice and pointing out how he can better his own interests by making a new disposition of his available cash or by selling his present good securities and buying others recommended by them

Your promoter will draw upon your imagination and paint a picture of a scheme by which you can make thousands of dollars without effort or risk,—he may describe some invention selling for an astounding sum, or depict the prospects of a fabulous mine or oil company that is going to double and treble in value over night. As a climax he may paint the picture of a vine-covered cottage which is to be yours in your old age with its radiantly burning fire on the hearth and with all the luxuries that go with a happy home. And finally, he may paint you sitting before this fire happy and contented—independent for life, as the result of an investment made according to his advice.

But there is a great difference between what you get and what the wild-cat promoter paints in the imagination of his victims By the lure of easy money he leads them over the precipice of financial ruin. Instead of old-age ease and comforts there usually results poverty and privation.

(The next article in this series will tell of a clever scheme practiced in many parts of the country by which the unwary are robbed of their money.)

MORE HORSEPOWER FOR FARM RELIEF

All proposed plans have thus far failed to provide the farmer with farm relief by increasing his selling prices. Industry, however, met a somewhat similar situation by lowering the cost of production. A similar solution can be successfully applied to agriculture.

The increasing of production per worker on the farm is being met to a certain extent by using larger units of power, whether horse or mechanical. Where one man was using a single horse or team he is now using from 3 to 8 horses, thus increasing the ground covered from two to five times. By the use of larger power units hired labor can be reduced or eliminated.

An analysis of raising corn divides costs according to the following:

Land	50 percent
Labor	20 percent
Power	20 percent
Miscellaneous	10 percent

Of these items one can be considered stationary, namely, the land cost Labor and power are variable and have been the main obstructions to lower production costs. Larger power units are doing much to decrease labor factors. Also, larger power units if used over larger farm areas can do much to lower the power percentage

Professor J. B. Davidson, senior agricultural engineer, United States Department of Agriculture, summing up investigational work in 36 states, offers this equation for farming:

$$I = (S - C)Q$$

When "I" equals income
"S" is selling price
"C" is cost of production
"Q" is the quantity of production

Professor Davidson states: "Where quantity of production is held uppermost one finds prosperous farmers who plan to farm more acres without increasing the overhead."

Corn controls central western agriculture. In that area the acreage one man can farm is dependent on the number he can cultivate. With the single row cultivator he was unable to cultivate more than four to seven acres per day. The two row cultivator doubled this amount. Three and four row cultivators are now on the market—even six row were used this season It cultivates fifty acres per day.

It's Fence Building Time—Right Now!

THE season has nothing to do with fence building—if you know how. Why wait to do that needed fence work, when you can do it now so quickly and easily.

How? Come in and let us show and tell you all about the RED TOP Steel Post—a post one man with no other help than the RED TOP One Man Driver, can drive straight and true through the hardest sunbaked or frozen soil—and drive 200 to 300 a day, too.

With RED TOPS you can do a week's fencing job in one day—any time in the year.

And when you get the RED TOP post job done—it's done, because they outlast 4 or 5 ordinary posts and hold the fence in steady security through many years of service. They get all the possible service out of a fence that is in it.

We try to serve our farmer friends with only the most reliable merchandise; that's why we handle RED TOPS. They are the pioneer steel post. Their quality has always been of the same high standard; the material from which they are made is tough, springy, railroad rail steel that never varies and gives most years of useful life to the post. That's why so many thousands of RED TOPS are still giving the same steady service after many years in fence lines all over the country. Let us show you why it costs less in the long run to use RED TOPS.

FARMER WOMAN IN OKLAHOMA

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Because It Gave Her Health and Strength

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checked apron sighed as she looked at them. She was tired of cows, tired of her tedious work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a houseful of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her falling health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleeps well and is no longer blue and timid.

This woman, Mrs. Cora Short, R. R. 9, Box 387, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now says: 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself?' I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound."

Other women who have to work hard and keep things going may find the road to better health as Mrs. Short did, through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Geologist's Idea Made Fortunes for Others

The first to introduce the use of coal oil, or "kerosene," in the United States and Canada was Dr. Abraham Gesner, a distinguished Canadian geologist.

Doctor Gesner, after long experimentation, discovered how to produce oil that could be used in lamps for illuminating purposes, from bituminous shale and cannel coal. Though he gave the name "kerosene" to his discovery it was popularly called coal oil.

Following the discovery of petroleum in Pennsylvania in 1859, and later in many other sections of North America, kerosene became the principal product of the distillation of the crude oil. Like most inventors, Doctor Gesner reaped little financial benefit from his discovery, which was destined to be the foundation of scores of immense fortunes.

New Form of "Waif"

The old story of the abandoned baby on the doorstep was presented with a variation at Glendale, Calif. When C. A. Redmond investigated a mysterious rattling on his front porch he found a thoroughbred Boston terrier tied to his door. Attached on the dog's harness was a shipping tag with the message: "We are leaving the city in haste. Take care of this little thoroughbred until we can claim it again and it will be worth your while."

Pain a Small Matter With Beauty as Goal

Woman has always displayed an amazing fortitude when it has pleased her to endure discomfort or even pain for the sake of her looks, remarks the Pathfinder Magazine. She will pinch her feet into narrow slipper toes, perch herself on six-inch heels, and smilingly declare that her shoes are perfectly comfortable. She will eschew warm winter underwear and shiver in short skirts and sheer stockings without batting an eye, although a sturdy male similarly clad would fear freezing to death.

'Twas ever thus. The women of today are no more Spartan than the women of past centuries. The ladies of ancient Greece, who wore loosely flowing robes and sandals without hose, used to pass their arms and legs swiftly through a flame to singe off the offending hair which marred the ivory smoothness of their skin.

Timely Odds

She was a young and pretty girl of a sporting turn of mind. Somehow she heard that a certain horse was to win a certain race, and, deciding to indulge in a little speculation, she went to a "bookie" and put a dollar on for a win, asking at the same time how much she would get if it came off.

"If it starts at 20 to 1 you will get 21 back," said the bookie; "if at 10 to 1, 11 back; if at 5 to 1 you'll get 6 back."

"I see," said the maiden, "and if it starts at one o'clock, how much should I get then?"

Fish Killed by Cold

We call fish cold-blooded, but they dislike extreme cold as much as a boy dislikes an icy bath. They actually die of cold; millions of tile-fish across the Atlantic were killed by chilly currents, and fish brought up by Scott's men in the Antarctic, from water with a temperature of 30 degrees, froze to death as they reached the air, where the temperature was 70 degrees colder.

Almost half the farms in Sweden use electric power, whereas only 3 per cent of American farms are electrified.

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

CREPE-TWIST, canvas-worked sports sets, consisting of hat, belt and bag—sounds interesting, does it not? And in their original gay coloring they are ever so much handsomer than the picture reveals them. Everyone who catches a sight of these charming sets for sportswear, feels an urge to buy some material so as to lose in no time in taking up this fascinating handcraft.

One can secure at almost any fancy-work department canvas belts stamped ready to work; also the stamped hat, which, by the way, has a sectional crown seamed together, likewise ready-to-work canvas handbags, the latter coming in almost any devised type from fanciful wrist-bags to envelope purses. If one has "ideas of their own, then buy the canvas by the yard, cutting out and stamping the hat, belt and purse as fancy dictates.

For the crepe-twist used for embroidering, one must go to the department where fancy crepe and tissue paper is sold. The remarkable part of this handsome twist is that it is really a yarn made of tightly twisted crepe paper which has been processed to be as durable as raffia and it works up just as effectively, with the advantage of costing but a trifle.

The work itself is easy of accomplishment. All that is required is simple embroidery stitches directed by the stamped guide to fill in the background in stripes, as the pocketbook shows, or in squares as used for the hat. The floral pattern is filled in with solid stitch also, but of course tempered to the character of the design.

All sorts of interesting decorative features are introduced, such as colored beads interworked in cunning ways. The belt in the picture has a pattern of beads running throughout its length in connection with its multi-colored background of crepe twist.

The handbag is sewed into a metal or composition frame after the manner for handmade ribbon purses.

There is an interesting trend of realism developing in the realm of millinery in that certain new models interpret the occasion for which they are intended. The group of "topic hats," as some call them, as here pictured, tell the story of this new movement at a glance. These models, which are so directly interpretative, bring to mind a discussion which took place quite some time ago in a circle of designers concerning the possibilities of millinery art. The question brought up was: "Can a hat have expression?" Is it possible for it to tell a story as does a picture? Without a doubt the query finds its answer in the smart 1927 millinery in this picture.

Is tennis your hobby? Could anything more apropos in the way of millinery for the occasion be conceived of than the first hat in this group? Note how the tennis net is suggested with a lattice-work of straw braid, together with a clever placement of racquet and ball in lieu of an ornament.

You prefer golf? Was ever a hat better tuned to the sport than the one shown at the top to the right! Clever is that grassy arrangement of straw fringe around the crown, not to mention the ingenuity of the golf sticks and bag effect.

An enthusiast over football? On a cool day the helmet-like cap centered to the right will prove just the combination suited to sportswear for this event.

The hat below to the left cannot fail to be of appeal to the girl intending to win the next game of hockey.

If the proposed plan of wearing millinery apropos of the profession proves popular, we will see something like the chapeau which concludes the group. It has been suggested that this model be described as "note" worthy. This very unusual creation was designed for no less a personage than Rosa-Raisa, the famous opera star

THESE ARE EASILY MADE

HATS FOR SPORTSWEAR

Handpainting is contributing an interesting novelty to sports hats in the way of clever scenic effects. A pretty white yachting hat of felt recently designed showed a painted marine which included sailboats and blue waves with pennants and flags interworked. A simple national blue silk cord was tied about the crown. A similar painting appearing on the sleeves of the white silk blouse is worn with it

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON

LESSON TEXT—Acts 12:1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all.—Ps. 34:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God Takes Care of Peter.

JUNIOR TOPIC — God Answers Prayer for Peter.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Does God Deliver Us?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Power of United Prayer.

I. Peter's Imprisonment (vv. 1-4).

1. By whom (v. 1).

Herod, the grandson of the wicked Herod who slew the innocent children of Bethlehem.

2. The reason (v. 3).

It was to gain the favor of the Jews. Herod was not a Jew, but an Edomite, therefore knew that his success was dependent upon his having the good will of the Jews. Herod for the sake of popularity manifested a deep sympathy for degenerate Judaism. It was but the sympathy of the politician. Since the church had developed so as to be a successful rival of Judaism, indeed was already displacing it, he saw an opportunity to curry favor with the Jews by putting forth his hands against it.

3. The method (v. 4).

He was arrested, put into prison and guarded by four quaternions of soldiers. A quaternion is a guard of four soldiers. Humanly speaking, it was impossible to escape. They had doubtless heard of Peter's escape from jail before, so they thought they would take no risks this time. However, they made one fatal mistake—they left out God.

II. The Church of God in Prayer (v. 5).

The church was at a crisis. Her situation was most grave. James, one of the brethren of the church, was dead, and Peter, the most prominent of all, was in prison. In this desperate strait they did the wise thing—they betook themselves to prayer. It was a noteworthy prayer.

1. It was unto God, not unto men, or to be heard of men. This is a very common fault today. All true prayer is unto God.

2. It was united prayer.

There is peculiar power in the united prayer of God's people.

3. It was an intensely earnest prayer.

It was more than unceasing prayer, it was the earnest desire of the soul as it stretched itself out toward God.

4. It was definite prayer.

They specifically offered prayer to God for Peter. Their prayer was concentrated, definite and specific.

III. Peter Delivered by an Angel (vv. 6-11).

1. Peter sleeping (v. 6).

This shows that he was not greatly disturbed over the matter. The Lord keeps in perfect peace those whose minds are stayed on Him. (Isa. 26:3).

2. Peter leaves the prison (vv. 7-10).

A heavenly light shone in the prison. The angel smote Peter on the side; the chains fell off. Peter put on his clothes and passed by one guard after another through the iron gate out into the city.

3. The effect upon Peter (v. 11).

Although the matter was so wonderful to Peter, even outside his consciousness, when he came to himself he was assured beyond peradventure that God had miraculously delivered him from Herod's wicked hands.

IV. Unconscious Unbelief (vv. 12-19).

1. Behavior of Peter and the church (vv. 12-17).

Peter went to the house of Mary and knocked. The knock was answered by Rhoda who was so overjoyed that she forgot to open the gate, and ran in and told them that Peter was at the gate. The disciples were not prepared for such good news, and even accused her of madness. She, undaunted, insisted. They offered as an explanation that perhaps it might be Peter's guardian angel in his likeness. They got more than they expected. Peter rehearsed unto them the Lord's dealing with him, and instructed them to make these things known unto James and the brethren.

2. The behavior of the soldiers (vv. 18,19).

There was great agitation among them as to what had become of Peter. This was a serious matter since they were responsible for him. Not being able to account for Peter's escape, Herod commanded that they be put to death. After this Herod went down to Caesarea. Here he was adored as God. Because he arrogated this honor to himself, the Lord smote him. Herod died, but the Word of the Lord grew and multiplied.

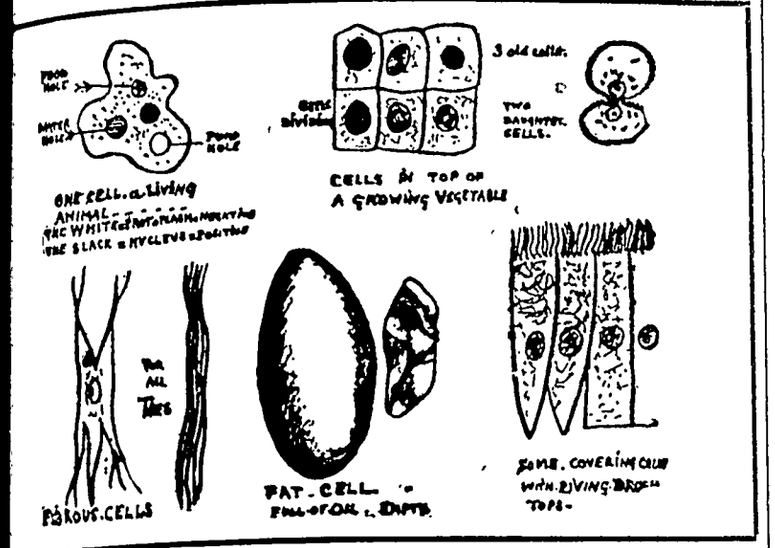
...OURSELF ...nd YOUR BODY

By WILFRED T. GRENFELL

LIVING MACHINERY

How the Parts of Our Bodies Are Put Together—and What They Are Made of.



OUR family, a wandering life separates us much from the children, but at last a holiday together, on the beautiful shores of Champlain, offered us the chance needed.

"How would you like a talk about we see, and hear, and smell, and and think, and eat, and the?" I volunteered one day.

The spontaneity of the reply left no for doubt about their approval, so I continued:

"This is far the most wonderful in the world. The body is the real automatic machinery in the rld. Moreover, the units make their rules; choose some to govern the while they train others to do all repairing, feeding, draining, tending the pumps, and manufacturing of thing needed from a drain-pipe seeing-machine. They do all own cleaning. They keep their police and maintain armies to ect the whole machine. There is ing they do not do.

"First, there is anatomy. It shows ow blood pumps are made, how frame is built up, how the wires central office are placed, how one of the machinery is fitted to the how the fuel is turned into power how the drains are arranged for, how the whole lot of live things es one great big living giant ma-e, which can see to walk about, t danger, test the fuel as it goes know things by the feel of them, norize facts, and become what we a 'living man.' We must also w how the machinery gives, res, and acts on intelligent orders. Besides all this, we want to know t each part is built up of and how oes its work, and how the various s work together, like the transpor-on system, the supply system, and system for dealing with garbage. However, even such fine machines go together to make up what we our bodies do at last get out of ir and old, and then they have a akdown,' like the engine of the or car. So we must learn to know t has gone wrong. This is called ology.

"The bricks from which we build body are called cells.

"The cells get together into groups like manufacturing companies; they are the wisest companies formed—small as they are. One enables us to have thoughts. The n is our thought factory and also general headquarters, with the erals, staff officers, and orderlies. The cells unite for every sort of k; to make glass like the front of eye, or strings to catch sounds as the ear, or taste-buds to warn us dangerous things in our mouths ch we must not swallow, or, on other hand, to help us enjoy good d, or to digest what we eat, as the mach, liver, and pancreas cells do. ne cells unite to tie things together, ligaments, or to keep them from ping, like elastic tissue buffers.

"Some cells, like coral animals, build framework up, such as bone, and ers form the engines to move it ut, like muscle-cells; some build pipes for circulating streams; ne keep those pipes clean; some ry oxygen down the pipes to burn and give the machine its horse-wer; some carry food down the es, others bring materials for lding. Some are policemen who ch burglars, or fight enemies, as ldiers do. Some build the skin as a mpart to protect the outside and p it in repair; others cover it with to keep it warm.

"The most important of all the cells called germ-cells. They are like seed-cells which make new flow-, or the egg-cells which make new ds and fishes. Why, we even have ate cells, which are good cells to in with, only they have turned ates and kill and rob the others—d then there are the most awful ttles you ever heard of.

"You can see them, enlarged ever many times, in the motion-pictures. metimes these fights are with pi-es like the tumor cells or the can-r-cells, and sometimes with regular ading armies called spirochaetes, e dragons or snakes. You will ly want to see the brave White cells fighting to the death, and never sparing themselves, gladly dying to save the others. They never seem to need calling twice. There is one special lot that only sprinkles poison, like the poison-gas brigade, to kill the enemy; and one White regiment which does nothing but carry away the dead and clean up the battle-field when it is over."

Remember There Are Gray Hairs in Tunes

A profound philosopher once remarked that "a man is as old as the tunes he whistles," and every man past forty who reads the line will feel a shocked realization of its truth.

For there are gray hairs in tunes as well as in heads, and they have a close affiliation. There is a sentimental link between tunes of the past and silvering locks—or no locks at all.

The Grand Army veteran whistled "Marching Through Georgia" when he was a youth, and he still whistles it. The Spanish war veteran whistled "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," when he was young, and he still whistles it.

The veteran of the World war whistles "Over There," and he will probably keep on whistling it until he finally passes "over there." And so it goes, thus proving the truth of that profound philosopher's observation.

Only this morning we caught ourself whistling "Silver Threads Among the Gold." But in our case there could be no connection, of course, for assuredly there are no silver threads running amongst the gold on our dome—at least, there were none that we could see yesterday morning when we finished pulling out all we could find with our shaving mirror and a pair of tweezers.

We had heard that tune on the radio the night before and so it was running in our head, but suddenly recalling the observation of the aforesaid profound philosopher, we quickly switched our whistle to "Hello, Bluebird.

We are glad to pass along this little tip to all our fellow men. Quit whistling "Old Hundred" and tune in with the Blue Birds! It's lots more sensible than wearing a red necktie and a pink hatband.—Holyoke Transcript.

Modern Warfare Just Slaughter and Filth

The anatomy of the battles of Verdun and the Somme was the same. A battlefield had been selected. Around this battlefield walls were built—double triple, quadruple—of enormous cannon. Behind these railways were constructed to feed them, and mountains of shells were built up. All this was the work of months.

Thus the battlefield was completely encircled by thousands of guns of all sizes, and a wide oval space prepared in their midst. Through this awful arena all the divisions of each army, battered ceaselessly by the enveloping artillery, were made to pass in succession, as if they were the teeth of interlocking cog-wheels grinding each other.

For month after month the ceaseless cannonade continued at its utmost intensity, and month after month the gallant divisions of heroic human beings were torn to pieces in this terrible rotation. Then came the winter, pouring down rain from the sky to clog the feet of men, and drawing veils of mist before the hawk eyes of their artillery. The arena, as used to happen in the Coliseum in those miniature Roman days, was flooded with water. A vast sea of ensanguined mud, churned by thousands of vehicles, by hundreds of thousands of men and millions of shells, replaced the blasted dust.

Still the struggle continued. Still the remorseless wheels revolved. Still the auditorium of artillery roared. At last the legs of men could no longer move; they wallowed and floundered helplessly in the slime. Their food, their ammunition lagged behind them along the smashed and choked railways.—From "The World Crisis, 1916-18," by Winston Churchill.

What's the Answer...?

Here is a new feature that will provide profitable entertainment for all of our readers. In each issue we will print a series of twenty questions covering such subjects as history, science, geography, literature, arithmetic, religion, sports, economics, famous sayings, natural history and other things. In this issue we start the series with the first twenty questions. Our next issue will carry the answer to these questions and another set of twenty, and so on over a period of several months. Try to answer these questions as they appear in each issue. To do so, to search for the answers that you do not know, will add materially to your store of valuable information. This new, "What's the Answer" department is an educational feature of unusual value. Cut out the questions, keep them until the answers appear in the next issue and then see how near correct your own answers have been. Follow it from issue to issue and you will find it fascinating.

Accidents That Have Made Big Industries

A piece of cheese tossed by one workman at another during the luncheon hour missed its mark and dropped into the plating bath used in the production of copper disks from which wax phonograph records were stamped. Later the disks from that bath were found to be far superior to the others, and an investigation revealed that the casein in the cheese had done the trick. This disclosed a possible improvement worth thousands of dollars to the manufacturer. Telephone engineers discovered that an alloy of nickel and iron, when produced in the form of a narrow ribbon and wound around the copper core of a submarine cable, would increase the speed of the cable six times. The only trouble was that no one seemed able to find a flux that would weld the ends of the ribbon into a solid piece. One day a workman jokingly said: "Let's try salt." Picking up the shaker from his luncheon pail, he started to sprinkle the salt over the flux, when the cover fell off the shaker and the salt poured over the weld. This started a chemical action that united the edges, and the problem was solved. A scientist in France, while experimenting in his laboratory, inadvertently opened the wrong valve. Before he could rectify his mastake several drops of moisture settled in a glass tube that was part of the apparatus. His elation knew no bounds, for here at last was the end of the long search for liquid oxygen. Again an accident created an industry and gave us an explosive far safer and mightier than dynamite.—Floyd W. Parsons in the Saturday Evening Post.

Prophecy Fulfilled

There are several lakes or streams in different parts of the world with which are connected strange stories. One is Lake Chrissie, four miles from Ermelo, in the eastern Transvaal. When the Dutch emigrants from the Cape first settled in the Transvaal an old Kaffir medicine man predicted that some day the lake would become dry, and then the Boers would lose their independence. This prophecy was fulfilled when the Boers were subjugated by the British.

Famous Man Hid Fact of His Lowly Origin

Some curious things have come to light at the festivities of the unveiling of a memorial tablet to Henri de Blowitz, the famous London Times correspondent, Pierre Van Paassen says, in the Atlanta Constitution. The tablet was unveiled in his native village in Czechoslovakia. The schoolmaster of the village has been largely responsible for the whole affair. He showed guests a letter, written in French from Paris, in which De Blowitz seeks admission into the Roman Catholic church and expresses his desire to give a gift to the poor local church. The famous man, whose real name was Opper and who came from Blovice, however, writes in his autobiography that he was a Catholic from infancy. He also starts his book with a reference to the chateau of Blovice, whereas the tablet was affixed to a little house in the square. His father was no lord of the manor, but a Jewish shopkeeper who at the same time acted as caretaker of the local synagogue. The boy, Opper, was inscribed at the village school, as the present master showed, where he won a prize in 1834 for his proficiency in reading the Czech language.

Traded Shirt for Pearl

A white undershirt occupies a higher position in the eyes of natives inhabiting Penrhyn island, which is near Christmas island, far out in the Pacific, than does white man's money, according to Medford R. Kellum, who recently completed a two-year cruise of the South seas. Arriving at Penrhyn island, Kellum offered a native several thousand dollars for a gorgeous "pipi" pearl. The native refused to consider selling his gem for mere paper, but accepted Kellum's white undershirt in trade and regarded his new acquisition as being well worth its cost to him.

Electricity Runs Plows

Plowing by electric power is being tried out in Italy. The plow is anchored on opposite sides of the field. The cost of equipment and operation is high, and the method is successful only in large and level fields that are free from stumps and other obstacles. DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

VIRGIL COOK HAS THE HIGH HERD IN NO. 3

FRED KOTHENBEUTAL SCORES HIGH FOR SECOND PLACE

Lewis Neiderfrank, Tester, Issues Report For Hancock No.-3 C. T. A.

(By L. Neiderfrank)

The Hancock No. 3 Cow Testing Association was first organized on April 1, 1925. In March, 1927, the association reorganized for another year. The following officers and directors were elected:-

John Bock, President,
Will Haberkamp, Vice-President,
E. G. Beier, Sec.-Treasurer,
Virgil Cook, R. W. Elder, M. W. Sprole, Directors,
Lewis Neidenfrang, Tester.

Following is the report for the year 26-27.

In presenting this report for the second year's work of the association we feel that the year has been a very successful one for us. No high records have been made but we have not worked with that end in view. Rather, we have striven to raise the general average of production and at the same time try to keep the feed cost as low as possible. To cull out the poor cows and study the problems of feeding and management which may mean success or failure to the dairy farmer. This we believe to be the real purpose of C. T. A. work. The benefits of cow testing association work do not all come in one year, it is the members who stay in the association year after year who really get the benefit. The herd will vary from time and by constantly checking up on our cows are we able to feed for more economical production.

405 cows were tested during the year ending April 1. 36 of these cows were culled out as unprofitable and sold for beef. 29 cows were sold for dairy purposes. 4 cows died during the year.

Yearly Averages:

Milk, lbs.	77,053
Fat, lbs.	292.56
Value of Product	$145.68
Cost of Roughage	30.25
Cost of Grain	30.02
Total Cost of Feed	60.25
Income above feed cost	85.43
Feed cost per pound of butterfat	20.58 cts

The average Iowa dairy cow produces 133 pounds of butterfat per year. The average cow of this association produces 159 pounds of butterfat more than the average Iowa cow.

Comparisons:

Cows producing over 500 pounds butterfat, 4.

Cows producing over 400 pounds butterfat and under 500 pounds, 21.

Cows producing over 300 pounds and under 400 pounds, 58.

Ten high and ten low cows were compared as follows:

Ten high: Average milk, 13,636 Average Fat, 524.43; Average Value of Product, 260.63; Average feed cost, 99.63; Average value of product above feed cost, $161.00.

Ten low: Average milk, 4,164; Average Fat, 144.21; Average value of product, 69.85; Average feed cost, 37 85; Average value of product above feed cost, $129.00.

Difference: Average milk, 9,472; Average fat, 386.22; Average value of product, 190.78; Average feed cost, 61.78; Average value of product above feed cost, 129.00.

Study these records. The feed cost for the ten high cows was 44.9 percent higher than the ten low cows but they produced 59.9 percent more profit.

Does it pay the merchant to keep books or the banker to keep account of the money he loans? Do you know of any business that amounts to anything and does not keep some kind of an accounting system? Dairying is a business and an important one.

High Herds

The herds as a whole show an increase in production and profit over last year.

The highest average for hers was made by the grade Holstein herd of Virgil Cook of Goodell. This herd of 15 pure bred Holsteins and grade Holsteins averaged 13,564 pounds milk and 476.1 pound of butterfat per cow. What this herd has done any other herd can do by the proper feeding and management. Why limit the profit by feeding low produces.

Herds Over 300 Pounds Fat

Virgil Cook, Goodell, P. B. and G. Holsteins. Average milk, 13,564 lbs. milk and 476.01 lbs. fat.

Fred Kothenbeutal, Ventura, G. Guernsyes Average milk, 8,300 lbs. Average fat, 397.81 lbs.

Victor Hueneman, Garner. P. B. Holsteins. Average milk 9,990 lbs., average fat 345 lbs.

E. G. Beier, Garner, pure bred Holsteins. Average milk, 10,206 lbs. Average fat 339.32 lbs.

Chas. Haes, Garner, pure bred and grade Holsteins. Average milk, 9,425.4 lbs. Average fat 324.63 lbs.

L. F. Weaver, Garner, pure bred and grade Holsteins. Average milk, 9,020 lbs Average tat 324.61 lbs.

Elmer Haes, Garner, pure bred and grade Holsteins Average milk 8,175 lbs. Average fat 303.73 lbs.

John Bock, Klemme, pure bred and grade Holsteins. Average milk, 8,063 lbs. Averagee fat 300.58 lbs.

The Dairy Queen

The high cow in the association is the grade Holstein cow "Granny." She is owned by Virgil Cook. Her record for the testing year is 18,638 pounds of milk and 711.1 pounds of butterfat This cow is seven years old and she is large and of good type. A balanced ration consisting of silage. soybean hay, corn cob meal, ground oats, linseed and cottonseed meal was fed Why not keep all good cows? It does not cost any more to maintain this cow than it does a $140 cow. This cow made a profit above feed cost amounting to $244.00.

Owners of the five high cows

Owners Of The Five High Cows

V. A. Cook, "Granny," G. Holstein 18,636 lbs. milk, 711.1 lbs. fat.

V. A. Cook, "Beauty," G. Holstein, 17,863 lbs. milk, 586.5 lbs. fat.

Fred Kothenbeutal, "White Chin" G. Guernsey, 11,841 lbs. milk, and 585.1 lbs. fat.

V. Hueneman, "Ragapple," P. B. Holstein, 15,128 lbs. milk, 511.2 lbs. fat.

V. A. Cook, "Lady Grace," Grade Holstein, 17,863 lbs. milk, 486.6 lbs. fat.

These high cows were not pampered but fed for the most economical production.

What Members Have Said Of The Association

1. I don't care if I don't have high herd but I do want to know my feed cost per pound of butterfat.
2. How can anyone feed dairy cows efficiently if he does not know what they produce? I could not afford not to have my cows checked up every month.
3. I sold what I thought was my best cow because she was losing money.
4. You cannot tell how much a cow will produce in a year by her appearance.
5. You cannot afford to cull out a cow until you give her a chance.
6. My separator lost me in the two months before I tested, enough to pay the tester for the entire year.
7. One or even two years testing is just a good start.

Why Dairymen Join An Association

1. To have books kept on their dairy cows.
2. To know their cows and their individual production so they can:
   a. Cull unprofitable producers.
   b. Choose breeding stock.
   c. Feed intelligently.
3. To increase the value of surplus stock by records.
4. To be in with the best dairymen of the community.

John Bock has high herd in the association for May. His Holstein herd of 12 cows averaged 1139 lbs. milk and 42.05 lbs. fat. V. A. Cook was second with 13 cows in milk and one dry. This herd averaged 1156 lbs. milk and 40.52 lbs. fat.

The following herds averaged over 30 lbs. fat: R. W. Elder, Klemme; E. G. Beier, Garner; E. J. Blumer, Garner; Ben Goll, Garner; Chas. Haes, Garner; Chas. Hyde, Klemme.

RACING HORSES WANTED FOR FOURTH OF JULY

Those having horses they wish to enter in the county races at Britt on July 4th will kindly see L. T. Nutty, Secretary, Britt, Iowa. 1tc

WILL ATTEND CAMP AT OKOBOJI IN JULY

HIGHER EDUCATION WILL BE DISCUSSED AT LEAGUE

Arrangements Now Being Made To Spend Week At Okoboji

Why go to college, where go to college, and how to finance it are to be discussed Sunday night in Epworth League at the Methodist Church. Representatives from four Iowa institutions of higher learning will have charge of the program. They are:

Frank Gibbs, Morningside College, Sioux City.
Fred Arnold, Iowa State College, Ames.
Wayne Lemke, University of Iowa Iowa City.
Elvira Stille, State Teachers College, Cedar Falls.

These people will tell the advantages of their particular schools and show why they are attending.

Six have now signed up to attend the Institute at Lake Okoboji July 11-18. They are: William Gauger, Harvey Nelson, Asa Arnold, Orvis Poort, Earl Josten, and Harold Peterson. There is still room for a few more. The party will be accompanied by the Gaugers.

The first thing on the activities calendar however, is the convention to be held at Clear Lake June 22 and 23. It is reported that three cars are going, at the present writing. Entertainment, lodging and breakfast will be provided free.

The first social of the summer was held at the home of Harvey Nelson on Friday evening. Thirty-five enthusiastic young people made the countryside ring with their shouts and laughter. Miss Elvira Stille was in general charge, and Miss Gladys Wilson and William Gauger assisted. The next social will be held early in July, the plan being to hold one every three weeks.

All members must pay their dues (25c) by Sunday night, for they must be sent in to the District Office. Orvis Poort is treasurer.

Beginning with a week from Sunday evening a series of open-air meetings will be held. Elvira Stille the fourth vice-president, will lead the first, June 26, and it will be held in the city park. The topic is "Outdoor Recreation."

Dr. Missman was at Hampton on business Tuesday.

THREE CARS JAM ON C. L. ROAD THURS.

PAUL GRANGE'S CAR WRECKED IN ACCIDENT THURSDAY

Severe Rainstorm Cause Of Smash-up On Clear Lake Paving

Two cars were wrecked and another badly damaged on the paving between Clear Lake and Mason City ast Thursday afternoon at about 6 o'clock during the heaviest part of a rainstorm which made driving on he pavement dangerous.

The accident happened when Mrs. Paul Grange, of Klemme, driving a Buick sedan westward was suddenly confronted by a car stopping in front of her and swinging her car onto the paving to avoid hitting the car ahead she crashed into a car driven by Mr. Pedelty of Mason City coming from the opposite direction and who likewise could not avoid striking the Grange car.

The accident was caused, according to Mason City officers who were called to the scene, by a parked car whose driver is unknown, since he left the scene immediately after the accident. L. G. McNight, of Mason City had stopped behind the parked car to allow the Pedelty car to pass and was struck slightly by Mrs. Grange's car when she put on the brakes and skidded to the other side of the pavement where it collided with the Pedelty car.

Accompanying Mrs. Grange was her son, Dorance, her father-in-law, S. S. Grange and Miss Leona Lau. The occupants of the Grange car were cut and bruised some but not seriously. Mr. Pedelty turned over in his car and was unconscious when taken out but soon recovered and was only shaken up.

The accident on the part of the Klemme people was unavoidable and blame is laid to the driver of the unknown car who stopped on the pavement during the heavy rain and did not pull on far enough to allow other cars to safely pass.

Both the Grange and Pedelty cars are badly damaged.

Mrs. Amanda Kirkwood left last Tuesday on her trip to the East. Her son, Will, took her to Mason City where she will visit a short time with her daughter, Mrs. A. F. Hubbard and family and from there will go to Utica, N. Y. for a visit of several months with a sister and other relatives.

Father's Day

Sunday is Father's Day. No blare of trumpets will sound, no fireworks will be discharged, no bands of music will sound their strains. No wreaths will be laid upon monuments. Just a brief pause of thought in honor of the men who head the families, the husbands and fathers.

Why especially note Father's Day. Probably because everybody else is commemorated and it is only just to devote a certain day to the wage earner, the bread-winner. Father is entitled to his one day in the year when the thoughts of people are turned to the question of parental responsibility.

Every day should be Father's Day—and Mother's Day. Every person who lives, young or old, should reverence, if only in prayer and memory, the parents. The only commandment in the Bible with a distinct and definite promise is "honor thy father and thy mother."

Father's Day this year should remind us of a most sacred love, and reconsecrate our hearts to the old homestead, and to the old hearthstone, and to the memories that are most treasured.

LARGE FERRIS WHEEL BEING BUILT AT BAYSIDE PARK

A New Kiddie Acroplane Installed For The Season

A brand new 45-foot ferris wheel is being installed at Bayside Amusement Park, Clear Lake, this week and will be ready for Sunday visitors. A new kiddie aeroplane is also being erected for the season. On next Sunday afternoon and night band concerts and vaudeville will entertain Park visitors in addition to the many amusement concessions. Gallagher's O-P team of Mason City will play Dows, with Vetter pitching, at the Bayside ball park at three o'clock. Vetter is a great pitcher. Dows has a fast team and baseball fans may expect an interesting game. The Bayside diamond has been put in fine shape, the grandstand has been rebuilt and now Bayside has one of the finest ball parks in the state. Dances are held every Tuesday night at Bayside and on Thursday and Saturday nights at the White Pier. The picnic grounds, tables and children's playgrounds are free to everybody. Bayside will celebrate July 4th. Races, free attractions, ball game, fireworks, dancing, band concerts and all the concessions will help to make it a day of real enjoyment for all.

ANOTHER MAY BE ADDED TO "VANISHING AMERICAN" LIST

Special Feature By Elmo Scott Watson In This Issue Of The Times

Martha's Vineyard, an island off the coast of Massachusetts, is seeing the last stand of a race of 'Vanishing Americans." Here a little band of game birds, the survivors of the countless thousands which once were found everywhere along the Atlantic coast, have found a refuge from the relentless march of modern civilization, and sportsmen's organizations, and state officials are trying to save them from extinction. Unless they succeed, the heath hen will suffer the fate which overtook the passenger pigeon and which once threatened the buffalo, the elk and the pronghorn antelope.

It's a dramatic story, this tale of how these native Americans have been ruthlessly slaughtered until now there are only a comparatively few survivors. Be sure to read the illustrated feature article "Vanishing Americans," by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Times and found on page three.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Last Sunday was Children's Day and Education Sunday. These are associated in the interest of higher and Christian education. Mr. Earl Josten gave a fine address at the morning service in Klemme in the interest of Christian education. It was well received. We are glad to have a former man of this community with us and to take part in the service, the Rev. Charles Winters who is now pastor of the U. B. Church at Wayland, Iowa.

Liberty rendered a very interesting miscellaneous program. All had worked hard to do their part. The flowers were many and beautiful and all seemed to co-operate to make the day a joyous one.

The program in Klemme which was rendered in the evening was in the form of a pageant and carried out the thought of higher education in a splendid way. It required much work to make such a program possible and the committee is to be commended on their success. Good collections were received at both places for educational purposes.

It has been customary to have a memorial service on the afternoon of Children's Day when the graves of deceased pastors and pastor's wives were decorated some of the flowers being used for this purpose. In Liberty the graves of Rev. Heifner and companion were decorated. In Klemme this service has been postponed until June 26 when an appropriate service will be held.

We are planning our services regular for next Sunday and a glad welcome awaits all and especially the stranger within our gates.

Jake Bachman, of Goodell, was in Klemme Sunday visiting.

KLEMME BALL TEAM WINS SECOND GAME

KLEMME B. B. TEAM WON GAME FROM GOODELL HERE

Will Play A Return Game There On Next Sunday

Klemme won the second game of the season here Sunday when the local team defeated Goodell by a score of 5 to 4. The first game of the season was lost to Coulter a week ago Sunday by a score of 6 to 3. There has been a change in the lineup and the baseball machine seemed to work much better with Goodell than with Coulter, although the team was minus one of the pitchers, V. Turgasen, who had gone to Des Moines.

Next Sunday, June 19 Klemme will play a return game at Goodell on their new diamond and on the following Thursday, June 23, Klemme will again meet Coulter there on their annual Creamery Day.

Manager Levi Ridder has this to say regarding the charge made to see the games, "A number of spectators at our games do not wish to pay the small price we have been charging. In our opinion a game not worth paying for is not worth wasting time about."

"Our visiting teams expect 60 per cent if they win, and 40 percent if they lose and most times when a game is booked they insist on a guarantee, which we cannot give, unless the club pays for the amusement these people who do not pay are getting. We would like to see everybody fair at our next home game."

FOUR FROM COUNTY IN AMES GRADUATING CLASS

710 Have Been Graduated From Ames This Past Year

Ames, Iowa, June 16—Special—Hancock County is listed as the home of four of the men and women who graduated from Iowa State College at its fifty-sixth annual commencement here Monday evening. Degrees and certificates were given to 459 members of the spring graduating class, which make a total for the year of 710.

Of the degrees granted this spring 376 are for the completion of the four-year course, 60 are master's degrees, 8 are professional degrees and 6 are doctor of philosophy degrees. During the year 146 students have been given advanced degrees at Iowa State.

The agricultural division leads all other divisions of the college in the number of students graduated during the year, with 164 degrees. Engineering comes next with 146, home economics 143, industrial science 72 and veterinary medicine 24. Fifteen students during the past year have been rewarded with certificates for completion of two-year courses.

Graduates from this county are:

Carl R. Sandberg, Electrical Engineering, Goodell.

Margaret Carr, Home Economics, Garner.

Lincoln A. Stueland, Veterinary Medicine, Kanawha.

Clifford S. Schaper, Animal Husbandry, Britt.

Cling to Custom of Carrying Off Mates

A curious marriage custom persists in Abchasia, a district of the Caucasus. On the wedding day the bride withdraws to the darkest room of the house. At dusk the bridegroom, supported by a bodyguard of friends, all fully armed, rides up to the house, dismounts, and hammers on the door with a dagger hilt.

The door opens to reveal the bride's male relatives, just as ferociously equipped, and the two parties promptly join in a mock combat.

Eventually the defenders retire, the bridegroom rushes in, seizes his bride, flings her across his shoulder, and, carrying her out, leaps on his horse and gallops off with his capture to the accompaniment of the victorious yells of his supporters.

Shortly after, the defeated relatives of the bride mount their horses and give chase. When the bridegroom's house is reached both sides join in a contest to see who can drink most wine!

Abchasian girls decline to give up the rite, and few would accept any suitor who did not intend to carry them off by force.

Sleet and Hail

Sleet is a drizzling or driving, partly frozen rain, or rain that freezes on the trees and ground. Hail falls usually in connection with thunderstorms. It is frozen rain, falling in pellets or hailstones of varying sizes and shapes.

Pictures to Match Room

Pictures may or may not be hung on the walls, but ones which harmonize in color and theme really belong in the bedroom as well as in any other. The latest tendency in hanging these pictures is to hang them low enough to be seen without the discomfort of looking up. If the room is large enough a desk like the remainder of the suite, usually a spinet desk which is not too heavy, may be added, with excellent effect.—Buffalo Courier and Express.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Flight of Chamberlin and Levine to Germany—"Lindy" Comes Home.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

TRAVELING considerably farther than did Lindbergh, but in no way dimming the glory of that young man's achievement, Clarence D. Chamberlin, pilot, and Charles A. Levine, his financial backer, flew in the Bellanca monoplane, Columbia, from New York to Eisleben, Germany, a distance of about 3,905 miles. Their destination was Berlin, but they wandered in a fog and ran out of fuel and were compelled to land at the old town where Martin Luther was born and died. They obtained a little gasoline there and again started for the German capital, but fog again hampered them and they descended to a swampy meadow at the village of Klingen, near Kottbus, breaking the propeller. Repairs were made with the assistance of the Germans and next day the two Americans flew to the Tempelhofer aviation field at Berlin.

Germany, especially Berlin, was wild with joy over the arrival of the Columbia, and the reception accorded the aviators was no less enthusiastic than that given Lindbergh in Paris. President von Hindenburg and everyone else all the way down the scale showered attentions and honors on them, and they were the guests of Ambassador Schurman during their stay. Von Hindenburg and President Coolidge exchanged cable messages of congratulation and good will, and Berlin even renamed one of its streets "Columbia." In this respect the little town of Kottbus, however, had the jump on the capital, for in its glee over the landing of the plane there its officials named a thoroughfare for Chamberlin.

Levine's part in the exploit was a complete surprise, even to his wife. At the last minute he stepped aboard the plane in his ordinary clothing and away they went on the long flight. Their earth inductor compass did not function well, and they made their way across the Atlantic largely by guess and by observing the drift of icebergs. Toward the end of the flight they ran into much rough weather and fog. Chamberlin and Levine said they intended to fly to various European cities, including Vienna; but as soon as the news of their safe arrival was received their wives started across to join them, and this admittedly complicated their plans. Whether or not they will fly back to America is undecided.

COMING home to receive the plaudits of his fellow Americans, Charles Lindbergh was a passenger on the cruiser Memphis, which was met 100 miles at sea by a squadron of destroyers. As the Memphis entered the Potomac river from Chesapeake bay Saturday morning, she was met by the giant dirigible Los Angeles and more than a hundred airplanes of all types—the greatest assemblage of aircraft ever assembled on the Atlantic coast. With this magnificent escort the cruiser moved on up to the Washington navy yard, where Lindbergh went ashore. The first to greet him was his mother, Mrs. Evangeline Lindbergh, who had gone to Washington as the guest of the President. Then a special guard of honor, composed of all the aces of the American air service and others who have achieved distinction in flying, formed around the hero of the day. High service officers, public officials, all sorts of committees and other delegations fell in line and the triumphal trip began around the capitol and up Pennsylvania avenue to the Washington monument grounds. There, on a special platform, were President Coolidge, the cabinet, the Supreme court justices and other notables, and all around them a wildly cheering throng as large as the grounds would accommodate—perhaps 150,000.

Wearing his characteristic bashful smile, Lindbergh was escorted to the platform and presented to President Coolidge, who with a few fitting words pinned on his breast the new Distinguished Flying Service cross. The aviator and his mother were then driven to the temporary White House, and for the following day and a half were banqueted and feted and interviewed and photographed without respite. Before his arrival in Washington Lindbergh was promoted to colonel in the Missouri National Guard flying service and was awarded the Langley medal by the Smithsonian Institution and the Hubbard medal by the National Geographic society. By radio on shipboard and from committees that journeyed to Washington he received innumerable invitations to visit cities and persons that wanted to entertain him. It was certain that he would visit New York, which had arranged a great reception for him, and Chicago hoped to have him as its guest during a military tournament June 24, 25 and 26. St. Louis of course will entertain him for that is his residence, and Little Falls, Minn., his "home town," expects a visit.

M. VOIKOFF, Russian minister to Poland, was assassinated in the Warsaw railway station by a young Russian student, and alarmists see in the event and its consequences the possibility of another European war. Maxim Litvinoff, soviet assistant commissar of foreign affairs, immediately dispatched a note to Warsaw demanding that the Polish government take responsibility for the murder and that Russian officials be permitted to take a part in an investigation of "the plot which led up to the murder." The assassination, he said, was "part of the whole sequence of acts intended to disrupt soviet Russia's diplomatic missions abroad," and he linked it up with the raid on the soviet embassy in Peking, the raid in London and Great Britain's severance of relations with Russia.

The Poles made all sorts of official apologies for the murder and delayed their reply to the note in the hope of finding some form that would conciliate Russia without hurting Poland's dignity. It was felt that compliance with Russia's demand for participation in the inquiry would be most difficult. The similar murder at Sarajevo in June, 1914, which led to the World war, naturally, was in all minds. However, Polish government circles regarded the tragedy as an internal Russian affair, saying that although it happened on Polish territory, Poland had no moral responsibility for it. As usual in such cases, the soviet authorities in Moscow staged a big popular demonstration against the Polish legation and ostentatiously protected it with troops.

PREMIER POINCARE of France told the chamber of deputies he hoped to get better debt settlement terms from the United States and that he intended to try, particularly as he realized that the French parliament would not ratify the accords with America and Great Britain in their present form. The premier said that was why he had made the "provisional" payments on the debt account—so as to keep free to renew the negotiations. His declaration came after he had remarked that "the French parliament does not seem to wish to ratify" the accords.

MAYOR THOMPSON of Chicago and the members of the executive committee of the recent flood control conference went to Washington and laid before President Coolidge the recommendations for legislation adopted by that gathering. The President has been urged by several national leaders to call congress in special session at least six weeks before the regular December assembly in order that the flood control and farm relief problems may be disposed of, and possibly revenue legislation framed, thus relieving the program of the regular session.

COMPLICATED and obscure political negotiations are going on in China that may result in at least temporary peace. Any way, the prospect is that there will be no fighting in Peking and that the foreign legations will not have to move out. Chang Tso-lin's armies having been driven by the Cantonese out of all the territory south of the province in which Peking is located, the Manchurian marshal is apparently making a deal with the opposing generals which will be followed by reorganization of the government through a people's conference. Chang is said to have stipulated that all the factions shall war on communism.

Meanwhile the troops of the foreign powers were gathering in Tientsin and that city looked like an armed camp. The reiteration was made that the forces will be solely for the defense of life and property, which assurance is accepted by the better class of Chinese. There is no intention immediately to reinforce the legation guards. The Peking foreign office, however, filed with Minister Murray a protest against the augmentation of the American forces at Tientsin, contending that under the Boxer protocol this country was entitled to maintain only such forces as were actually needed to keep open communications between Peking and the sea.

CHICAGO, having obtained from the legislature and the voters authority to raise funds for the erection of an adequate building for great public meetings, has become definitely a contender for the Republican national convention of 1928. Allen F. Moore, Republican national committeeman from Illinois, went down to Washington to find out whether President Coolidge would be willing to have the convention given to Chicago. He said the Chief Executive's attitude was sufficiently encouraging to warrant the city going after the prize. According to Washington correspondents, Mr. Moore was closeted with the President long enough to find out whether Mr. Coolidge is going to be a candidate for another term, where he would prefer to be nominated, what Democrat he would prefer for an opponent, how he proposes to placate the farmers, what stand he will take on prohibition, but he came away completely unenlightened on any of these subjects. All he learned was that Mr. Coolidge has no objection to the holding of the Republican national convention in Chicago.

WILLIAM G. McADOO, in a commencement day address at Tusculum college, Greenville, Tenn., declared the prohibition question presents a vital issue that responsible statesmanship cannot ignore, and challenged the political leaders of all parties to make known their stand on it. He uttered the warning that efforts to nullify the eighteenth amendment are part of a movement that menaces the foundations of popular government.

YEARS of litigation in which the government has sought to dissolve the International Harvester company and affiliated corporations as a combination in restraint of trade, ended when the United States Supreme court ruled that the Harvester company has neither restrained nor suppressed "a free, untrammeled, keen and effective competition" in farm machinery.

The opinion of the court, written by Justice Sanford, affirmed the decree of a federal district court dismissing the government's petition in July, 1923, for an order compelling the Harvester company to dispose of its business and assets to at least three separate and distinct corporations with wholly separate owners and stockholders.

DIPLOMATIC relations with Albania were broken by Jugo-Slavia and the entire legation staff departed from Tirana. The break was occasioned by the failure of the Albanian government to accept conditions set forth by Jugo-Slavia demanding the release of an attache of the Jugo-Slav legation in Tirana, who was recently arrested by the Albanian authorities on a charge of espionage. Albania appealed to the League of Nations to avert hostilities between the two countries.

DEATHS of the week included those of Dr. Joseph Schneider of Milwaukee, world-famed oculist; W. R. Stansbury, clerk of the United State Supreme court, and Robert C. Hilliard, veteran actor.

PETER TEACHES GOOD CITIZENSHIP

Temperance Lesson.

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 2:11-17; 4:1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT—Love worketh no ill to his neighbor.—Rom. 13:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Tells Us How to Behave.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Rules for Right Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes a Good Citizen.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Character of a Good Citizen.

In order to get an intelligent grasp of today's lesson, one must get a view of the entire epistle as to its purpose and method. The purpose was to establish all who were passing through suffering and testing (see ch. 1:7, 8:14, 4:12, 5:10-12).

The principles of Christian behavior set forth in the text of this lesson are of broader scope than citizenship. They embrace:

I. Behavior as Pilgrims and Sojourners (vv. 11, 12).

Christians are merely sojourners on the earth. They have not here their permanent home but are journeying through the earth on their way to the eternal home in the heavens. Our heavenly citizenship (Phil. 3:20) should constrain us to the maintenance of conduct consistent with our high calling.

1. Abstain from fleshly lusts (v. 11).

The term lusts includes the entire army of unclean forces springing from our carnal natures. They are enumerated in Gal. 5:19-21. These war against the soul. The Christian should not be under the sway of carnal passion.

2. Behavior as citizens (vv. 13-17).

While the Christian's true citizenship is in heaven he has a responsibility as a citizen on the earth.

1. Obey all requirements of civil rulers (v. 13).

Fidelity to Christ is shown by loyalty to civil authority. The intelligent Christian recognizes the necessity of government and graciously submits to those in authority over him regardless of the form of government. His duties as a citizen he performs as the Lord's free man—not through servile fear. Government even of a low order is better than anarchy.

2. Honor all men (v. 17).

He will see in every man the image of God and therefore give honor to him. This applies to all relations wherein we touch human life.

3. Love the brotherhood (v. 17).

The Christian has a peculiar love for those who are of the same household. The brotherhood is composed of those who are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ.

4. Fear God (v. 17).

5. Honor the King (v. 17).

This has a peculiar significance because in all probability the wicked Nero was then reigning as emperor.

II. Behavior in a World of Opposition (I Peter 4:1-5).

1. Armed for the conflict (v. 1).

Christians are engaged in a tremendous conflict with evil forces within and without. Satan and his angels are bent on the believer's defeat and destruction. The only way to keep from being overcome with his darts is to arm oneself with the mind of Christ.

2. The salutary effect of suffering (v. 1).

Suffering has a remedial effect upon God's children. The one who suffers with Christ as an example will have the consciousness that it is his identity with Christ that calls forth the opposition of the world.

3. God's will, the regulating force of his life (v. 2).

Not the lusts of the flesh, but the will of God is the directing force of his life.

4. The consciousness of a wasted life (v. 3).

Since the flesh has so long had sway over the life, God is entitled to the rest of the believer's energy. Looking back upon a wasted life in serving the lusts of the flesh will move one to give no more time to serving such a master.

5. The attitude of the world toward the one who separates himself from it (v. 4).

The world speaks evil of those who will not go its way. The world not only wonders at the life of the Christian who separates himself from its pleasures, but will heap upon him nicknames and reproach.

6. Account shall be given (v. 5).

The Christian should so live as to be able to render an account to God.

The Joy of Christ

O believer, the joy of Christ is within you; give it room, let it spring up within you like a well of living water, and you will rejoice in the Lord always, and again rejoice.—G. H. C. McGregor.

Praising God

When you find that a man has got to praising God it is a good sign. Oh, let us get to personal love, to personal praise! That is what is wanted in the church today.—D. L. Moody.

HELP FOR SICK WOMEN

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Restored the Health of Thousands

Brooklyn, New York.—Mrs. G. Hegmann of 228 Schaeffer St., was in a run-down condition and could not do her housework. She could not sleep at night. Her story is not an unusual one. Thousands of women find themselves in a similar condition at some time in their lives. "I found your advertisement in my letter box," wrote Mrs. Hegmann, "and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got relief." Mrs. Hegmann also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine and Lydia E. Pinkham's Pills for Constipation, with good results. She says, "I am recommending your medicines to all I know who have symptoms the same as mine, and to others whom I think it will help. You may use my statement as a testimonial, and I will answer any letters sent to me by women who would like information regarding your medicines."

There are women in your state—perhaps in your town—who have written letters similar to this one telling how much Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped them.

The Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass., will gladly furnish other women with these names upon request.

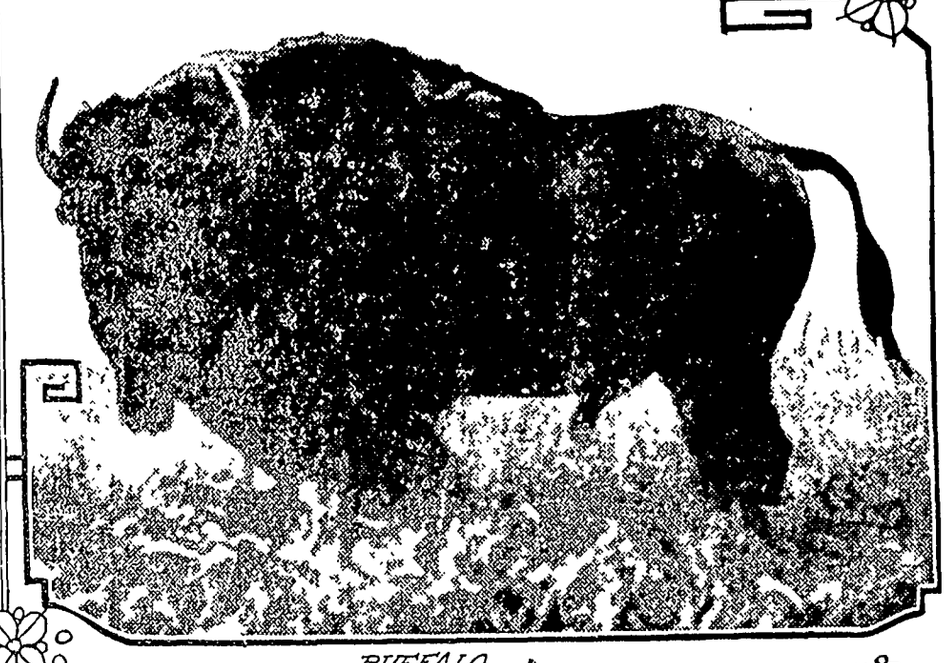
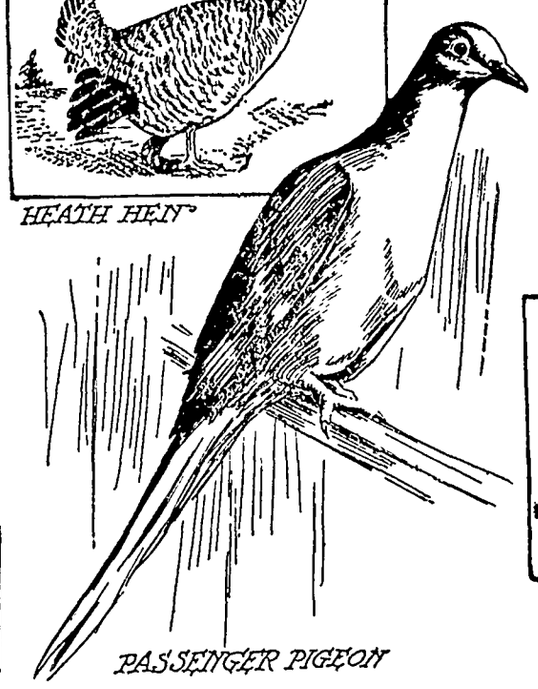
Vanishing Americans



END OF THE TRAIL

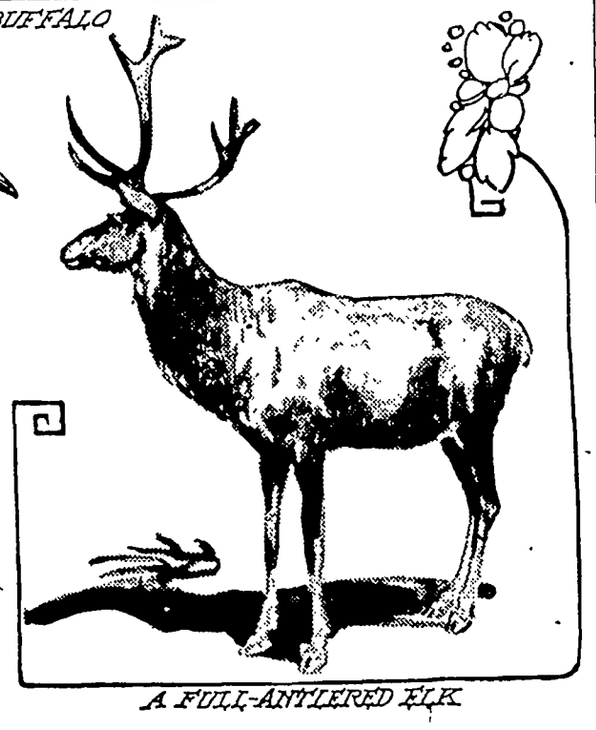
PRONG-HORN ANTELOPE

HEATH HEN



PASSENGER PIGEON

BUFFALO



A FULL-ANTLERED ELK

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ANOTHER native American has almost reached the end of the trail.

From Martha's Vineyard off the coast of Massachusetts comes word that the heath hen is facing the extinction that a few years ago overtook another American bird, the passenger pigeon. Despite all the orts that have been made to preserve the rapid-decreasing numbers of this species of grouse r the conservation of which more than $60,000 eady has been spent), the heath hen seems to doomed. Martha's Vineyard is the only place the world where it can be found and it is be-ved that there are now only about twenty speci-ns of the bird left on the island, a decrease of een from last year.

The story of the heath hen is a tragic but by means an unusual one in a country which has come notorious for its prodigality in wasting its tural resources. In many respects it is similar the story of the passenger pigeon whose num-rs were at one time so countless that no one lieved that they could ever be entirely killed So an appalling slaughter of the birds went for years until a passenger pigeon became a rity and before sportsmen and bird lovers alized it, it was too late to save the species m extinction. The last survivor died in the cinnati Zoological gardens in 1914. These birds, re so numerous that within the memory of usands of persons now living their flight liter-y "darkened the sky," were wiped out of exist-ce in a little more than two decades!

A hundred and fifty years ago the heath hen s one of the principal game birds of New Eng-d and the middle Atlantic states. It was dis-buted from Cape Ann to Virginia and it was ecially abundant in the lowlands of Massa-setts, Connecticut and Long island. When the ly settlers began to cut off the forests the cline of the heath hen started. Its straight swerving flight made it an easy target for the ter in the open, and it was shot and trapped all seasons. The spread of civilization and the reasing number of cats and dogs which killed young further decimated the heath hen until was practically extinct on the mainland and the left were on Martha's Vineyard. Apparently measures were taken for its protection until time, but on account of the scarcity of preda-y animals on the island, the strict fire patrol the legislative measures which were finally en to save the birds, the heath hen seemed to e a good chance to increase in numbers.

uch has not been the case, however. Twenty rs ago there were about fifteen hundred birds the island. By 1924 that number had shrunk to than fifty. Last year the census taken by f. Alfred Gross of Bowdoin college, one of foremost ornithologists in the country, showed t there were only thirty-five left, and now bird ers of New England are alarmed to learn that pitiful remnant apparently has been still ther reduced in spite of all the efforts that e been made to save them.

he heath hen closely resembles the western rie chicken. It is a light reddish brown above, ed with black and buff. At the sides of the there are tufts of black feathers, on each is an orange-colored sac and over each is a small orange-colored comb. Like the rie chicken it has the curious habit of "boom-early in the spring each year. This call is to be similar to the whistle of a distant tug-t in a fog. It heralds the mating season and is reliminary to and a part of what has been cribed as "the strangest sight ever seen in the woods"—the dance of the heath hens.

At daybreak the heath hens meet on certain dancing grounds, which they have apparently picked out in advance, and there they go through a series of antics which are as curious for human beings to watch as no doubt a charleston contest would be for the heath hen to watch. The birds run, jump, bow, toot and cackle in their unique pastime. Their short tails are cocked forward over their backs, the black neck feathers stand out stiffly at different angles until at last they point directly forward over the crested heads like the ears of a jack-rabbit Their breasts are puffed up and the air sacs are distended until the bird looks almost twice his natural size. They prance backward and forward, flapping their wings, and from their throats come a series of squeals, cackles, clucks, chuckles and laughing sounds. Often, two birds will run toward each other until they are almost beak to beak. Then they remain motionless for several minutes. Sometimes they fight, but for the most part, their time is spent in tooting and dancing. The morning dance usually lasts until the sun is high in the sky and then the birds scuttle back into the recesses of the 5,000 acres of scrub oak in the center of the island which they frequent. Sometimes they come out to repeat their dance again just after sunset.

If the efforts to save the heath hen are unsuccessful it will be a tragic recurrence of the fate which overtook the passenger pigeon, although the ruthless slaughter of these birds is a more shameful record to be laid at the door of Americans than will be their failure to save the heath hen. The destruction of the pigeons began within forty years after the first settlers came to New England, and for the next two hundred years the killing continued. Finally, in 1878 the birds, having been driven by persecution from many states, concentrated in a few localities in Michigan, and it was during the next two decades that the wholesale slaughter which wiped them out of existence took place. The last important nesting place of the passenger pigeon was near Petoskey, in Emmet county, Michigan. There, in 1881, an army of five thousand men gathered for civilization's attack on the defenceless birds which had come there to rear their young. The attack continued from March until August and during this period of twenty weeks it is estimated that one billion birds were killed and shipped from this and neighboring nesting places.

One morning America woke up to find that the passenger pigeon was virtually extinct. It became so rare that prizes were offered for the discovery of a single specimen. The last individual definitely recorded in a wild state was captured at Bar Harbor, Maine, in 1904. In various zoological gardens a few individuals were preserved. David Whittaker of Milwaukee, Wis., procured a pair of young birds from an Indian in that state in 1888, and during the next eight years these increased to fifteen. By 1908, however, only seven of this number had survived, and at last only one, a female, was left. This bird, known as "Martha," was sent to the Cincinnati zoo and there she became famous as the last of the race.

Since the death of "Martha" persons in various parts of the country have reported from time to time the discovery of passenger pigeons, but in every case it has turned out that the discoverer had seen some other member of the dove family which is easily confused with the passenger pigeon. And so despite the high rewards that are still standing for proof that the passenger pigeon is still in existence, a single authentic specimen is yet to be revealed. So the next time you see a newspaper story stating that one of these birds has been seen, just put it down that some amateur ornithologist has made another mistake. The passenger pigeon (Ectopistes migratorius) IS extinct.

Although the heath hen is the only bird which now seems definitely doomed to follow the passenger pigeon into the sunset, there are several other species which are in danger of extinction. One of these is a close relative of the heath hen, the prairie chicken. Only a few years ago the booming of these birds was still to be heard everywhere in the prairies of the Middle West and the eastern part of the Great Plains. In many places this sound is becoming rare, and even though the prairie chicken does not now seem to be in imminent danger of extinction certainly its numbers have been so greatly reduced that it can be called a Vanishing American.

Not only in the bird world, but in the animal world as well there are Vanishing Americans. There was a time when the buffalo was so numerous that, just as in the case of the passenger pigeon, Americans would have scoffed at the idea that this noble animal could ever be in danger of extinction. So long as the buffalo was killed only to supply the food needs of the Indian and the first white settlers on its ranges, there was no danger. Then the hide hunter came upon the scene. Again two decades saw another race of native Americans headed for oblivion. By the end of the eighties, the last wild herd of buffalo had been killed off and, of all the countless millions that once roamed the plains, only a few scattering herds in private game parks and public preserves were left. Fortunately public sentiment was aroused just in time and, due to the efforts of several conservation societies during the first part of the present century, the bison was saved. There are now enough of these animals in Canada and the United States to guarantee their preservation and in recent years they have actually increased to such an extent that there has been an overcrowding on the available space which mankind has grudgingly allotted to them.

The settling up of the last West and the increasing number of farms which replaced the open range of the cattle man's day have threatened the existence of two other species of animals—the wapiti or elk and the prong horn antelope. It must be said to the credit of Americans, however, who waited until it was almost too late before they set about to save the buffalo from annihilation, that they have taken a lesson from this experience and have taken the necessary steps to prevent the history of the elk and the prong-horn from being a repetition of that of the bison.

Perhaps it is not strictly accurate to include the buffalo, the elk and the antelope, the heath hen and the prairie chicken in the same category as the passenger pigeon, as has been done in this article. But the fact remains that they, like the Indian, are vanishing races. Of course, government authorities will tell you differently about the Indian and point to the fact that he is not only holding his own, but is actually increasing in numbers. That is true if you take into account the fact that many persons having more white blood than Indian in their veins are called Indians.

But in the truest sense of the word, the old-time Indian in all his former glory as a picturesque war-bonneted nomad and "first-class fightin' man" in the magnificent pageant of the American frontier is a Vanishing American. He belongs to the past, the past of the wilderness era, as do the buffalo, the elk, the antelope, the passenger pigeon, the heath hen and the prairie chicken. What if there still are enough individuals of each so that the conquering white man can point to them and say "See, they are not yet EXTINCT?" For they are following the Indian into the sunset, and James Fraser's "End of the Trail" is symbolical of them all. They ARE Vanishing Americans.

The End of the Trail

Far to the west the vanished herds they followed
And came at last unto the journey's end;
Naught have they found save bones where bisons wallowed,
Naught now is theirs—nor food, nor fire, nor friend.

Pony and man alike completely weary,
Even the rainbow hope at last long fled;
Sadly they face a darkness cold and dreary,
Broken, they seek the company of the dead.

YOURSELF and YOUR BODY

By WILFRED T. GRENFELL

BOYS DON'T LIKE TO BE TRICKED

Some Interesting Information About The Law of Life.

"He Is the Same Billy Exactly."

"Even Kings Must Move On."

"LET us draw pictures as we go along, shall we? The first thing that I want you to remember is that my body is mine, but it isn't I."

"Oh, father!"

"However, we cannot draw without something to draw with, can we?"

That wanted thinking about. Boys do not like to be tricked.

"No? Well, then you go and get something. This is my paper and my pencil, isn't it?"

"Righto!" in chorus this time.

"Well, you are sure they are not I?"

Popping eyes were the only response.

"Just before we begin, give me my hat, will you?

"Are you sure it is my hat? All right, it isn't I. Thanks. Put it on my head, will you? Sure it is my head? Well, then it isn't I."

"But, father, why?"

"Oh, you think my head is part of me. Do you remember when Billy had his leg cut off? Billy is still the same Billy, isn't he?"

"Rather."

"But he has only got one leg to perch on now, like a stork asleep. So you see he couldn't be the same Billy if his leg were really part of him, could he? He must be some one else. Do you think that he is John now? You just ask him!

"That's right. He only lost a leg. He is the same Billy. You lost that knife I gave you, but you are the same old scaramouche, whatever you lose, aren't you?

"Here is a story. A friend of mine, a dried-up, tough old Indian general, slipped off the platform at a station one day, and the train ran over him. It cut off both his arms and both his legs. People rushed him off to the nearest hospital. Some hours later he swore before a magistrate that he was still he. Every one, even the wise old judges, agreed that he was he, though he had lost the larger part of his house—or his machine with which he used to 'connect up' with what we call 'this world.' Of course his walking-machine parts were gone and his holding-on parts were gone. But he still had his talking parts, so he could swear all right that he was still he.

"Remember that our bodies are not we ourselves. Contrariwise! They are ours. We lose bits of them sometimes. We often spoil parts of them, and some people spoil the whole of them. That is terrible, isn't it? And that is why I say that you must never do anything to spoil your body. Make it the very best body you can. It is the most useful possession you will ever have, and it is all your own. Indeed, you cannot do without it. When it is all spoiled, you must go to some other world, where you may get another one. Let us pretend we are building a good one for somebody in this world now.

"Before we begin I ought to tell you that there are still lots of Hows and Whys that no one knows the answers to—yet."

"But can't we find them out, father?"

"I hate the word 'can't.' If we are really alive we shall, of course go on trying—that is the law of life. It is 'move on or die.' Nothing stands still in this world. Everything keeps in its place because it is moving, just as the earth itself, the moon, the stars, and the very sun itself, move."

"But the rocks stand still?"

"The rocks? Why, the tiniest atom of every rock is moving, as everything else is. Rock, like everything else on earth, is only made of little particles of electricity, called electrons, which dance around a center—and they are always changing their positions. Your own body, which you thought was you, and therefore was always the same, is really always moving on. Some of the little electrons in dancing about fly off and destroy the shape of other old particles, changing them so as to improve your body and to keep it always ready for you to use it as you grow. Most of this is done by what scientists call 'oxidation.' That is almost exactly the same thing as slowly burning up what is no longer any good. Isn't that strange? The body is always being burned up without our even knowing it; and what is more, there is a department called the head office, or brain, specially set aside to keep it burning at the right temperature. This is called the 'heat center.' Sometimes it gets out of order and we get too hot and burn too fast. That is called 'fever.' Then there is an awful lot of trouble, isn't there? You know all about it. Stay in bed, nothing but slops to eat, because you must put less fuel on. But sometimes our bodies get too cold, and grow pale and weak. Then we must 'stoke up' with eggs and milk and jellies and medicines.

"Yes, the law of life is that everything must keep moving on—as the policeman says to the traffic: 'keep moving.' Even kings have to move along and leave their thrones behind them. Everything everywhere must be busy trying to build up a better world, or sooner or later it will have its life taken away from it altogether. Death is stopping. All that is good has come along by moving. For instance, we had to see farther, so some one had to start moving and invent a telescope. We had to see smaller things, so some one thought out the microscope. We had to move faster, so some one found out about steam and railways, and gasoline and automobiles. We wanted to see through solid things, so the X-ray came along. We had to talk farther, so some one moved on and found out the telephone and the wireless. Moving on, moving on, moving on—is the Law of Life."

Forest Has Reclaimed Site of Ancient City

In the northwest of Asia Minor, on the shore of the Aegean sea, separating it from modern Greece and Turkey, a few miles south of Troy, most famous city of classical antiquity, is a village, known as Eski-Stamboul. Behind it is a mighty forest of the oaks of that country, and he who explores its leafy shades frequently stumbles over blocks and pillars of stone or remains of old foundations.

Those ruins, covered by growths of centuries of forest trees, are all that remain of a once famous city, so fine, and so admirably situated as to induce Julius Caesar, some 50 years before Christ, and afterward Constantine, the first Christian emperor (274-337 A. D.), to suggest making it, instead of Rome, the capital of the world-wide Roman empire.

Old Fogy Bankers

I have often said that if your banker is not an old fogy, you should look up one who is. There have lately been a great number of failures among bankers. Not one of them was an old fogy; everyone disgraced and ruined was too much of a good fellow with his deposits.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Dollars in your Cream Tanks

In order to get every dollar that is possible from your cream, there are a few important things to consider. First: it is absolutely essential to use clean pails, cans and separator. Second: in order to insure good cream it must be kept sweet, and to best secure this desirable quality it should be cooled quickly. Third: keep it free of all foreign odors in order to give it flavor; barn odors, careless milking must be avoided keep cream from becoming tainted.

Cooling Tanks provide about the best known method to keep cream cool and free from odors and insure sweetness during the warm summer days which are now here.

Quality in butter is the thing that secures the top price for the product and stimulates quality prices. Try to keep up the fine quality of cream you have been delivering to us in the past and we can guarantee you extra prices as we are thus enabled to manuacture quality butter which sells for a premium on the eastern market.

CREAM COOLING TANKS

We have a number of Cooling Tanks for sale at the Creamery. These are of the approved type and are the most reasonable in price we have ever seen.

ONLY FITTEST CAN SURVIVE IN WILD

Existence Passed in Constant Warfare.

All nature seems to be a battle ground. The creatures that rove the woods, fly in the air, swim in the sea and streams, creep, or crawl, all seem to spend their lives in fear of something bigger and stronger gobbling them up.

To live they must keep their wits about them and safety depends on wariness. Even the largest creatures, writes Oliver G. Pike, F. Z. S., in London Tit-Bits, have enemies, while most, if not all, have learned to look upon man as the creature to be most avoided. Young animals have so much to learn, and such a short time in which to learn it, before their parents desert them and cast them adrift, that it is a wonder so many survive.

In a lifetime spent among wild creatures I have seen many narrow escapes, and I have known that when an animal does escape from an enemy, even if it is badly wounded, it will probably live longer than most of its companions, for with each encounter won the creature becomes more artful and will not run into that trap again.

I was once resting on the margin of a Highland loch, and before me numbers of gulls were circling over the water. The largest of these, a powerful great black-backed gull, dived to the water, and a moment or two later rose with something in his beak. My field-glasses showed this to be an eel about 18 inches in length. The bird had captured a prize, and one would have thought that such a strong bird would have made short work of it.

He was flying across the water, no doubt intending to land, but he had not gone far when I saw he was in difficulties. He fluttered frantically and seemed to be falling towards the water, when he did the only thing he could to save his life. He let go of the eel, and the latter dropped to the loch. When the eel found itself captured by an enemy much bigger than itself, it twisted tightly round the bird's neck, and if the latter had not released it he would have been strangled.

I have known a similar thing happen to a heron which often fished on a certain lake. In this case, too, the bird would have been killed, but it released the eel just in time. Now, the heron is not the kind of bird that would be caught again by this trick, yet an eel is food that he cannot very well resist, and a few days later this heron caught another.

This time he captured it across its middle and held it in a firm grip with his long neck well extended. For three or four minutes he stood in this position, as motionless as a statue. He did not want to be strangled again, and he did not want to lose his meal. What could he do?

Suddenly he tossed the creature into the air, caught it deftly, either by its head or tail—I am not sure which—and then began to swing it backwards and forwards like a driver cracking his whip! There was no hope for that eel. A minute later it was bruised and broken. The great bird worked it round in his beak until the head pointed down his throat, and with a few violent gulps it disappeared from view.

As a general thing, the more friends a man has the fewer he needs.

And then Grandma Danced

"WE were quite alarmed about mother. She wouldn't eat, was terribly constipated, bilious, and seemed to be fading fast. We thought it due entirely to her 86 years of age. But a neighbor brought over a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and it was really remarkable how she picked right up, and now she can even dance around with her grandchildren. Now we are never without Syrup Pepsin in the house." (Name and address furnished upon request.)

DR. CALDWELL AT AGE 83

Regulates Bowels of Old Folks

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so palatable, sets so well in the stomach, works so easily, so gently, so kindly with old folks as to accomplish its purpose without gripe, pain or other distress. For biliousness, sour stomach, coated tongue, constipation, and the lassitude, whether of children, parents or those in the evening of life, Syrup Pepsin is recommended everywhere. It is sold by all druggists.

For a free trial bottle send name and address to Pepsin Syrup Company, Monticello, Illinois.

Dr. Caldwell's SYRUP PEPSIN

Did Seem That Remark Was Rather Personal

The chief of police of Sharon, Pa., during a stray-dog campaign, called upon the superintendent of a big steel mill in the city to get permission to throw the dead dogs on the mill's slag pile, where subsequent accumulations would quickly cover them up.

The superintendent was out of town when the chief called first. His assistant, a timid and excitable person, declined to give the necessary permission, but promised to speak to his superior about it on his return the next day. This he did in his usual excited fashion. Running into the superintendent's office, he started to stammer:

"The chief of police, he's hunting up all the stray dogs in town, and he was lookin' for you yesterday—"

"Get out of here!" thundered the superintendent.—Los Angeles Times.

Takes Out all pain instantly

CORNS

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads stop all pain quicker than any other known method. Takes but a minute to quiet the worst corn. Healing starts at once. When the corn is gone it never comes back. If new shoes make the spot "touchy" again, a Zino-pad stops it instantly. That's because Zino-pads remove the cause—pressing and rubbing of shoes.

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are medicated, antiseptic, protective. At all druggist's and shoe dealer's—35c.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

Put one on—the pain is gone!

Russia's "Sunday College"

Russia's first "Sunday university" for peasants has just opened in the town of Gorky, in White Russia, writes the Moscow correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. The Sunday university is an established institution in the Russian cities and might be compared with university extension courses in America. Its purpose is to give broader education to wage earners who are unable to carry on their studies on week days. The peasant university will offer a two-year course of instruction and will specialize in agricultural subjects.

Sugar Be Praised

Dr. Woods Hutchinson finds health in the sugar bowl habit. Pitying our forefathers, he says they obtained their carbohydrates, not in granulated sweetness, but in cannon-ball dumplings, loaded with chunks of fat, spices and sour prunes, which they called plum pudding. Small wonder, he says, those dumpling-eating pioneers awoke with a head like a concertina, and a mouth like a lime kiln.

That Print-Shop Towel

A Hiawatha woman boasts having a towel that is over thirty-eight years old. "While we would not deprive her of her minute of joy," says Carl Brown in the Atchison Globe, "we must assure her that every print shop has a towel that is as old as the office—and printing was invented in the first half of the Fifteenth century."

Those who are annoyed by what is, have taken the first step to create something better.

A moment later and I had entered the house, never dreaming that across its threshold lay the first romantic adventure of my life. Yet so it was. One instant in the open air, thinking, somewhat morosely, that the world was filled with cruel and treacherous and generally unpleasant people, the next inside the entrance, to be greeted, in the cool, dim light, by the loveliest girl that I had ever seen. Even McAllister, at sight of her, displayed, for the first time, a trace of courtesy, explaining, with an air which for him was almost genial, "Helen, my nephew Robert. Robert, this is my adopted daughter. You two must be company for each other."

"Company for each other!" I could have asked no better fate. For I had known, up to the present, only our Straitsmouth lasses, healthy buxom girls, and many of them, indeed, good-looking in their way, but now—this vision of slender grace, clad all in white, dark-haired, dark-eyed, and with a face and form so utterly bewitching that I could have sworn she was not flesh and blood, but an angel descended from the skies.

Angel, I say; and that was truly my first impression, though later I was to change it, for though no angel could have been more lovely to the eye, yet her temper was more like that of some mischievous elf. For the first hour of our acquaintance, indeed, she played the kindly hostess to perfection, showing me to my room, a pleasant airy chamber at the top of the house, and so fascinating me that later, at luncheon, I could hardly keep my eyes from her face. But presently, as we became better acquainted, and as she perceived the conquest she had made, I was to discover, to my sorrow, that she had as many moods as an April day. That afternoon she took me on a tour of the island, and in that time she managed to exalt me to the mountain tops and then to plunge me into despair, first talking to me so gently and gazing at me so sweetly that I fancied she adored me, then, without warning, treating me coldly and with actual disdain, and then quarreling with me fiercely, wilfully distorting whatever I strove to say, and nearly driving me crazy in my attempts to regain her favor. So hopeless, indeed, was my infatuation that when it came time to retire, I could not sleep, and knowing that the huge door was locked and barred, I knotted a piece of rope, tied one end to my bedstead, and thus slipped to the ground and paced the sands in an actual fever, with her lovely image before my eyes.

In the morning, however, I remembered, though reluctantly enough, that life for me was not a romantic, rose-tinted dream, but a gray and sober reality; and that I had not come to the island to carry on a courtship, however delightful, but to gain what knowledge I could regarding McAllister and his household, his means of defense and his supposed horde of treasure.

It was evident that the house could not be easily taken, for the lower story, as I have said, was strongly built of stone, and the only entrance was a massive door, swinging on ponderous hinges, and always, after dark, carefully locked and barred.

The garrison, too, was equally impressive, consisting, as it did, of a dozen swarthy maroons, those fierce descendants of the slaves who had fled to the woods when English rule supplanted that of Spain upon the island. Chief among them were Cudjo, their leader, who kept the best of discipline, Caesar, his second in command, Big Bill, huge giant, six feet and a half in height, and Quamino, only an inch or two shorter than Bill. Altogether, it was clear enough that the taking of the island would be no easy task.

Of McAllister himself I saw surprisingly little, and this, for a number of reasons, suited me exactly. For one thing, I thoroughly disliked the man, and knew that he and I had absolutely nothing in common; for another, I had more time to be with Helen; and for a third I very much doubt, if I had been hard put to it by a flood of questions, whether I could have played my part as Robert McAllister. Naturally enough, he accepted my story as true, and it was easy enough to see, before I had been under his roof twenty-four hours, that he was the most thoroughly selfish, self-centered man imaginable. Andrew McAllister, for him, was the only person in the world; the rest of us, I honestly believe, were merely shadowy unrealities. It was evident that his invitation had not been for the benefit of the nephew, but of the uncle, and that the shrewd Captain Barclay had been right in surmising that it was the nephew's reputation as a marksman which had so endeared him to his uncle's heart.

Every day, indeed, McAllister had a drill with the maroons, in which I of course took part, and he was constantly calculating on how the island might be attacked, and on the way in which these attacks might best be met. Yet all the time McAllister took pains to convince me that there was no real danger of being attacked by anyone, and that he merely felt it was wise to be prepared. "For why," he demanded as we sat one evening over a glass of wine, "should anyone wish to harm me? I've done no wrong; I haven't an enemy in the world. Some people"—he lowered his voice, and with his right hand caressed his chin, a favorite gesture when more than usually disturbed—"some people think I'm a rich man. But I'm not—just a few pounds laid by for a rainy day."

You may imagine how all this disgusted me. If he had come straight out with the truth—hideous as it was—I might have half-endured the man, but this pretense of being all that he was not was too much for me to stand. And from his general talk of protection of the island he went on to speak of the slave trade, explaining artfully enough that while there was much about it that he disliked, still it was the only way in which the tropics could be made fertile, since white men could never stand the burning heat of the sun. And after more sophistical argument he came at length to the point, that he himself dealt directly with Africa, and that he was daily expecting the arrival of his bark, the Ashantee, with a cargo of ivory, gold dust and slaves. In fact, another vessel just arrived, a faster sailer in light airs, had reported passing the bark three days before, so that she might be expected at any time.

Meanwhile, as I quickly assumed my place in the routine of affairs on the island, my friendship with Helen progressed by leaps and bounds. She explained to me, on the second evening of my stay, the mystery of her presence upon the island. Twenty years ago, it seems, her father, Eustace Leigh, a young Englishman of birth and breeding, had come to Jamaica to seek his fortune, and had met, on landing, one of Kingston's reigning belles, a dark-eyed Castilian beauty of pure Spanish blood. There had followed a volcanic and passionate courtship, a true "affair of the heart" on either side, and within a month of their first meeting they were man and wife. Then came a year of purest happiness, and then, like darkness on unclouded skies, the shadow of death, and within a day or two of Helen's birth, Eustace Leigh had found himself, save for his infant daughter, once more alone, an inconsolable and heart-broken man.

Of her early life at Kingston she had pleasant though uneventful memories, for Eustace Leigh, after his wife 's death, had lost all interest in the companionship of his former friends. Some years afterward Leigh had entered the service of McAllister, and thus they had lived, on the whole happily enough, until a year ago. Meanwhile, as Helen had blossomed into womanhood, she had, of course, many admirers, among them a certain planter named Don Manuel, a petty tyrant and libertine, whom she had disliked from the first, and whose attentions she had sought to discourage in every possible way. But although his courtship had been a distinct annoyance, it had been no more than that until the tragic morning when Eustace Leigh had been found in a lonely by-way, stabbed to the heart. Thus left alone, Helen remembered that her father had told her, in any emergency, that she could turn to McAllister for aid.

To the island, therefore, she had come, and at first had been received, as she herself admitted, coldly enough. I could imagine the feelings of this selfish old miser, aghast at the prospect of having to protect a friendless orphan. But he had promised her that he would consider the matter, and then, to her surprise, had appeared a day or two later in Kingston, had dwelt, with a remarkable show of emotion, on his affection for her father, and had offered her not only a home on the island, but adoption as his daughter. Amazed, but only too thankful for this refuge, she had accepted with gratitude, and had lived, ever since, with McAllister.

To me, with my greater knowledge, the whole story made easy reading. To Helen, considered by herself, or to Helen, had she lacked her beauty, he would have paid no heed; but to Helen as she was, with all her youthful loveliness, the canny Scotchman was disposed to warm, seeing in her the attraction that might bring young Robert McAllister to Jamaica, not only to strengthen his island garrison, but to further I knew not what other plans besides.

Helen continued to treat me as she had done on the day of my arrival, teasing and afflicting me to her heart's content.

Two days had passed, without further news of McAllister's bark, but it was easy to see where his thoughts were bent, for though the next day was hot and sultry, so that even the breeze from the sea seemed to blow less refreshingly than usual, he rowed over, with two of his bodyguard, to the western bank of the river, and with telescope under his arm climbed to a hilltop, remained there until lunch time, and immediately after eating, instead of taking his customary siesta, returned to the hill again. Helen and I had strolled, as usual, to our trysting place, but although love, as they say, laughs at locksmiths, it could not make light of the unusual oppressiveness of the afternoon. I had never seen anything like it. Little as I knew of the weather in the Caribbean, I felt positive that we were on the very brink of a storm.

"Some People Think I'm a Rich Man. But I'm Not."

I had not, however, the faintest conception of what a tropical hurricane is like. Before many moments had passed, the sky was filled with driving clouds, a dark and rapidly advancing line on the water showed the coming of the wind, and from far out at sea we could hear a menacing roar which told of the frightful force of the impending storm. And then there broke upon us such a turmoil of rushing wind and raging sea as I had never imagined possible. I seized Helen's arm, and in the lee of a huge cottonwood we crouched, breathless, and the next instant, to my utter amazement, I found the dripping form of McAllister beside me. He was like a ma possessed, his face a dull red from h exertions, his rain-soaked clothin clinging to his meager form. He place his mouth close to my ear. "Quick! he shouted, "we've got to man the b boat. The Ashantee is off the bar. W must get to her somehow, or she'll founder and we'll lose every slave o board. Lively now! Bear a hand!"

No sooner had McAllister utter his words than he must have see their madness, and as a sturdy youn tree to our left suddenly came rushin to the ground, barely clearing us in it fall, we made our way, half volunta rily, half blown along like so many withered leaves, until we had gaine the protection of the house.

Here, for the next few hours, w were forced to stay. Never in my lif had I imagined such a storm as this But if I, with nothing but the lives o Helen and myself to think about, wa awed and terrified, imagine the feel ings of McAllister, the miser an money-lover, with the knowledge that somewhere in the storm and dark ness, the Ashantee was battling fo existence, laden with her precious spoils from the African coast. I have never seen a man suffer so; each new wild gust of wind, each boom of the huge breakers on the land seemed to pierce him to the heart. And when, about midnight, we could, for the first time, feel conscious of a diminution in the gale, he urged me to accompany him to the point, to see if we could learn anything of the fate of the bark.

Once outside the door, I realized immediately that though it still blew tremendously, the wind was steadier, less like a hurricane and more like an ordinary storm. And thus, clinging together, and bending over almost double to force our way into the wind, we passed once more through the belt of trees and fought our way out to the point.

In the darkness we had become separated, and I had all that I could do to look out for myself without trying to rejoin McAllister, when suddenly I was conscious of a strange and terrifying sensation, and found that without in the least intending to do so, I had whirled about and was gazing intently toward the woods. I am at a loss, without making myself ridiculous, to explain my feelings, but I can only say that without seeing anything pass me in the intense blackness, at the same time I was conscious that something had passed. This sounds lame enough, and perhaps I can make myself more clear by saying that if I believed in ghosts or spirits, I had exactly the sensation that something of this kind had passed me, borne on the yelling wind. But at once, with a shake of my head, I dismissed such fancies from my mind, and made my way to the very border of the sand. By this time McAllister had rejoined me, and we stood there together trying to pierce the gloom of the night. All at once a huge wave swirled almost to our feet, and when it retreated, drawing sand and pebbles in its wake, it left behind it a gift from the sea, a dark, shapeless something that lay sprawled before us. Together we bent over it, and as the clouds again parted, allowing the faint and watery radiance of the starlight to filter through, I started back in horror, for the black mass was the bruised and bleeding body of a negro, his clenched teeth and the expression of agony on his face showing the desperation of his fight with the waves. Beyond all doubt he was dead; nor could there be further question as to the fate of the bark. I heard McAllister groan, like a man stricken to the heart. And strangely enough at such a moment I thought of the dying curse of the obi man.

CHAPTER X

The Curse of the Obi Man.

By noon the next day the hurricane had subsided. Everywhere, however, the gale had left its traces; trees had been uprooted, vessels wrecked, and crops destroyed. Andrew McAllister had suffered heavy losses. To say nothing of the damage to the plantation, not a vestige remained of the bark except the timbers that lined the beach and the corpses of the slaves and of the crew.

McAllister himself was like a man who has been dealt a sudden and terrible blow. He seemed visibly bent and withered; could neither eat nor sleep; and in the evenings would sit with me, mourning, over and over again, the slaves, the gold and the ivory, sunk deep at the bottom of the sea. Unable to sit still, he would pace the room, muttering more to himself than to me, and with a half-belief in the superstitions of the blacks, cursing his bloodthirsty overseer for causing the death of the obi man.

And indeed, if it was the ghost of the dead magician with whom we were dealing, he seemed bound for a complete revenge, for the hurricane and the wreck were not our sole misfortunes. On the very next day one of the maids, who had been to the beach just before dusk, came flying home, half terrified to death. Something she averred, had frightened her; something stealthy and shadowy had followed her, skirting the edge of the mangroves, something that had chilled her blood in her veins. Had she seen it? She hesitated. No, she had not seen it, and yet she knew that it was there.

Of course I was not impressed with this wild tale, though in spite of myself I could not help recalling the strange sensation I had experienced on the night of the wreck, a sensation which exactly corresponded to the description of the maid.

Character Is Shaped by Means of Thought

Every day we are becoming more like our thoughts. If they are mean and selfish, we cannot prevent ourselves from becoming so. If they are unclean and evil, our character and conduct will inevitably be shaped by them. It is true that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so he is."

As Charles Kingsley says: "Think about yourself; about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you, and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose, on earth or in heaven either."

And on the other hand, loving thoughts will produce loving acts, and a generous, kindly way of regarding others in our own minds will bring us to a generous, kindly treatment of them in daily life.—Pentecost Herald.

Polar Region Quadrants

The south polar region is divided into quadrants. The American quadrant, from latitude 0 degrees to 90 degrees west; the Australian quadrant, 90 degrees east to 180 degrees east, and the Pacific quadrant, 90 degrees west to 180 degrees west, have been explored by various expeditions. The African quadrant, from longitude 0 degrees to 90 degrees east, is the unknown region.

Ancient Archives Saved

European merchants economize by wrapping their merchandise in old newspapers or any other paper which can be easily obtained. In the little Rumanian town of Nagyvarad (formerly Hungarian) this custom led to the discovery of some old documents of historical importance. Students bought fruit from a street vender and examination of the cornucopias showed that the paper came from old Hungarian documents. One document contained an official account of the battle of Magenta (fought in Italy in 1859). Another was an original decree of Franz Joseph, dated 1780, permitting the Protestants of Nagyvarad to sing their religious songs when conducting burial services. According to reports, the documents in which the fruit was sold came from the local archives, the Rumanian authorities having sold them for old paper.

SUMMERY GEORGETTE PRINTS; FOR THE VACATION WARDROBE

THE stage is "all set" for about as enchanting a midsummer fashion scene as fancy can picture. For both matron and flapper the mode has prepared delectable frocks of fluttery sheer chiffons, topped with big drooping-brim chapeaux whose colorfulness will happily join forces with the tones and tints of growing flowers and summer skies.

The gowns and hats in the picture are typical of the mode whose reign is foretold for this summer. While these lovely costumes portray the general trend toward hats big of brim and frocks daintily sheer, only the individual ensemble can convey the glory of color which will be achieved throughout dress, headwear, footwear; likewise every accessory.

For the Matron and Flapper.

Long snug-fitting sleeves are an outstanding feature of the multi-colored, beflowered chiffon frocks as now worn. A charming vagary of the mode is to omit applied trimmings in styling these sheer transparencies, arriving at effect by a most intriguing handling of the fabric, in multitudinous drapes, panels, tiers and the like.

Side-fullness is becoming quite a factor in styling. This same is put into practice in the instance of each of the gowns in the illustration. For the dress on the standing figure, a wide sash of self-material tied over the left hip answers to the call for the now-so-extremely-modish big-bow trimming, at the same time giving the impression of a generous side-fullness.

The seated figure adopts a shirred side-insert which, while it assures the desired fullness, also attains an uneven hemline, which is also a matter of outstanding style importance.

As to the printed motif for chiffons and georgettes, fashion runs to extremes from tiny florals to huge flowers, especially roses. Colored velvet ribbons, also shoulder flowers of self-fabric, are favorite trimming details.

Of course you are not thinking of starting on that vacation trip without a smart jersey sports frock. If so, be of good cheer, for there is yet time to change your mind, and it's a fact your wardrobe would be sadly lacking without a pretty, becoming jersey one-piece dress or jumper suit. Nothing equal to jersey for faithful service! A jersey frock has the faculty of being tucked into any corner of auto trunk or week-end suitcase, coming forth at the propitious moment unwrinkled and ready to wear.

The jersey frock in the picture is a likeable model, because of its extreme simplicity; likewise its extreme modishness. It makes its style appeal in such smart details as a to-the-front plaited fullness, also its twin-belt effect, these two-in-one belts being outstanding in the season's showings.

Clever innovations are continually being introduced in the styling of jersey frocks. They are such as tend to maintain a lively enthusiasm for the dress or suit or ensemble of jersey. There is, for instance, the unique method of employing several shades of the same color, as in case of a blue jersey frock, which seams several cone-shaped sections together, ranging from navy through delft and marine, to palest tint, the entire cross-ing the blouse from one central point like rays of the sun. So deftly are the colors assembled and the fabrics manipulated, the effect is rather that of an ombre material which is dyed in the knitting. Metallic interknitted effects are smartly exploited in jersey.

Lovely for summer sportswear are pastel colored or white jersey frocks embroidered with gay woolen yarns.

Baby Now Worth $9,333

The fact that we live longer than did our grandfathers is bringing us billions of dollars in cash, says a great insurance company, whose experts estimate that the total increase in earning power of American men and women in the present generation, or since 1901, is $3,500,000,000. This gain, they declare in Popular Science Monthly, has been due largely to the extension of life.

In 1901 a baby boy at birth was considered to have a potential value of $7,553. By 1924 this value increased to $9,333. This gain also, they conclude, is due to expectation of longer life, with a consequent longer period of earning capacity.

Nothing New in Idea That Men Are "Funny"

"Men are funny." That's not such an unusual statement as to be startling. The startling part about the observation is that a man made it—a man who, in his daily task of giving shaves and haircuts, has plenty of opportunity to know whereof he speaks.

"In the old days before women invaded my shop," explained the barber, "men would come in and sometimes wait as much as two hours for their turn in the chair. Now, because I have so much feminine trade, some of my work is by appointment.

"If a man comes in on chance and has to wait for some one who comes in after him, but who has an appointment, he's so disgruntled he's likely not to come back. And probably he's waited only a half hour. It isn't the wait—it's the fact that some one comes in after him with the privilege of going ahead of him. Yes, men are funny."—Philadelphia Record.

His Value

They still tell stories of Richard Harding Davis, the famous novelist and war correspondent. Once he went to interview Joe Chamberlain, at that time head of the British government.

With his usual touch of ego, Davis tried to impress his importance on Chamberlain when the latter interrupted by saying:

"Really, Mr. Davis, I don't get your point. My own notion is that if it were not for you journalists, we wouldn't know what a rotten world we're living in."

Splendid Oval Rug Woven for Theater

What is considered the world's largest oval rug was recently completed by an American company for a popular New York theater. It was a chenille rug 1 inch in thickness, 41 by 58 feet, oval in size, with one seam lengthwise in the fabric. Thirty-three hundred pounds of surface yarn were dyed and 1,300 pounds of backing spun for the rug, which, when sheared and completed, weighed over two tons. As a central ornament the rug design has the letter R, symbolizing the name of the theater manager. This letter is surrounded by motifs framed from the microphone. The central ornament is supported by four shields displaying musical instruments and motifs derived from light, the spectrum and movie reels. These are embodied in a large oval panel through which are dispersed various animal forms. The outer field is surrounded by a heavy border. The main field is woven in tones of crimson and gold, the panels in blues, taupes and complementary shades.

Mrs. Levi Klotzbach went to Iowa City Monday, returning Wednesday, where she went to see her father, Lew Sampson, at the hospital. Mr. Sampson is still quite ill but is improving.

Robert Gobeli and Gilbert Schaper drove to Minneapolis Sunday, returning Monday. Mr. Gobeli went to Minneapolis to purchase a new Russel Threshing Machine to use this fall.

Work is well under way and excavation and foundation work has been completed on the new school house in Liberty Towship, opposite the Wm. Stille farm. The new building will be constructed of brick.

In a recent item in The Times it was stated that Liberty Township was to build the first brich school house in Hancock County. Henry Beier informs us different. He says Erin Township Center School is a brick structure and was built last year, and is the first and only brick school house in the county. This past year was the first it had been used. Thanks!

TO EX-SERVICE MEN

After July 2, it will be too late convert your government life surance policies, issued during e war, into permanent pol'cies. ny insurance man will tell you at this is sound insurance. It s been endorsed by the Associ- ion of Life Insurance Presi- nts. Yet the cost to ex-service en is about 25 per cent less an other insurance.

LIBERTY BONDS

The treasury will redeem what is known as the second Liberty loan of 4 and 4½ per cent bonds, now aggregating about $1,691,- 000,000, on November 15. These bonds were sold to 9,400,000 people, probably the greatest general subscription to any par- ticular fund known.

The second Liberty loan, which furnished money for war expens- es was floated in 1917 and the bonds were dated to mature in 1947, unless it became expedient to redeem them in 1927. The sec- retary of the treasury finds the time convenient for repayment of these bonds.

This was the only bond issue in which an optional date of pay- ment was announced All other bond issues have the date of pay- met definitely set. The story of the war is never complete with- out full acknowledgement to the people who responded promptly and willingly to all calls and to those who managed the financial problems.

SIX CAR LOADS LIVE STOCK IN SATURDAY SHIPMENT

Shipment Was Considered Heavy For This Time Of Year

Three car loads of hogs and three car loads of cattle, a total of six cars constituted the week end ship- ment of stock from the Klemme yards

Klemme has held the lead in live stock shipments in this part of the state all winter, and continues to lead in the number of cars shipped weekly.

Six car loads is a good sized ship- ment for this time of the year, and when other nearby towns are brag- ging on one or two cars weekly.

Agent M. O. Barr has already re- ceived orders for four cars for Sat- urday, and this number will may be increased.

RECORD ATTENDANCE AT BAY- SIDE PARK LAST SUNDAY

Dumont To Play Gallagher's Next Sunday At Bayside Ball Park

Bayside Amusement Park at Clear Lake, had a tremendous crowd last Sunday. Stands where lunches and drinks were served, ran out of sup- plies before night and the whole- sale houses at Mason City were call- ed on the telephone to bring more food, bottled beverages and ice cream. Next Sunday Bayside Park will be prepared for thousands of visitors, and if it is a nice day, one of the largest crowds of the season is expected. The warm weather has made the fine bathing beach at Bay- side popular. Last Sunday several hundred enjoyed the water. Next Sunday the Dumont baseball team will play the Mason City Gallagher's at the Bayside diamond, three p. m. Dumont has a fast team and a big crowd of Dumont fans will be there with the team. The new ferris wheel, roller coaster, band concerts comedy attractions, free picnic grounds and tables, will all help to make it an enjoyable day for the Bayside Park visitors next Sunday.

YOUNG PEOPLE TO GO TO OKOBOJI CAMP

OUT DOOR MEETINGS WILL BE FEATURE OF LEAGUE HERE

More Members Wanted To Take In Camp At Lake Okoboji

A rather original venture is being started by the Epworth League next Sunday—the plan of holding a ser- ies of open air meetings. The first one will be held in the park prompt- ly at seven o'clock, and an appro- priate devotional topic will be taken up "Christ in the Out-of-doors." The meeting will be in general charge of Elvira Stille.

Now that the time of the Okoboji Institute is drawing near (July 11- 18) it is important that those who have not definitely decided to attend make up heir minds at once. There is still room for five or six. A large attendance is expected at Okoboji this year The most enthusiastic Leaguers from this District will be there, and Klemme should have more than six representatives Any one who has ever attended an Insti- tute is always anxious to take in an- other The beauty of the lakes and the pleasures to be there, the inspir- ation had from the classes, and the associations with young people from all over this part of Iowa are part of the attractions of Institute.

Vice President Dawes Opens New Lake Michigan Harbor

Vice President Charles G. Dawes last week, following the official vice-presidential salute of 19 guns, raised the flag over Buffington Harbor, Indiana, thus signifying the formal opening to navigation of the first private harbor to be built on Lake Michigan in twenty years, and one of only three such harbors on the Great Lakes. In addition to the vice president, William R. Dawes, Chicago Association of Commerce, E. J. Buffington, president of the Illinois Steel Company, B. F. Affleck, president of the Universal Portland Cement Company, and a number of other notables took part in the ceremonies.

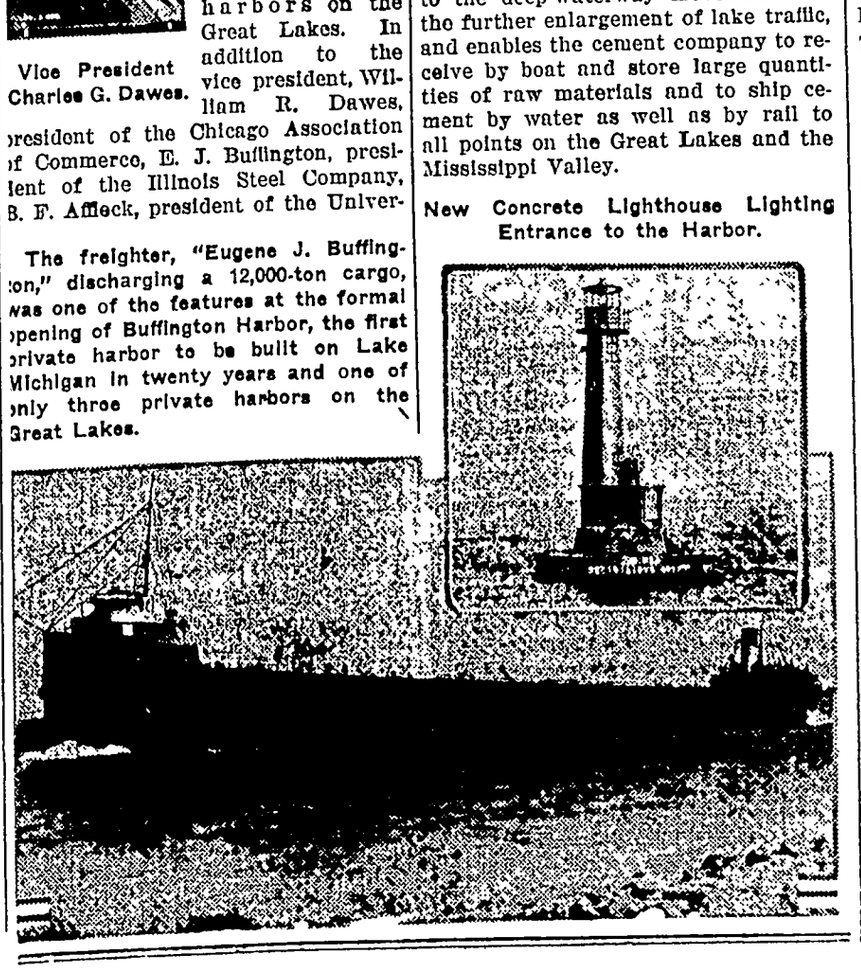
Vice President Charles G. Dawes.

This new deep-water harbor, located at the plant of the Universal company, is said to be one of the most modern on the Great Lakes, there being a large boat-unloading bridge, a million-ton storage yard for raw materials, an electrically operated conveyor nearly a mile long to carry material from dock to cement plant, and an all-concrete lighthouse with one of the bright- est beacons on Lake Michigan.

The new improvement adds impetus to the deep-waterway movement and the further enlargement of lake traffic, and enables the cement company to re- ceive by boat and store large quanti- ties of raw materials and to ship ce- ment by water as well as by rail to all points on the Great Lakes and the Mississippi Valley.

New Concrete Lighthouse Lighting Entrance to the Harbor.

The freighter, "Eugene J. Buffing- ton," discharging a 12,000-ton cargo, was one of the features at the formal opening of Buffington Harbor, the first private harbor to be built on Lake Michigan in twenty years and one of only three private harbors on the Great Lakes.



THE BLACK HILLS

They are black by reason of the dense, dark forests of pine that cover them. They were formed by an uplift of the "Ar- chaean formation," and they lift themselves from 2,500 to 7,200 feet above the sea's level. There is gold in them, and some of the dying Romance of the Old West hovers over them. It is written that "the climate is salubrious, the soil fertile and the hills are well adapted to grazing purpoes." And they are also adapted to presidential vacations. The Black Hills region is enjoying a newspaper publicity unequaled since the seventies when Gen. Custer explored it and the gold rush invaded it and the Sioux Indians fought over it. The Mid- dle West, the Northwest and the West will show President Cool- idge a good time during his sum- mer vacation in their midst.

MRS. REICHARDT DIED LAST EVENING AT WENZ HOME

Mrs. Reichardt died last evening at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wenz, after a short illness.

Mrs. Reichardt was an elderly lady and for the past year or so she had been ailing more or less, but recently she was forced to remain in bed. Mrs Wenz had given her medicine and her mother seemed to be resting easily. Mrs. Wenz was gone but a few minutes and when she returned to the bedside of her mother she was dead.

Mrs. Reichardt was a very pleas- ant lady and had made many friends in this vicinity during her long resi- dence in this commuity, and who mourn her passing.

Smaller Money

United States paper money is to be smaller. The secretary of the treasury has approved a proposal to make bills one-third smaller than the present money. The new one- dollar bills will carry a portrait of George Washington and the two- dollar bills one of Thomas Jefferson. It is already too small for the needs of the majrity of the peple. What would be appreciated is a move to make money larger, at least in its purchasing power.

Right Side Is Wrong Side

An examining physcian finds that the heart of a Nebraska girl is on the right side of her body—in other words, it 's on the right side, but in the wrong place. Is that what they call being fickle-hearted? There is nothing to worry about, however. Some damsels lose their hearts and still live—and happily.

KLEMME CREAMERY BREAKS HIGH RECORD

MONTH OF MAY BIGGEST IN THE HISTORY OF CREAMERY

Over A Ton And A Half Of Butter Made Daily In May

For more than the past two or three months business at the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery has been going up, and up, by leaps and by bounds, and record after record has been broken in the large quanity of golden butter manufactured at the local plant. The last two weeks in May marked the high record in the history of the plant when 42,616 pounds of butter were made in the fourteen day period, or one and one half tons of butter per day, plus an extra tubful for good measure.

Manager A. D. Gimer and Secre- tary Valentine Josten, as well as the other officials of the creamery are beaming with happiness because of the fine records made.

A Good Year For Dairymen

This spring has been unusually blessed with rainfall which may not be the very best for corn, but it cer- tainly has helped out the dairyman with abundance of rich pasture and feed for his dairy cows. A mark- ed increase in production is noted by the dairyman who benefits by larger cream checks in turn.

Patron List Steadily Growing

The patrons of the Klemme Co- Operative Creamery now number four hundred, and this list is grow- ing daily. The reason for this big growth in patronage is perhaps due to the fairness of the Company in their methods of doing business with the farmer. The plant is forever striving toward improvements that enables them to produce a high quality of butter. This butter is shipped to the east where fancy pric- es are paid in order to get a high standard butter. These premium prices go right back to the farmer in the form of larger cream checks than he would otherwise receive.

In order to maintain this quality butter demanded by eastern trade it is necessary that dairymen give their full co-operation to the cream- ery by properly cooling their cream and making daily deliveries. The patrons on the several truck routes find this an easy matter and such deliveries arrive before noon at the plant. Individual deliveries must also be made before noon in order to maintain quality of cream, as the plant has attained such an enormous production it is no longer possible for them to receive cream any hour of the day or night, as in the days of old.

Big Check List Published

Turn to another page in this is- sue where you will find a list of 103 names of farmers who received $50 or more for their cream sold to the local plant for the last half of May. Ten farmers received checks for over $100 dollars; nineteen re- ceived checks from $75.00 to $100. And there is a long list of seventy- four who received checks from $50 to $75 for the two weeks.

Watch this list grow in June and when the amount of butter made for two weeks is expected to hit the 50,000 pound mark—or about two tons of butter daily!

Klemme has the best Creamery in North Iowa—watch our smoke!

4-H CLUB RALLY DAY HELD AT EAGLE LAKE STATE PARK

Club Members Provided Program At Farm Bureau Picnic

The annual 4-H Club Rally Day was held at Eagle Lake State Park June 15th. This served as the pro- gram for the forenoon of the Farm Bureau picnic. Several hundred club members and friends were pre- sent. A report of the Short Course was given by Bernice Gelner. A re- port on the Boys' Club Work was given by the County Agent. The annual election of officers was held with the following results:

Lillian McDermott, Britt Town- ship, President; Mildred Anderson, Onthel Township, Vice President; Lucille Benar, Madison Township, Secretary-Treasurer.

THE OATH OF SECRECY

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AMERICA'S 56 Immortals—who are they?

They were the men whose autographs are shown above, but you don't necessarily have to be a collector of autographs to be interested in them. If you are a real American to whom Independence day means something more than taking a holiday from your everyday job or enjoying the opportunity of engaging in an annual noise-making orgy, so dear to the heart of Young America, you should be interested in them and what they stand for.

They represent a certain handwriting activity which took place 151 years ago and which, it is safe to assert, changed the whole course of human history. For these are the autographs of the signers of the American Declaration of Independence and those signers are America's 56 Immortals, whose deed we commemorate on the Fourth of July.

Considering the importance of what they did, it is a bit strange that we Americans know so little about these signers. Of course, the names of some of them are familiar. From our school histories we know John Hancock, who put down his name in such a "bold handwriting that even King George the Third could read it without his spectacles," and who has given us the by-word of "put your John Hancock on that" as a synonym for "sign on the dotted line." From our school histories, too, we know Thomas Jefferson, the "Author of the Declaration of Independence," whose original draft of it, bearing also the corrections in the handwriting of Benjamin Franklin and John Adams, is one of our most precious national heirlooms. We know the names of some of the others who were prominently connected with Revolutionary events and with the founding of the new nation—Samuel Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Richard Henry Lee, Robert Morris, Philip Livingston, Francis Lightfoot Lee, Elbridge Gerry, Roger Sherman and Charles Carroll of Carrollton.

We also know Button Gwinnett, but not for the same reason. His rise to fame has been a more modern development and has come about because his signature is one of the greatest rarities known to autograph collectors. Two years ago Button Gwinnett, dead these 150 years, won a place in the newspaper headlines because a New York collector had paid $22,500 for his autograph. Last November another specimen of his signature was sold for $28,500, and this fact was widely heralded as the highest price ever paid for an autograph. Then in March, 1927, a new record was established when "the only known example of a letter with a Button Gwinnett signature attached" sold for $51,000. The fact that the signatures of five other signers of the Declaration of Independence also appeared on this letter may have had something to do with the high price, but the principal reason was the appearance thereon of the handwritnig of this Continental congress delegate from Georgia who was killed in a duel a year after he had placed his signature on America's Magna Charta. And this man whose autograph is worth a fortune today, because it is the rarest of all of those of the signers, once saw his property sold to satisfy an indebtedness of $1,100!

So Button Gwinnett's name at the present time is probably the best known of all the signers, even if many of the others had longer and more distinguished careers. But take out the dozen or more named above and consider the remaining forty. Not only do few of us know their names, but what do we know about the men themselves? More than a hundred years ago a historian set to work to preserve for future generations some of the facts about these men. It is this book, Sanderson's "Biography of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence," published in Philadelphia in nine volumes from 1820 to 1827, which gives us most of our knowledge of them. Here are some of the facts about them:

Of the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence, nine were born in Massachusetts, eight in Virginia, five in Maryland, four in Connecticut, four in New Jersey, four in Pennsylvania, four in South Carolina, three in New York, three in Delaware, two in Rhode Island, one in Maine, three in Ireland, two in England, two in Scotland and one in Wales.

Twenty-one were attorneys, ten merchants, four physicians, three farmers, one clergyman, one printer, sixteen were men of fortune. Eight were graduates of Harvard college, four of Yale, three of New Jersey, two of Philadelphia, two of William and Mary, three of Cambridge, England; two of Edinburgh, and one of St. Omers

At the time of their deaths, five were over ninety years of age, seven between eighty and ninety, eleven between seventy and eighty, twelve between sixty and seventy, eleven between fifty and sixty, seven between forty and fifty; one died at the age of twenty-seven and the age of two is uncertain. At the time of the signing of the Declaration, the average of the members was forty-four years. They lived to the average age of more than sixty-five years and ten months. The youngest member was Edward Rutledge of South Carolina, who was in his twenty-seventh year. He lived to the age of fifty-one. The next youngest member was Thomas Lynch of the same state, who was also in his twenty-seventh year. He was cast away at sea in the fall of 1776. Benjamin Franklin was the oldest member. He was in his seventy-first year when he signed the Declaration. He died in 1790 and survived sixteen of his younger brethren. Stephen Hopkins of Rhode Island, the next oldest member, was born in 1707 and died in 1785. Charles Carroll attained the greatest age, dying in his ninety-sixth year. William Ellery of Rhode Island died in his ninety-first year. Two of the signers, both of whom later became President, died on the same day exactly fifty years later, July 4, 1826. They were Thomas Jefferson and John Adams.

Interesting as these statistics may be to some persons—at least, they were considered of sufficient moment for some industrious compiler to dig out those facts—they do little more than hint at the real "human interest" that lies in the careers and characters of these men and that "tremendous event" with which their names are associated. The years that have passed since they signed the Declaration of Independence have thrown such a haze of romance around them and their deed that it is difficult for us to see this event in a clear light. We look at Trumbull's painting and see an act in the dramatic pageantry of History Making. But who were these bewigged, white-stockinged patriots shown in that picture? Not diplomats, nor plenipotentiaries nor such men of high degree as the world was then accustomed to think of as being associated with history-making events. Instead they were "twenty-one attorneys, ten merchants, four physicians, three farmers, one clergyman, one printer" and only "sixteen men of fortune." Thus the majority of them were men who worked for their living at some occupation or profession—surely an appropriate group to lay the foundations for a democracy in which "all men are created equal"!

Such were America's Immortals. Perhaps they realized that they were actors in a mighty pageant-drama, but it is doubtful if they regarded it as we are accustomed to think of it. We think of them as coming forward to take their places in the picture, posing for a moment in the historic scene and then stepping forth to receive the plaudits of the world. But how different must it have been for them! What misgivings must have troubled them as they took the decisive step. Remember that the sentiment for independence was not yet unanimous throughout the colonies. Remember that they still felt a certain loyalty to the mother country, even though the people they represented had suffered from the stupidities of the king of that country. They realized that membership in the Continental congress was a position of peril as well as a position of honor. During November of the previous year 87 members of congress, 50 of whom later signed the Declaration, had signed the famous oath of secrecy which read:

Resolved, that every member of this Congress considers himself under the ties of virtue, honor and love of his country not to divulge directly or indirectly any matter or thing agitated or debated in Congress; nor any matter or thing determined in Congress which a majority of the Congress shall order to be kept secret and that if any member shall violate this agreement he shall be expelled from this Congress and deemed an enemy to the liberties of America and liable to be treated as such and that every member signify his assent to this agreement by signing the same.

This indicates that they realized fully the seriousness of the business. But what was even more serious was taking the final step of severing all ties with England and declaring for independence. They were rebels against what by tradition and training had always been recognized as the properly constituted authorities. If the revolt failed, if the conflict, which had already been precipitated and which this declaration of independence necessitated seeing the thing through to the end, went against the patriot cause there was for them the promise of the treatment which history has usually dealt her unsuccessful rebels—imprisonment and perhaps the rope. Even if the revolt succeeded there was no certainty that the jealous and discordant colonies could come together under any stable form of government. So they were taking a fearful responsibility upon themselves, these attorneys and merchants, these farmers, a clergyman and a printer. As for the "men of fortune," they had even more to lose in material wealth, in social position and in civic post of trust than did the others if the rebellion failed. For that reason, more honor to them because they did what they did!

So it is well to remember America's Immortals on Independence day this year and to pay their memories the respect due them. Despite a modern tendency to examine critically the events of the past with the evident effort on the part of some historians to "show up" national heroes and prove that they were something less in historic stature than we have been thinking, and despite the fact that it has become a fashion to question the motives of the Fathers of the Republic, the estimate of one historian (George E. Ellis in Windsor's "Narrative and Critical History of America") may still be accepted as an adequate characterization of the signers:

"We have become accustomed to associate with the term congress the idea of a legally constituted organic body, with defined powers authoritatively assigned to it, the exercise of which is binding on its constituents. Our Continental congresses were of quite another sort, and had no authority save what might be granted to the wisdom and practicability of the measures they advised. Most certain it is that only a very small minority of the people of the colonies were concerned in calling the early congresses. As certain, also, is it that a very large preponderance of the people of all classes were then strongly opposed to any violent measures, to sundering ties of allegiance, or to seeking anything beyond a peaceful redress of grievances. On the whole, while it must be admitted that congress was generally in advance of its constituency, it knew how to temporize and to give intervals of pause in steadily working on to its ultimate declaration. 'Natural leaders' always start forth in such a cause, and they learn their skill by practice. . . .

"When we consider the distractions of the times, the overthrow of all previous authority, the presence and threats of anarchy, the lack of unanimity, and the number and virulence of discordant interests, and, above all, that congress had only advisory, hardly instructive, powers, we can easily pardon excesses and errors, and heartily yield our admiration to the noble qualities and virtues of those who proved their claim to leadership. When we read the original papers and the full biographies of these men, we are impressed by the balance and force of their judgment, their power of expressing reasons and convictions, their calm self-mastery and the fervor of their purpose."

POST TOASTIES

They stay crisp in milk or cream

A man's appetite is just a boy's—grown up!

Crisp, crunchy, delicious Post Toasties. Was there ever a hungry boy who could resist this delightful combination of true corn flavor and double-crispness? Men are merely boys—grown up. Give men Post Toasties. They like the crunchy goodness and the unequalled flavor of the toasted hearts of corn. Serve Post Toasties with milk or cream. Try them, too, with juicy berries or luscious fruits. Here is one dish that men never tire of—Post Toasties, with the true corn flavor sealed in lasting crispness by the special process of the Postum Company. Make sure that you get the real Post Toasties, in the red and yellow, wax-wrapped package that keeps them crisply fresh and ready to serve.

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasa take.

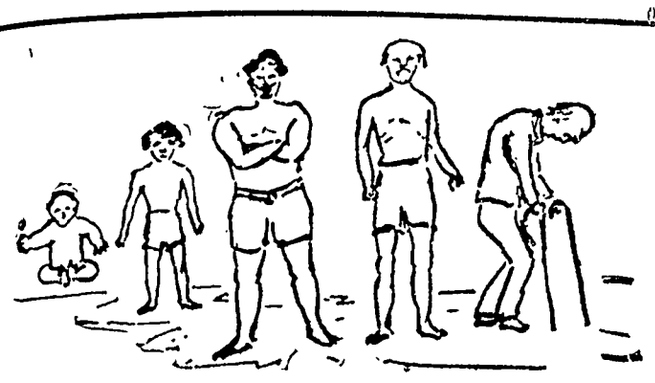
YOURSELF and YOUR BODY

By WILFRED T. GRENFELL

HE BODY ALWAYS FIGHTING BATTLES

w the Enemy Finally Wins — Most People Their Own Worst Enemy.



Your Five Stages in Life.

Ear-Trumpets Like Grandmother's!

HOWEVER careful you and I are of our bodies, each body has really to be always like a city in war , on the 'qui vive' all the time. It has a thousand enemies which forever working to pull it down, et inside and destroy it. Every- has. Even the rocks are the ; the heat blisters them, the cold s them, and the water dissolves ; the drought powders them, the blows sand against them and s them down, the sea washes them . But there is one comfort—in of all the changing, nothing is lost. What comes off the moun- collects in the valleys and grows nto plants; the green stuff in the ts stores it all up with sunshine, so it becomes fire and light, makes and is built up into men again. n the same way my body, when I done with it, may be buried and me earth, or may wash away into sea and be eaten by shellfish and become coral perhaps, and so ge into rocks again. Or it may into a lettuce or grass and be n by a cow; and others eat the or drink the milk, and so use it ver again. Even the rest of the line that pours down is just the . It isn't wasted either. It lifts water to float as clouds, which and rain on the crops, and make for strength and rivers for water er. It gets 'canned up' in wood or or oil to drive engines, or in t and fruits and vegetables for drive our bodies with.

ven the winds are not lost. They the water and help to beat up , and so turn them into heat and so on. The real fact is that there must be always two things or forces, as it were, moving in opposite ways, like the game of oranges and lemons. One is always pulling down; one is always building up. One is called positive; the other negative. Each is, as it were, holding the other in its place, keeping the other awake, and insuring that it does its work, so that it keeps moving."

"There is one thing more. In spite of all that you and the cells can do, after about 70 years, enemies get the better of all bodies. The cells get old and worn out. The hair falls, the teeth drop out, our eyes grow dim, our ears get deaf, our bones get brittle and break, our pipes for carrying blood get chalky and burst. Then we make false teeth to help us go on chewing our food, till finally we have to go back to drinking milk as we did when we were babies. We make spectacles for our eyes, and trumpets for our ears, like those grandmother used, and caps and wigs to keep our heads warm, and sticks and crutches and wooden legs and invalid chairs—till at last we give it up, and don't die, but just leave the wretched old body and go into another world and hope to get another body, so as to go on working somewhere else. A great deal of all this trouble is our own fault, because some men abuse their bodies so shamefully by drinking bad stuff, eating too much, and so on.

"How long ought my body to last?"

"A hundred and twenty-five years, anyhow. That's five times as long as it took to grow perfect."

(Chorus): "Gee!"

West Virginia Village Has Place in History

The village of Charlestown, West Virginia, founded by and named for a brother of George Washington, also claims a place in history as the scene of two treason trials.

The sedate, white-pillared courthouse, half hidden by great shade trees, housed the trial of John Brown in 1859 and of William Blizzard and others in 1922. Brown was convicted and hanged for his effort at Harper's Ferry to arm slaves and spread revolt against their masters. Blizzard and his companions, accused of treason in leading an armed march of striking coal miners through Logan county, was acquitted.

The old courthouse has a history of its own, apart from the dramas of nationwide interest that have been staged in it.

When Charles Washington laid out the town in 1786 and named the streets after members of his family, he deeded the corner lots at the intersection of the main streets to the public in the event that the county was ever separated from Berkeley county, Virginia, of which it was then a part.

The separation took place in 1801, when Jefferson county, named after the author of the Declaration of Independence, was organized. In 1863 the old courthouse was partly burned by "the Yankees." It was rebuilt in 1872 and enlarged in 1916.

Crabs Raid Oyster Farm

The theft of a large collection of oysters from a shallow pool where they had been placed by a man starting an oyster farm recently in New South Wales, revealed that the thieves were three of the largest crabs caught in Australian waters for many years. The crabs were discovered opening the oyster shells with their massive nippers, apparently doing the work with little difficulty.

Automobiles Aid Alfalfa Growing

Legume Becoming Popular as Market for Timothy Hay Is Dwindling.

Automobiles aid the production of alfalfa, because, as they replace horses, the market for timothy hay, which was once a major cash crop on many New York farms, dwindles and in its place farmers in some sections are producing the legume, says the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

Best Cash Crop.

As a cash crop, alfalfa is better than timothy, because the demand for alfalfa is good whereas the demand for timothy is poor. As alfalfa is used more and more by feeders in regions where it cannot be produced cheaply, the demand probably will increase.

Aside from the chances of marketing it at a profit, alfalfa has other advantages, the college says. It is high in protein and therefore can be substituted, in part, for high-protein concentrates in feeding dairy cattle. The college points out that alfalfa prices were good and New York growers found it a profitable field crop even when the prices of mill feeds were low. If it was profitable to grow alfalfa then, it should be still more profitable to grow it when the prices of mill feeds are higher, for this should stimulate the use of alfalfa.

Sell Good Product.

Farmers who plan to produce alfalfa to sell, however, should be careful to offer only that which is free from weeds and other grasses and which is well cured. Much New York alfalfa that is marketed usually has to be sold at a low price because it has poor quality. The college advises farmers in sections adapted to the crop to grow more than they need at home and plan to sell only a good-quality product.

Live Stock in Wood Lot Hinder Timber Growth

The farm wood lot is more valuable as a producer of wood than as a pasture for live stock, according to C. R. Tillotson, forester of the United States Department of Agriculture. A year's forage production in the average wood lot is estimated to be worth from 25 cents to $1.25 an acre. In the same time a well-managed wood lot will add from one-half to one cord of wood. In addition there is the convenience of having a supply of cord wood, poles, posts and lumber near at hand.

Live stock eat and break down the young growth, bend it, strip it of bark, and tramp it out. Also by tramping the soil around the roots of older trees they pack it so tightly that air and water are excluded from the roots, and the trees gradually die. Hogs eat the seeds of oak and beech and thus interfere with the establishment of seedlings. Heavily pastured woods are easily recognized; they are almost entirely devoid of bushy undergrowth, a sod grass has begun to creep in, and the old trees are beginning to die in the tops.

Live stock undoubtedly benefit from the shelter afforded by woods. Two or three acres, however, will ordinarily give them all the shelter they need; the remainder of the woods had better be fenced off to grow wood crop.

Quack Grass Is Killed by Covering With Paper

Patches of quack grass are most easily killed by covering them with tar paper, says Matthew Fowlds at the South Dakota Agricultural college. Several experimental fields have been cleared by a four-year rotation of corn, oats, wheat and sweet clover or a similar combination. As soon as the sweet clover crop was harvested the stubble was plowed under. Throughout the balance of the summer the ground was frequently disked and cultivated. Alfalfa has kept the weed from spreading but will not kill it in that state.

In Michigan J. F. Cox at the agricultural college advises very shallow plowing in August where whole fields are infected. Then disk and cross disk to cut the sod into pieces. The roots can then be raked together and burned. As soon as rain cakes the ground run over the field with a spring tooth harrow or disk, repeating every ten days. The next spring plow as early as possible, seven to nine inches deep, and plant a cultivated crop.

New York Structure City Under One Roof

A city within a building may be the boast of New York if plans now before the building department are approved. These call for what is known as the Larkin building for West Forty-second street, which is to be 110 stories high and have accommodations for more than 30,000 individuals in the various suites and offices. Thus the structure would take care of more persons than reside in some of the cities of this country and Europe.

Opposition to the height has caused many delays in bringing the matter to a definite head, and a number of problems still are to be solved. One of the chief obstacles encountered has been the question of elevator transportation for not only the multitudes that would use these conveyances morning and night, and at luncheon time, but also to take care of those with business to transact in the various offices during other hours of the day.—Wall Street Journal.

Not What It Seemed

The dancers stopped and watched as a sunburnt man crossed the floor toward the host. His whole frame shivered and shook. Then suddenly his tremors ceased and he was surprised to hear a burst of applause from the guests.

"Welcome, old man," cried his host, seizing the newcomer's hand, "and congratulations. I never expected to see such an expert performer of the charleston straight out of central Africa."

The traveler gasped.

"Charleston?" he echoed. "That wasn't the charleston, that was ague."

Time to Part

Phillips and his wife had always been reputed to be the happiest of married couples, so when Mrs. Jones heard that her friend was suing for divorce she was astonished.

"You say his chief fault is his absent-mindedness?" she asked Mrs. Phillips. "You should try and endure that, dear."

"I did as long as possible," replied the latter. "But when he shook down the player-piano and threw a music roll into the furnace, that was going too far."—Hardware Age.

Tree Preserved in Ice

A Canadian government exploration party recently came across a spruce tree which had been preserved in the ice of the great North American glacier in Alaska. The glacier had receded and left the tree exposed after an imprisonment estimated at hundreds of thousands of years. The spruce was apparently one hundred twenty-four years old when the glacier enveloped it.

KLEMME WINS SECOND GAME FROM GOODELL

Fans Enjoy Good Base Ball Game On Belmond Diamond Sunday

Klemme scored another triumph over Goodell last Sunday by a score of 5 to 4, although we gathered 12 hits to their 4.

Sunday, June 26th, Klemme plans to have a home game here with the Renwick nine The Klemme fans will very likely have a chance to see one of our old pitchers, Harry Bonwell in act on for Renwick.

The best plays reported Sunday with Goodell were a hot drive caught barehanded by Smith which looked like a sure hit; a drive off side caught by Leitzinger and the double play made by Stokesbary on a spectacular catch.

NUMBER OF POUNDS OF BUTTER MADE FOR MAY 16 to 31 42,616
Average Price Paid For Butterfat for Month of May ..... .48½ cts.

According to the Iowa State Pasteurization Law we must comply with the new regulations and this means we must receive cream deliveries before noon each day. We are pleased with the co-operation we are receiving along this line. This is not a hardship on the dairyman, but rather it is a real benefit. By manufacturing butter from nice, sweet cream which are thus able to get it enables us to make a high score butter that sells at premium prices. This added premium goes right back to the farmer in the form of higher prices paid for Cream. Those who make their own deliveries must get their cream to us before noon, according to the new ruling.

Keep up the quality during hot weather—it will pay you big. A good cooling tank is a good investment. We have some good ones on sale at reasonable prices. We thank you for your efforts in bringing in a high quality cream, and for your co-operation in putting into effect our new ruling on cream delivery.

Cajun Justices Not Ruled by Blackstone

The old cajun justices of southwestern Louisiana were important personages. The trials, which were held at the justices' homes, were made all-day affairs, the neighbors driving in from miles around. Evidence was taken interminably, although the verdict was usually based upon the justice's point of view rather than upon any mere point of law.

For example, I know of a planter who brought suit against one of his tenants for the recovery of a calf. His ownership being proved, he was awarded possession of the animal. Next he was ordered to pay the costs of the court.

"But," objected the planter, "I have won my case. The loser should pay."

"True," agreed the justice. "But then, m'sieu, you have the money, whereas the other has not."

However, it was in domestic matters that these "prairie judges" really shone. One of them declared proudly that he could marry and divorce quicker than any other man in the state.

"It is quite simple," said he. "Gobbie wishes to tie up with some girl. That is all right. He gives me $5 and I write down his marriage in my book.

"After a while he don't like it? He wants to be free? That is all right again. For $10 more I tear out the page."—Nevil Henshaw in Adventure Magazine.

Kruger's Idea Was to Make Camp on Ocean

The sight of the trackless ocean and a ship punching the waves, always brings back to this writer the authentic story of Paul Kruger, the president of the Transvaal republic, and his attempt to teach a group of Hottentot children the story of America's discovery, Pierre Van Passen writes, in the Atlanta Constitution. His representation of a ship conjured up a mental picture of a floating covered wagon. Oom Paul's imagination may have been magnificent, but it failed him miserably on the occasion when he was traveling from Capetown to Southampton in the pathetic mission of seeking aid for his country at the chancelleries of Europe. When night descended Oom Paul, who in his youth had slain an African lion with his bare hands, became nervous and agitated. Finally he could hold out no longer. Briskly he climbed the ladder to the captain's bridge. The officer saluted. "Tell me," said the Boer president, "where do you plan to unhitch tonight. It's getting dark you know, and I think we had better make camp." When reassured by the skipper he went back to his cabin read the story of St. Paul's shipwreck drank a stein of beer and fell asleep.

The Dirty Work

The helplessness of mere man in the presence of ordinary domestic tasks was illustrated in the case of the old miner, who explained that he had once tried to improve his cooking by studying a book of recipes. "It was no use," he said sadly, "because every one of them receipts starts off with 'take a clean dish.'"

He was kin to one of the sons of a Mrs. MacLeod. She was called away from home one day just after dinner. As she was leaving she said to one of the boys:

"One of you must wash the dishes and the other wipe them and put them away, so that everything will be tidy when I get back."

"All right, mother," said Jack, "but Will's got to wipe them. I'm willing to wash, but wiping is such greasy work."

Cosmopolitan South Africa

South Africa is among the most cosmopolitan places in the world, according to L. Kee, writing in the Sydney Bulletin.

"I saw a suitcase in the window of a shop in Durban and decided to buy it," says Kee. "A pleasant Hindu took my order and requisitioned a negro boy to get the article from the window. A girl (race unascertainable because only her eyes were visible; but they had a suspicious blue Chinese tint in their whites) typed the sale note, and an aged white man took my cash. Finally a Zulu, dressed like Beelzebub, 'rickshawed me and the case to the hotel. Each addressed the other in a different lingo."

Land in Extreme North?

The theory that land exists between Alaska and the pole has persisted for hundreds of years, and Dr. R. A. Harris, an American geographer, won considerable notice a few years ago by offering Arctic tide tables as proof of the existence of a large land mass north of Alaska, says Burt M. McConnel, in the Independent. There is also the fact that geese and ducks have been observed flying directly northward from Point Barrow during the early summer, and returning with their young a few months later from the same point of the compass. These are a few of the interesting theories in favor of the existence of land.

MORAL MORSELS

Matrimony has spoiled many friendships.

Much of the charity that begins at home is too weak to travel.

Most people are good nurses when it comes to nursing animosity.

Statement Put Issue Squarely Up to Teddy

"Have any of you children had a birthday the last week?" Mrs. Morrow, the Sunday school teacher, asked.

Three of her pupils raised their hands.

"Well, Charles and Betty and Jimmie, you may come forward and put your birthday pennies in the birthday box."

The three marched proudly to the front and dropped in their pennies. As each child dropped the pennies Mrs. Morrow counted so all could hear. Five for Charles, six for Betty and—

"Why, Jimmie, you're more than three years old'" Mrs. Morrow exclaimed. Jimmie had dropped in three pennies and started back to his seat.

"Yes m." Jimmie agreed readily, "I'm six."

"But you only dropped in three pennies," protested the teacher.

"Yes, but I'm twins," Jimmie explained. "Teddy couldn't come to Sunday school this morning, but it was half his birthday, and he'll have to put in the other three cents."—Kansas City Star.

Eskimos Eat Bird Raw

The Greenland auk or dove-kie is a greatly relished food among the Eskimos, who eat the bird raw, biting through the clean feathers into the firm meat of the breast. A hungry Eskimo, it is said, will eat as many as 100 little auks at one sitting. This would be more than could be crowded into four frying pans. The little auks live mainly on shrimp, and their meat is said to be very palatable. They lay their eggs among the rocks, to protect them from enemies.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President and Household Are Established in the Black Hills.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT AND MRS. COOLIDGE, two collies, five canaries and all the necessary household attendants are now established for the summer in the South Dakota State Game Lodge, in the Black Hills. And the executive offices of the national government are established in the new high school building at Rapid City, 82 miles away. Even though Mr. Coolidge should not regain the favor of the farmers—and he is not unlikely to—he will certainly have a delightful and restful vacation in surroundings that are entirely to his taste. The lodge is on the shores of a lake surrounded by picturesque mountains, and is so secluded that comparative privacy is assured. The Chief Executive planned to make the automobile trip to Rapid City frequently to attend to the more pressing business of his office.

On his way west the President stopped a few hours in the Calumet region of northwestern Indiana to help in the dedication of Wicker park, the war memorial of Lake county. In his address he spoke of the prosperity and growth of the country in a material way, but he mildly chided the nation for delinquencies.

"In spite of all this progress," he said, "we are still a great distance from what we would like to be. Our delinquencies are sufficient to require us to put forth all our efforts to work toward their elimination." Although our government is sound and our courts are excellent, too many of us disregard the obligations of citizenship by neglecting to vote, and violence and crime are altogether too prevalent. The number who are lacking in religious devotion is altogether too large.

"While we have reached the highest point in material prosperity ever achieved, there is a considerable class of unskilled workers who have not come into full participation of the wealth of the nation."

One of the bursts of applause greeted the President's reference to Col. Charles Lindbergh when he said:

"The ideals which we seek must be practical. We are lavish in our admiration of realities. When one of your Western young men is the first to fly from America to Europe our country hails him with a popular acclaim so spontaneous, so genuine, as to disclose the true values of our national character."

South Dakota as a whole welcomed the President warmly as the special train made its way across the broad prairies, hesitating at the farm centers long enough to give the inhabitants a glimpse of the Chief Executive and his charming wife. The official welcome was staged at Pierre, the capital, where the President and Mrs. Coolidge were prevailed upon to change their program slightly, leaving the train and taking their place at the head of a parade which went through cheering crowds in the business section. Governor Bulow, Senator Norbeck, Representative Christopherson, committeemen, legislators, newspaper editors, farmers, and business men from all the central section were on hand to greet the President and escort him from town to town.

NEW YORK went completely daffy over Col. Charles Lindbergh when he flew there from Washington. The city gave him a reception never before equalled. As the young master of the air said, it was "the reception of Paris, Brussels, London and Washington rolled into one." Millions of the inhabitants of the metropolis stood in a line stretching from the Battery to Central park as the pretentious parade passed, madly cheering the hero and struggling for opportunity to see him. From all the buildings along the route paper confetti was hurled until it appeared as if the marchers were passing through a heavy snow storm. At the city hall Mayor Walker greeted the colonel as the son of one immigrant to the son of another, and pinned on his coat the city's gold medal of honor; the aviator talked briefly to the throng through the microphone; his mother was called to the front and introduced to the roaring crowd, and the procession resumed its march to Central park. At the Eternal Light at Madison square there was a pause while Lindbergh laid a wreath at the base of the memorial. At the Mall the colonel was met by Governor Smith who presented him with the state medal of valor.

Colonel Lindbergh spent most of the week in New York and was entertained extensively, though he found some time to rest. Early Thursday morning he unexpectedly flew down to Washington and returned to New York in a few hours with his transatlantic plane, and on Friday he flew in it for St. Louis, where another rousing welcome was accorded him lasting three days. Lindbergh says he hopes to visit many American cities in the "Spirit of St. Louis" for the purpose of boosting commercial aviation. To date he has signed only one contract—for a book describing his flight to Paris.

Chamberlain and Levine spent a jolly week in Germany waiting for their plane to be repaired. They visited various cities and were handsomely entertained. Commander Byrd had his Fokker monoplane America all ready at New York for a flight to Europe with Bert Acosta as his companion but was delayed by adverse weather conditions. Hope for the rescue of Nungesser and Coli sprang up when reports came that flares had been seen in the wilds of northern Quebec, but unhappily the stories were soon discredited. Commander de Pinedo, Italian "four continent flyer," completed his tour, returning from the Azores to Italy via Portugal and Spain.

Lieuts. F. B. McConnell and C. Anderson of the army were killed during air maneuvers at Langley field when their plane crashed and burned.

SOVIET RUSSIA'S rage over the murder of her ambassador to Poland, following the break with Great Britain, was enough to cause grave concern to European statesmen, and it was aggravated when the Polish court before which the assassin of Voikof was tried found the youth, Boris Kowode, guilty but sentenced him to life imprisonment instead of death and requested the President of Poland to commute the sentence to fifteen years. Kowode's lawyers turned the trial into one of bolshevism and its terrorist activities rather than one of the slayer. The Soviet rulers seem actually to be trying to intimidate the enemies of communism, for they are executing scores of men many of whom they accused of being spies in the pay of other governments, and then gloatingly announcing the executions to the world. They also decided to exile many thousands to Siberia. The Russian territorial army reserves, numbering some 300,000, usually called out for three weeks' practice, have been notified they are to stay in the service four months, and as most of them were being concentrated along the Polish frontier Poland was frankly alarmed. Members of the League of Nations council, which met in Geneva, considered taking formal collective action denouncing Russian communistic propaganda abroad, but abandoned the plan at the request of Poland.

THE league council discussed the prospects of the projected disarmament conference and decided the second reading of the preparatory plan should be held early in November. Only Herr Stresemann, German foreign minister, criticized the lack of progress.

"I regret the inability to advance a solution for the problem, and even if the second reading does not result in failure, a solution seems delayed to the distant future. The convenant of the league says all nations must reduce their armaments," insisted Herr Stresemann, voicing the German government's thesis that if the rest of the powers cannot agree to reduce their armament to the level imposed on Germany by the Versailles treaty, then Germany should be permitted to arm herself up to the same general standard as her European neighbors.

Germany notified the ambassadors' council that the forts on its eastern frontier had been demolished, as required, and demanded that the Rhineland occupational forces be reduced accordingly. France agreed to this provided Marshal Foch be permitted to examine the forts and found the German statement to be correct.

WHILE negotiations for a compromise between Chiang Kai-Shek, Chang Tso-lin and the governor of Shansi province were proceeding, the Nanking Nationalist army continued its advance toward Peking and captured the important city of Haichow near the Shantung border The southerners, according to reports, "committed robbery and outrage in wholesale fashion." Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang has pledged allegiance to the Hankow faction of the Nationalists and has been given command of its drive on Peking. Roger Green of the Rockefeller Foundation at Peking, accompanied by 29 physicians and nurses, has gone to Hankow to help in the care of some 12,000 wounded soldiers gathered in hospitals from the Honan battlefields. Antagonism against the Japanese is steadily increasing in southern China and it is still feared they are planning to reoccupy Shantung province in order to prevent the Nationalists from driving out Chang Tso-lin. Representatives of the Japanese communities in Manchuria have sent to Tokyo demands that the government prevent the civil war from entering Manchuria and Mongolia and that all Japanese investments and nationals there be protected

IN THE recent elections in the Irish Free State the government secured 46 seats, a net loss of 7, in the Dail Eireann; Fianna Fail (De Valera's party), 44; the Sinn Fein, 5; Labor, 22; Farmers, 11; Independent, 14; National league, 8, and Independent Republicans, 2. President Cosgrave will have only seven fewer seats than at the dissolution. It is believed he will annex ten members from the farmers and independents and be stronger than before the election. Eamon De Valera says his 44 will refuse to take the oath of allegiance to the king. If they hold out, another election is probable.

WEDNESDAY was a busy day for Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury. He took in almost $400,000,000 in income and other tax payments, due on the completion of the second quarter of the calendar year. He took in about $80,000,000, paid by the debtor nations of Europe on American war loans. He sold $249,598,300 of new treasury 3¾ per cent bonds. Then he paid off maturing short term securities aggregating $378,000,000 and paid $70,000,000 in interest on various issues of the Liberty bonds.

The receipts went to swell the $600,000,000 surplus for the fical year expiring June 30, next, and the retirement of Liberty bonds and refinancing involved in the transactions means the reduction in the annual interest on the public debt many millions of dollars.

Great Britain turned in $67,575,000, which was its ninth semi-annual payment of interest. France paid $10,000,000 "on account," Italy paid $5,000,000; and smaller payments were made by the other debtor nations.

NOBLES of the Mystic Shrine gathered in great numbers at Atlantic City for their annual meeting, and 100,000 wearers of the fez took part in a mammoth night parade along the five-mile Boardwalk that was said to be the finest procession ever seen in the resort city. Clarence M. Dunbar of Palestine temple, Providence, R. I., was elevated to the office of imperial potentate to succeed David M. Crossland.

THIRTY-EIGHT of the 203 cadets graduated from the West Point Military academy last week have requested service with the air corps, the War department has announced. Under a department interpretation of the air corps act, commissions cannot be granted in time of peace to any person not a qualified flyer and the 38 cadets, therefore, will undergo training before receiving the second lieutenant commissions bestowed upon them at graduation.

Review—Life and Letters of Peter (Read I Peter 5:1-11).

GOLDEN TEXT—Follow me and I will make you fishers of men.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Lessons from Peter's Life.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter in the School of Christ

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Peter as a Leader.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Peter's Life and Work.

At best, suggestions as to the method of review have only a relative value. The individuality of the teacher, the aptitude of the pupils and the department of the school are factors which determine the best method to use. Three methods are suggested, the first two of which are in part taken from "Peloubet's Notes."

I. Peter's Characteristics.

Among the outstanding characteristics of Peter may be mentioned impetuosity, leadership, courage, cowardice, changeableness, outspokenness. These traits and others are to be found in the quarter's lessons.

II. Biographical.

The features to be stressed in this plan are Peter's early life, discipleship, sad fall, restoration, preaching at Pentecost, imprisonment, writings.

III. The Summary Method.

Lesson for April 3.

Jesus had first called Peter and John to become His disciples. Afterwards he called them to become fishers of men. He first calls sinners to come to Him for salvation and then calls those who are saved to serve Him in winning others to Christ.

Lesson for April 10.

Following the feeding of the five thousand, some were disposed to compel Christ to be king. Seemingly to prevent the disciples from entanglement in this movement He sent them across the sea. From His place of prayer in the mount He saw them struggling against the storm on Lake Galilee and went to their rescue, speaking words of comfort. At his invitation Peter walked on the water, but when he took his eyes off of the Savior he began to sink.

Lesson for April 17.

To give the disciples a clear conception of His person, to prepare them for the dark hour of the cross, Jesus put to them two questions, "Who do men say I am?" (R. V.) "Who say ye that I am?" (R. V.) One's conception of Christ's person determines his character and his service.

Lesson for April 24.

To revive the crushed hopes of the disciples and to show them how the kingdom was to be realized, Christ was transfigured before them.

Lesson for May 1.

Peter's downfall began when he refused to hear about the cross. The steps in his downfall were self-confidence, sleeping at the post of duty, lack of prayer, zeal without knowledge, following Christ afar off, warming himself at the enemy's fire, and open denial. The look of Jesus brought him to repentance.

Lesson for May 8.

Upon word by Mary that the Lord's tomb was empty, Peter and John hurriedly made an investigation. After Jesus had shown Himself to be alive by many infallible proofs He recommissioned Peter. Resurrection must be beyond a peradventure before there can be missionary effort.

Lesson for May 15.

Fifty days after Christ ascended the Holy Spirit was poured out. When the promise of the Father was sent the disciples were empowered for witnessing of Christ.

Lesson for May 22.

In the power of the Holy Spirit Peter wrought miracles and witnessed for Christ with such power that great numbers were added unto the church.

Lesson for May 29.

After Pentecost Peter, who had cowered before a Jewish maid and shamefully denied his Lord, witnessed for Christ in spite of persecution.

Lesson for June 5.

In keeping with Christ's command to witness to the ends of the earth, the missionary program had so widened as to include the Gentiles. Cornelius, a prominent Gentile of good reputation among the Jews, was used of God to break down the middle wall of partition.

Lesson for June 12.

Peter was imprisoned for preaching the gospel. A great crisis was upon the church. The church prayed and God sent an angel to deliver Peter.

Lesson for June 19.

Though Christians are sojourners in the earth they have responsibilities as citizens. They should be obedient to the laws of the country.

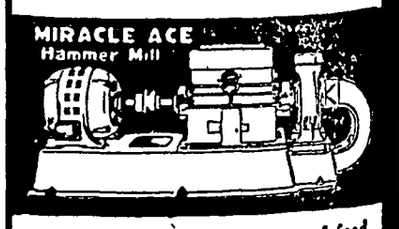
Grind Feed for Money

Own the feed business with this new kind of feed mill. Every community is now, or soon will be demanding feed ground quickly in large quantities and very fine. Medium grinding, done by many kinds of mills, is no longer in demand.



This is the latest form of feed grinder. It combines the cutting action of the attrition mill with the hammering action of the hammer mill.

This mill will grind 100 lbs. of ear corn, oats, rye, barley, alfalfa, or anything grindable to any fineness, with 25% to 50% less power than any other type of grinder.

This saving in power alone makes these mills money makers all over the country. They will give you a better profit grinding feed than any other business in which you can engage on the same amount of capital. There should be one in your community.

Send for free booklet "THE STORY OF A WONDERFUL FEED MILL" which tells you about this mill and the opportunity of making money in the all-year feed business. Complete equipments in capacities from 2,500 to 25,000 per hour, costing from $750 and up. Many mills pay for themselves in a few months.

Still worse was to follow. Caesar, the second in command among the maroons, owned a nondescript black dog of the spaniel type, which ranged over the island as it pleased, and on the very next evening, shortly after dark, we heard, from the woods at the southerly end of the island, a sudden appalling yelping, which ceased almost as abruptly as it began. In the darkness, the sound was positively terrifying, suggesting all kinds of unseen tortures, and Caesar by daylight as brave a man as you could find, refused to go to the rescue of his pet. In the morning we searched for him, but in vain; the dog had vanished as completely as though the earth had swallowed him.

The maid was triumphant; her story was now substantiated, and indeed by this time it did seem as if somebody or something—man or spirit—was haunting the island. Yet realizing the difficulties of exploring the mangrove swamp, we took no action save to be in before nightfall, to lock up the goats and the poultry, and on the ground floor to make sure that door and windows were thoroughly barred.

One thing, however, we did not do. We took no heed of our herd of half-wild cattle, which roamed the island at will. That they also might be attacked never crossed our minds; yet it was on the succeeding evening that another tragedy was added to the list. We had just finished supper; dusk was falling; and Helen and I were debating whether or not we would take our customary stroll, which we had abandoned since the night of the hurricane. She had asked me whether I really believed there was danger, when her question was suddenly answered for her by a great bellowing of cattle. Running to the door, I could see six or eight of them, barely visible in the dim light, dashing at full tilt toward the house, as if they felt that here at least they might find protection. I seized my gun and went out, wishing greatly that Cudjo, the leader of the maroons, were with me, but there had been much talk of a rebellion among the slaves and he had gone up the river, the day before, on a scouting trip, to see what he could learn in the way of news. Caesar and Bill, however, were already on hand, like myself, with their rifles in their hands. The three of us stood close together, casting doubtful glances at the black shadow of the woods. Caesar, usually brave as a lion, for once hesitated. "What think?" he asked me.

To tell the truth, I should have been very glad to retire into the house, but since he had appealed to me in this way, I did not wish to be quoted afterward as having counseled prudence. And, as a matter of fact, to retreat, like frightened childen, because of a stampede of cattle in the darkness, appeared the very height of cowardice. And so, with a resolution I was far from feeling, and with what was, I fear, that species of false bravery which comes from the dread of being thought afraid, I replied: "I think we ought to go ahead. Come on, boys, and we'll clear up this mystery for good and all."

Thus appealed to, two old fighters like Bill and Caesar could not well demur, and at once, as the light was each instant growing dimmer, we walked rapidly toward the border of the trees. At the edge of the thicket we halted, cocked our rifles, made sure that our knives and pistols were in readiness; then, spreading out a little, slowly advanced among the trees. There were no sounds anywhere, save the faint tread of our own footsteps; and I was beginning to feel renewed courage and rather to pride myself upon my decision when we suddenly emerged into a little clearing, and as we did so I gave an uncontrollable start. I could not have said that I had seen anything, yet, fanciful as it may sound, I had a feeling that some one had been in that clearing but a moment ago; and in spite of myself I felt my hair actually bristling on my scalp. At the same moment Caesar, whose eyes were as keen as those of a lynx, gave vent to a low exclamation. At once I hastened to his side, and found him and Bill peering intently toward the farther side of the clearing.

"Look like one of cattle," said Caesar. "Maybe somebody hide. We dare go?"

By this time, though I am far from making the statement boastfully, I had become wrought up to such a pitch of excitement that now, instead of being half frightened to death, I was in a state of absolute recklessness. With a terse "Come on!" I advanced, taking advantage of the faint light that still illumined the clearing, though all beyond its boundaries was dark and silent as the grave.

I did not wait to see whether or not I was followed, for as I say I was fairly beside myself with the tension of the whole affair; but, as a matter of fact Caesar and Bill were close at my heels, and in a moment we were standing by the silent heap upon the ground.

It was one of the cattle; no doubt of that. It lay in a strangely contorted position, with forelegs extended as if in a last desperate effort at flight, and with head thrown back, as it seemed to me, unnaturally far. I stooped to see if the animal were really dead, and then, in my mingled emotions and horror, uttered a cry, for its strange and unnatural attitude was now explained; the heifer's neck had been broken, its throat was torn and bleeding terribly, so that the ground about was soaked with blood. With courage suddenly evaporated, I threw a terrified glance at the forbidding blackness of the woods. Surely this was not the work of human hands, and at the moment I could have sworn that I saw something moving in the trees and heard the snapping of a twig. It was enough. Thoroughly panic-stricken, all three of us dashed headlong across the clearing and through the woods beyond; nor did we stop there, but kept on running until we were once more within a stone's throw of the house. Then, indeed, we pulled up, and gazed at one another, not, I think, ashamed of ourselves, but thoroughly demoralized and at a loss to account for this new tragedy.

We found McAllister eagerly awaiting us, but there was little we could do to relieve his anxiety. For a long time we talked. McAllister held stubbornly to the theory that this was the work of men who came from the mainland in a boat; yet this seemed hardly possible, for besides the strong probability of our seeing them there was the added puzzle of the heifer with its broken neck and bleeding throat. But to this McAllister answered that the animal's neck was broken by its fall. Caesar and Bill laid the whole blame on evil spirits, in some way conjured hither by the murdered obi man, possibly all the way from Africa. I, for my part, was frankly puzzled, and could suggest no theory at all.

With morning, and the cheerful sunshine, the events of the night seemed incredible, and it was without fear that we started to revisit the grove. To my relief, Cudjo had returned from his scouting trip, reporting all quiet among the slaves, and he, disposed to ridicule our story, went with us to the woods. His face, as he bent over the body of the heifer, was a study, for he was a man of unusual intelligence, and the superstitious imaginings of his race meant nothing at all to him. Yet while he discarded the idea of anything supernatural, he was at a loss to tell who had done the deed. The heifer's neck interested him immensely, and over it he shook his head.

"This afternoon," he announced, "we hunt island. All men, all armed, all keep together. If nothing, then come evening, I watch here. I and one other man, if get him."

I admired his courage and his decision, and felt that with him as a companion I was ready to take the risk. But when I volunteered he shook his head. "Master no let you," he said decisively. "Think too much danger Master no let me, if tell him. So no tell him. No get other man, come alone."

But this doubt of getting another man stung Caesar, in spite of his belief in ghosts. "I go," he announced quietly, and Cudjo nodded, well pleased.

That afternoon, with the consent of Andrew McAllister, we made careful preparations and explored, as thoroughly as we could, the mangrove swamp, with the exception of one particularly tangled spot to the westward of the house, which McAllister promised to make his special care. When we wended our way homeward, without results, we felt tolerably certain that it was not in the swamp that our foe was lurking. But where then on the island could he conceal himself? The treetops, indeed, would serve, but their smooth trunks rose, without a branch, for many feet, and we had only to stand and look upward to know that the most skillful of us could not scale them. No, the mystery remained unsolved, and its shadow cast a gloom over the entire household.

Nor did I, to tell the truth, feel entirely easy in my mind over Cudjo and Caesar; yet they were both mature men, expert and resourceful, and I did not dare to offend them by informing McAllister of their plan. Fortunately for its success, McAllister retired early, and watching, not without anxiety, from the doorway, I saw the two figures emerge from their quarters and melt silently into the darkness. For some time, indeed, I waited outside, half wishing to go, unbeknown, to their assistance, and to take up a position near them in case they needed reinforcements. But after an hour had passed, and no sound broke the stillness of the night, I went in, and was soon sleeping soundly.

I do not know what woke me. It may have been a pure coincidence, or it may have been through some mysterious agency which we do not wholly understand, but in an instant I was broad awake. It was perhaps an hour before daybreak, I calculated, and feeling that Cudjo would no longer disapprove my coming, I decided to dress, steal out and join them in the woods, to hear the story of their vigil. As I left the house, a shadow from the maroon quarters joined me, and I was not sorry to recognize Big Bill, with the rifle in his hand. His face looked troubled and anxious, and when I asked him why he was abroad so early, I discovered that he had been awakened in the same strange manner as myself. Evidently, too, he felt that it foreboded evil, for he muttered apprehensively, "Something bad happen soon."

We had traversed perhaps half the distance to the woods when of a sudden, and the more dreadful because without warning, there arose on the morning air a most frightful shriek, high-pitched, heartrending, the scream of a man in agony. Then came the sharp report of a rifle, and a second later an imploring cry rang out, twice repeated, "Help! Help! Oh, God—" and then absolute silence. It was too much for overwrought nerves; coming as the climax of a series of lesser misadventures, it was indescribably terrifying, and I felt no surprise as I saw Bill turn and fairly take to his heels. And though I did not follow his example, I take no credit to myself; I would gladly have done so had not pride prevented; and stubbornly, with teeth set and heart hammering against my ribs, I pressed on toward the woods, thankful that at last a faint light was beginning to show around me. If I was to die, I wished to meet death face to face, not to be struck down in the dark.

I reached the edge of the clearing without mishap, and, peering forth, knew instantly that the worst had happened. In the center of the glade, face downward, lay the body of Cudjo, a little nearer, just on the edge of the clearing, a head and shoulders, projecting from the undergrowth, betrayed the body of Caesar. A hasty examination destroyed the last vestige of hope—both men were beyond all aid. Caesar, I judged, had been struck down from behind with awful force; while it was only too evident that Cudjo had met his death by the same hands that had slain the hapless heifer. I felt my brain going; never before had I believed in vampires or warlocks, yet now I did, and for an instant I was actually convinced that here was the work of some ghostly visitor from beyond the grave.

Then, in a flash of reason, I somehow regained my power of control. We had searched the island; nothing was there. This deed had happened within a few moments; if done by visitors from the mainland, they could not yet have escaped. As fast as my legs would carry me, I dashed through the strip of woods that led to the seaward point; and there—I could have shouted at the sight of it—there was a canoe of cottonwood, its single occupant making his paddle fly. It was light enough for me to see that he wore a scarlet handkerchief about his head, and even in the dim light I had the impression that he was not a negro but a white man. I threw my rifle to my shoulder, aimed at the base of the man's neck, and pressed the trigger. My aim was true, for at the report he half leaped to his feet, dropping his paddle and clutching at the air, then plunged over the side, upsetting the canoe in his fall, and floated, struggling feebly, but without, as it seemed to me, any real notion of what he was doing. With a feeling of relief that this mysterious murderer was at last laid low, I started to run to the spot where the boats lay moored, but throwing a hasty glance over my shoulder, I stopped in my tracks, for even as I looked I saw his body rise half out of the water as if impelled by some force from beneath the waves, then swiftly and silently disappear from sight, to rise no more. I needed no explanation; some one of the huge sharks that haunted the lagoon had secured a meal, and the identity of the mysterious murderer would never become known.

The effect of the affair on McAllister was remarkable. The solving of the mystery lifted an enormous weight from his spirits. My killing of the marauder in the canoe especially pleased him; I was in the highest favor; and again and again he praised my skill with the rifle. "What a gift!" he would say admiringly. "What a bonny gift!" And again, "Where might I be now, if I hadna written you to come and join me?"

He was so pleased, indeed, that I had not the heart to impart to him the doubts that still remained in my mind, for the more I thought about it the less I could arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. That this mysterious visitor was the murderer seemed plain; and yet, if it was against our household that he had designs, why had he slain the dog? Why had he slaughtered the heifer? What possible object was there in thus alarming our garrison and putting us on our guard? The theory which I at last adopted as the most probable was that this was a madman, seized with some blood lust, and prowling about in the darkness, like a beast of prey, to gratify his murderous frenzy.

For twenty-four hours quiet reigned. Then, at breakfast, Helen told us that her maid had, during the night, been almost frightened to death. She had awakened in the darkness, had heard a faint scraping noise outside her room, and while she had lain there, quaking at these cautious, hardly audible sounds, something—she was sure of it—had peered in at the window. It was, she thought, a large man with very broad shoulders; she had screamed, and immediately the visitor had vanished. Of course none of us took this seriously, for almost all the blacks are imaginative to the highest degree. So instead of allowing ourselves to become disturbed, we heard the story with a smile.

Thus the next night came—sultry, unbearably hot, with a high moon peering occasionally through drifting clouds. For some time I tried to sleep, but finally, overcome by wakefulness, I determined to resort to my expedient of the rope; and slipping on my lightest clothing I armed myself, dropped noiselessly to the ground, and was just starting to walk away when I heard a noise as if of a door closing, as though some one were entering or leaving the house. Flattening myself against the wall, I waited, and presently a figure came into view, not, needless to say, that of a ghost or demon, but the bent and commonplace form of McAllister, carrying a spade in his hand.

I could scarcely believe my eyes. What new phase of the mystery was this? Evidently McAllister was impelled by some motive more direct than that of mere sleeplessness, for he proceeded, with a swift and certain step, toward the mangroves. And suddenly it flashed over me. This was the spot he had examined himself—and from which he had excluded the rest of us—on the day when we had searched the island. As cautiously as possible, I waited until he had disappeared; then stole hastily after him.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Life's End Sometimes Welcomed as Friend

I went in where he sat groaning beside his fire on a warm spring day, and I said, "What makes you do that, grandfather."

"Do what?"

"Groan like that."

"Groan?" he said. "When did I groan?"

"Just now. For that matter, you do it dozens of times a day."

"No!" he said, and he seemed surprised. "Do I? I think you must be mistaken." Then he looked dreamily at his fire for a moment, seeming to forget both me and my question. "Oh, ho, ho, ho, ha, hum!" he said.

"There! You did it just then, grandfather. Didn't you know it?"

"I believe I did groan then," he said. "Perhaps you're right. Yes, I suppose you must be."

"Don't you feel well?"

"Well? Yes, I'm not ill."

"Then why do you groan so often?"

"It must be," he answered thoughtfully, "it must be because I'm not dead."

That startled me. "Good gracious!" I cried. "You don't want to die, do you?"

I might as well have been shocked by a starving man's wanting food. My grandfather was a gentle mannered soul; but I think he may have been tempted to call me an idiot.

"Don't I, though?" he said testily. "What do you imagine I want to stay like this for? Eyes almost useless, teeth gone, hearing bad, legs bad, back bent, fingers too warped and shaky to serve me—and all of me useless to any one, to myself most of all. 'Don't want to die!' What on earth do you mean?"—From "The Golden Age" by Booth Tarkington.

Daddy Was Too Smart

It was little Barbara's first experience with tunnels and her father who was on the train with her said in fun, "Now watch, dear; papa's going to make a sign and it will get dark, but in a little while the light will come back." Immediately the train entered the tunnel, and the child was deeply impressed by exhibition of her father's magic power. But the few minutes' time semed interminable to Barbara; it semed as if it would never end, and at length she burst out in dismay, "My gracious, daddy; now just look what you've done!"—Boston Transcript.

ANSWERED:

three vital questions you have asked about used car allowances

1 "What is my present car worth?"

Answer: Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value: that is what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

2 "Why should dealers in different makes of cars offer me allowances that differ materially?"

Answer: Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

3 "Is it true that the largest allowance offered means the best deal for me?"

Answer: The largest allowance is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not. An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car. Remember that after all you are making a purchase, not a sale.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS WILL SPEND WEEK AT CLEAR LAKE

Girls Enjoy Visit From Former Guardian Of Local Tribe

The Ta-Ta-Pochon Camp Fire Girls held their meeting in the Park Friday evening. It was a pleasure to have the Guardian of the former Iroquois Camp Fire Girls with us. Mrs. Wiles told us of some things the Ames Camp Fire Girls were doing. It was all very interesting.

Most of the evening was spent in making plans for summer camping. We have decided to rent a cottage at Clear Lake about August 1. The Camp Fire Girls about this time last year were at Clear Lake enjoying a four day visit at the Koerner Cottage. This year we are planning o make our stay about three days longer. We are all looking forward to a happy and noisy week at the Lake.

Our next meeting will be July 5 at the home of Reva Elder. We are to meet at the Quandt restaurant at 2:00 o'clock for a pleasant hike out there.

The Nation's Birthday

Next Monday will mark the 151st birth day of the Declaration of Independence. On July 1, 1776, the United States of America "first saw the light" in Independence Hall, Philadelphia. On this date was written the Declaration of Independence, a document written for all men and for all times. It is a document that will live through the ages.

Measured by the history of the world, United States is just a kiddie in kilts. But, measured by human accomplishments and successes in effort, more has been done in the United States since July 4, 1776, than in all the rest of the world, in all the rest of hisory.

The Fourth of July still thrills the American heart. Patriotism is not dead, nor dying. The principals and traditons of Amercan democracy continue to be cherished by loyal millions of men and women devoted to the noblest ideals of life.

It does the nation good to assemble in celebration on Independence Day. It is good for the children. It brings them close to the Flag nad its memories. The day makes us better citizens. It is a day for enthusiasm —for the firing of guns, the exploding of fireworks, the blaring of bands and for loud hurrahs by the people.

Fly your banners, fire your crackers, listen to your orators on July 4 for they tell the story of a free people, risen to be of the mightiest power, politically, economically, spiritually, or intellectually, the world knows Just because they are all earnestly, sincerely, steadfastly devoted to the highest of ideals, man's liberty under God.

We salute the Stars and Stripes!

DEMONSTRATION TEAMS

The girls clubs of Hancock county are working on their demonstrations at this time. Miss Ramer is in the county assisting them. Every club will develop teams and these will compete for the county championship at the County Achievement Day The champion team will be sent to the North Iowa Fair and the Iowa State Fairs to compete with other counties. Miss Ramer will be in the county helping with this work until July 2. She will be here again from August 8 to 13, at which time the Achievement Day will be held and the team selected

There are two nearby places that bid Klemme folks welcome on the Fourth A big celebration will be on at the Fair Grounds at Britt that should attract many Hancock county folks A fine program has been arranged as will be found in this issue of the Times. The other near by place is Bayside where a big celebration is promised by Manager Ritz He says there will be something doing all the time. Others will perhaps have more quiet celebrations and family dinners at home or picnics at the lakes or woods.

Mr and Mrs. Ed. Jacobs and Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Trumbell left early Sunday morning on a camping trip through Wisconsin and Minnesota. Their first stop was at Madison, Wis., where they intended to visit Sunday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Jim Elder. From there they would go to The Dells, go p nonth and take the lake drive to Dultuh, thence to Hibbing, International Falls and perhaps Canada.

Mrs. Lloyd Lau went to Garner Tuesday evening to spend a few days visiting at the Charles Hoeft home.

Harvey Sweigard, a former Klemme man and at one time cashier of the State Savings Bank and later postmaster at Garner for about ten years, and recently with the state banking department, has been elected cashier of the Hawkeye, Iowa, Citizens Savings Bank, a newly organized institution His many old Klemme friends congratulate him.

Quite a few Klemme people had wedding anniversaries the past week in Klemme. June 25th Editor and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson were married eight years. Mr and Mrs. John N. Day celebrated their twentieth anniversary the 26th, and Mr. and Mrs. Jennings Anderson their third, also the 26th. June 27th Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Jost were married four years.

L. G. Gimer, manager of the Farmers Elevator and Joe E. Johnson drove to Rochester, Minn., last Wednesday. Mr. Johnson returned to Klemme Friday via. railroad but Mr. Gimer remained at Rochester where he will go through the Mayo clinic. For some time he has had serious trouble with is eyes and he hopes to find relief at Rochester.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus, Wm. Keraus and family and C. G. Waterman and family all drove to Pilot Knob Sunday where they met Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Mitchell, of Swea City and all of Mr. Mitchell's sisters and their families. The occasion of this big gathering was to celebrate T. F.'s birthday and likewise surprise him.

Mrs. J. Gruetzmacher and Mrs. P. M. Griesemer returned from their visit at Lime Springs where they have been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gruetzmacher. They also visited with Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Schaefer at Marble Rock.

MOONLIGHT MYSTERY NEXT ON LEAGUE PROGRAM

Two More Have Signed Up For Trip To Okoboji Institute

A "Moonlight Mystery" party is the next event on the social calendar of the Epworth League of the Methodist church here. The Fourth Department, which is in charge of all social affairs, is not revealing any particulars in regard to the plans, however. It will be held "Somewhere in Iowa," the first week in July.

The spirit of Okoboji is at work, for two more have signified their intentions to be present at the Institute there July 11-18. A cottage has been secured, taking away to a great extent the only unpleasant feature of camp life—dampness. It is not yet too late to join the Okoboji delegation, and the local chapter plans to pay a part of the registration fee of those who go

In keeping with the spirit of the season, next Sunday night's meeting will be of a patriotic nature. Gladys Wilson and Harvey Nelson will lead discussion of the subject: "My Country." The meeting will be held on the church lawn, being the second of a series of open-air meetings. Clarice Wellemeyer and Reva Elder had charge of last Sunday night's meeting. Leona Poort gave a report on the convention held at Clear Lake last week. It was attended by eight from the local League.

HOME FURNISHING

The fourth lesson in the Home Furnishing course will be completed before the county Fair in order that the townships may have the material from this lesson to put in their exhibit Two or three training schools will be given during the week of August 8 to 13 and the balance during the week of September 5 to 10. Plans are being made in many of the townships to put on home furnishing exhibits at the fair

DON'T FORGET TO VACCINATE HOGS

Hog cholera destroys more hogs in the United States than all other diseases combined. The many losses have reached many millions of dollars yearly. Last year the outbreak was more prevalent and severe than usual. Just what was the cause of this serious outbreak? The outbreak tends to run in cycles. After a serious outbreak, people will vacinate and then after a year of small cholera loss they tend to quit. This was what happened last year. People quit vacinating and got caught.

Vacinating has been given a thorough test and a safe and sound measure of insurace against hog cholera. It is better to form a habit of vacinating every year.

Vacation Time

The days grow warmer and brighter. Tired folks are beginning to think of and prepare for the annual vacation—the fortunate ones are. It is the season when the fields and streams, the mountains and the ocean call. We hear the call, and heed it, those of us who can. Relaxation means renewed life and vigor and joy. It is in the blood, this ancient calling which lures us away from work and duties in the busy avenues of necessity. We shall never outgrow it, and God forbid that we should.

OBITUARY OF MRS. BARBARA REICHARDT

Mrs. Barabara Reichardt, nee Ballier, was born on the 2nd day of February, 1856, in Wittenberg, Germany. She remained at the home of her parents until the year 1884 June 12th when she was married to Mr. Fred Reichardt whose home was in the vicinity of Wittenberg. Two daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs Reichardt while in Germany.

In 1888 the family migrated to America and found a home at Garner, Iowa. For several years they lived in German Township and then bought the farm, that has been the Reichardt home ever since.

Since the death of Mr. Reichardt Mrs. Reichardt has been living with her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Wenz.

Mrs. Reichardt had been ailing for the last few years. She died Wednesday at 8:30 o'clock in the evening, June 22nd, 1927 at the age of 71 years, 4 months and 20 days. Surviving her and mourning her death are two daughters, Mrs. Wenz and Mrs. Lippo Wessels; eight grand children and three sisters who are living in Germany.

Funeral services were held at the Klemme Reformed Church Sunday afternoon with Rev Grosshuesch in charge. Burial was made at the Klemme Cemetery.

Card Of Thanks

We sincerely thank all those who so kindly assisted us in our bereavement. Mr. and Mrs Wm. Wenz, Lippo Wessels and family, Mrs. Joe Ptacek.

A Valuable Lady

Mrs. Coolidge is worth a million dollars to the republican party, says a woman political leader. The first lady's tact and gracious manner, she explains, have won unnumbered friends. She's just right about it. Regardless of party, we believe that nearly everyone in the country thinks that Mrs. Coolidge is just all that a first lady of this land could be.

Coffee Drinkers

Coffee is still the favorite beverage of America. An average of 500 cups for every man, woman and child was the country's ration last year.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Two inspiring audience greeted the speaker, Mrs. Gauger, last Sunday morning. Her address was appreciated by many.

The impressive memorial service at the cemetery was fairly well attended and deserving tribute was paid to those having labored before us

Next Sunday we expect to have all services regular, it being the Sunday nearest our National Birthday, this will be in our thinking in at least one service in song and sermon.

The Epworth League will hold another open air service at the regular hour which is 7:15.

The Junior League has had these open air services for some time with fine success. Their regular meeting will be held again next Sunday at 2:30 p. m.

The Algona District Preachers picnic was held at Goldfield on Wednesday of this week.

Speaking of picnics, we are pleased to note that the Liberyt congregation is planning apicic for the 4th We are unable to give the location at this time but it will be at one of the nearby lakes. Definite announcement will be made next Sunday.

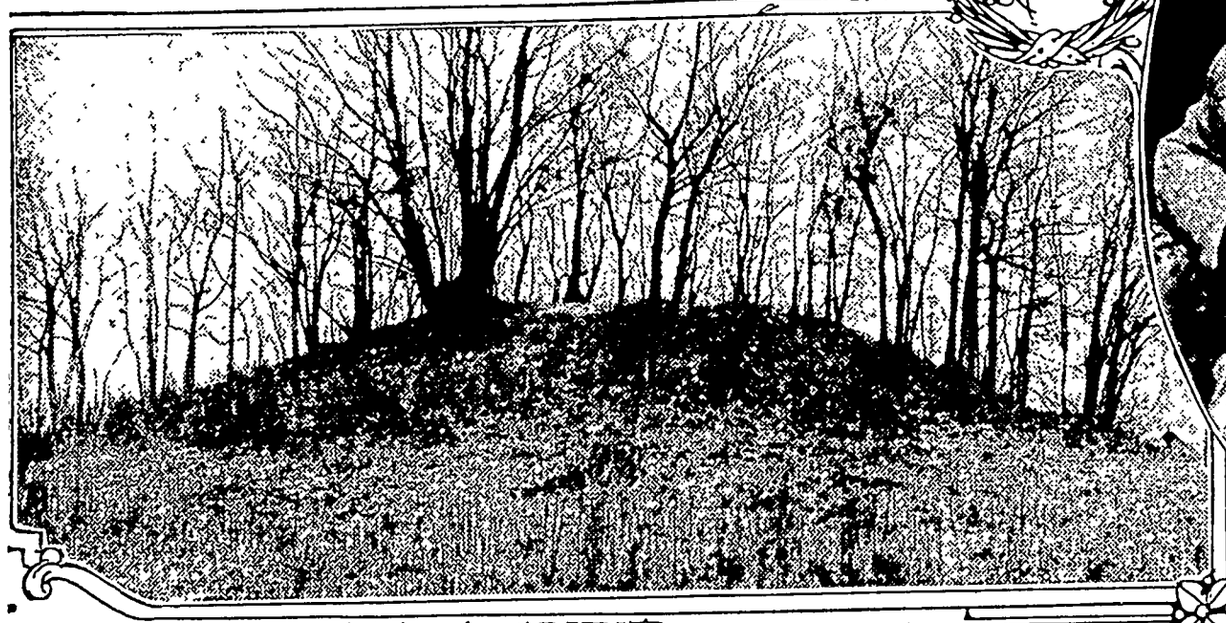
FIVE CARS LIVE STOCK SHIPPED SATURDAY NIGHT

Klemme Shipping Association Ships Three Cars; Larsen Ships Two

Live stock shipments from Klemme for the week-end totaled five car loads, consisting of four car loads of hogs and one car load of mixed stock, cattle and hogs.

The Klemme Shipping Association, of which Joe E. Johnson is the manager, shipped three car loads. C. A. Larsen, local stock buyer, had the balance of the Saturday night shipment.

To Honor a Great Fur Trader



INDIAN MOUND WHERE ASHLEY IS BURIED

JAMES BRIDGER

THE TRAPPERS' RENDEZVOUS

JIM BECKWOURTH

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF PRESENT plans are carried out, the state of Missouri will soon pay long-neglected honor to one of her greatest citizens, Gen. William Henry Ashley. For nearly a hundred years Ashley's body has lain in an unmarked grave in an Indian mound near the confluence of the Lamine and Missouri rivers in Cooper county, his name and fame almost forgotten. Now, thanks to the initiative of a Missouri country editor, Edgar Nelson of the Boonville (Mo.) Advertiser, whose suggestion has been taken up by the Boonville D. A. R. chapter, a movement has been started to locate his grave and place there a memorial in keeping with the importance of his services, not only to the state, but to the whole country as well.

For there was a time when Ashley was a national figure even though it was then little suspected, perhaps, by his fellow-Missourians and even though his significance in the annals of the American frontier has been unappreciated until comparatively recent years. Virginians can claim with Missourians an equal pride in his achievements for he was born in Powhattan county in that state in 1785. At the age of eighteen he came to Missouri territory, or upper Louisiana, as it was then called, and settled first at Cape Girardeau. He was even then a man of considerable education and property and added to the latter by acquiring a large land grant which included what is now Jackson, the county seat of Cape Girardeau county. Ashley next moved to Potosi where he engaged in the manufacture of gunpowder, and later to St. Louis, where he was one of the promoters of the old Bank of St. Louis.

During the War of 1812 Ashley, whose forceful personality had apparently impressed itself upon the community, was made a brigadier general of the state militia. Later when Missouri entered the sisterhood of states he was to become her first lieutenant-governor and was barely beaten in the race for governor by Frederick Bates. In 1831 he was elected as a Whig to the Twenty-second congress, to fill out the unexpired term of Spencer Pettis, who was killed in a duel with Maj. Thomas Biddle, and he was re-elected to the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth congresses. But it is Ashley the pioneer, the fur trader, the explorer, and the patron of other explorers, rather than Ashley, the holder of state political office, whose importance extends far beyond state boundary lines, makes him a national figure and gives to the proposed memorial nation-wide interest.

From the earliest days the fur trade has been an important factor in American history. During the long series of Colonial wars England and France wrestled for the control of the interior of the North American continent because it was a vast reservoir of valuable furs. The fur trade was one of the contributing factors which brought about the American Revolution and later the contest between British and Americans to determine who would control the fur trade, was again a factor in embroiling the two countries in the troubles which resulted in the War of 1812. In the period of national expansion which followed this war men still thought in terms of beaver, but by this time their eyes were turned to the vast expanse of the trans-Mississippi west. Especially was this true in St. Louis which stood at the gateway to this virgin wilderness and which had been the jumping off place for the Lewis and Clark expedition and for several fur-trading expeditions, such as those headed by Manuel Lisa and Maj. Andrew Henry, who as early as 1809 had trapped the northern Rocky Mountain streams. Fur packs valued at from ten thousand dollars to fifteen thousand dollars had been brought back to St. Louis by various individual trappers and traders and it was plain to see that great opportunities awaited those who went into the business on a large scale.

So with the time ripe, the man with the imagination and business acumen to seize the opportunity was on the scene. On March 20, 1822, the following history-making notice appeared in the Missouri Republican, a St. Louis newspaper:

> To enterprising young men: the subscriber wishes to engage one hundred young men to ascend the Missouri river to its source, there to be employed for one, two or three years. For particulars enquire of Major Andrew Henry, near the lead mines in the county of Washington, who will ascend with and command the party; or of the subscriber near St. Louis.
> Signed, WILLIAM H ASHLEY.

So the Ashley-Henry company or the Rocky Mountain Fur company, as the organization was later to be called, came into existence and brought into the limelight among its 100 "enterprising young men" such names as James Bridger, Etienne Provot, Thomas Fitzpatrick, Milton Sublette, William L. Sublette, James Beckwourth, Edward Rose, Louis Vasquez, Jedediah S. Smith, David E. Jackson and Hugh Glass. There you have a veritable Who's Who of the Missouri fur-trade notables, the "long-haired mountain men immortalized by the brush of Frederic Remington and the pen of John G. Neihardt!

On April 15, 1822, the expedition embarked at St. Louis on keel boats which were to ascend the Missouri to the three forks in Montana, trap the streams on both sides of the Rockies, perhaps penetrate to the mouth of the Columbia river, and return before the expiration of the three-year contract with the men. The expedition was commanded by Major Henry but the adventurous Ashley accompanied it. After a series of adventures with treacherous and thieving Indians and with the even more treacherous river whose floating snags wrecked one boat and caused a loss of $10,000 worth of merchandise, the expedition reached the mouth of the Yellowstone river and decided to halt there for the season. Leaving Henry in charge, Ashley returned by canoe to St. Louis to recruit another trapping party and obtain supplies for the trading activities of the next three years.

So important was this company that to write a history of the fur trade without mentioning it would be another example of playing Hamlet without the melancholy Dane. It was Ashley who established the now famous institution of the trapper's summer rendezvous as a means of conducting the fur trade. The summer rendezvous was an annual gathering of trappers and Indians where took place not only those affairs of barter but also Homeric scenes of drinking, carousing, fighting and primitive love-making between white men and red maidens—the saga stuff of which Neihardt has made such good use. The personality of Ashley was so indelibly stamped upon the fur trade of that period that after a time "Ashley Beaver" became a trade mark of the best brand of beaver fur.

It is Ashley, the explorer and patron of other explorers, however, rather than Ashley, the fur trader, who is most entitled to a national memorial. This is because he was the leader of the first overland expedition to the Pacific coast by a different route to that followed in general by Lewis and Clark. According to Harrison Clifford Dale of the University of Wyoming in his book "The Ashley-Smith Explorations and Discovery of a Central Route to the Pacific, 1822-1829":

"The expedition of William Henry Ashley in 1824-1825 up to the South Platte across what is now northern Colorado, in the dead of winter, over the continental divide, and through the perilous canyons of Green river in rudely constructed boats, and finally still further westward to the vicinity of the Great Salt lake, forms the first stage in the discovery and utilization of the famous overland route to California. From the Interior Basin in 1826, Jedediah Strong Smith pushed on across the deserts of Utah and Nevada and over the Sierras to San Gabriel and San Diego—the first American to reach California by land. Journeying north to the Stanislaus river, he recrossed the Sierras and retraversed the deserts of Utah and Nevada to the Great Salt lake. These two expeditions together form a single enterprise—the discovery of the central and southwestern route to the Pacific."

Ashley decided to sell out his interest in the Rocky Mountain Fur company in 1826. The purchasers were his associates, William L. Sublette, Jedediah Smith and David E. Jackson. The articles of agreement were signed on July 26, 1826, near the Great Salt lake in Utah. Although he retired from active connection with the company, he retained his interest in the fur trade in that he decided to furnish the cannon which is said to have been the first ever taken into the Rocky mountains. This was in 1827 and it was hauled twelve hundred miles by ox-team to be set up on the walls of one of the company's forts.

But to return to Ashley's withdrawal from the fur company which he had made famous—it must have been a dramatic scene when the general stood before the trappers at the rendezvous and bade them good-by in these words:

> Mountaineers and friends: When I first came to the mountains, I came a poor man. You, by your indefatigable exertions, toils, and privations have procured me an independent fortune. With ordinary prudence in the management of what I have accumulated, I shall never want for anything. For this, my friends, I feel myself under great obligations to you. Many of you have served with me personally, and I shall always be proud to testify to the fidelity with which you have stood by me through all danger, and the friendly and brotherly feeling which you have ever, one and all, evinced toward me. For these faithful and devoted services I wish you to accept my thanks; the gratitude that I express to you springs from my heart and will ever retain a lively hold on my feelings.
> My friends! I am now about to leave you, to take up my abode in St. Louis. Whenever any of you return thither, your first duty must be to call at my house, to talk over the scenes of peril we have encountered, and partake of the best cheer my table can afford.
> I now wash my hands of the toils of the Rocky mountains. Farewell mountaineers and friends! May God bless you all!"

On September 20, 1826 there appeared in the Missouri Republican the following news item: "General Ashley and his party have arrived at St. Louis from the Rocky mountains with 125 packs of beaver valued at $60,000." This was the valedictory of Ashley, the adventurer and fur trader. At this point his career as one of Missouri's most distinguished citizens began. He became a large land owner by the purchase of a tract of 30,000 arpens (an old French land measure which varied widely, according to the locality), an area ten miles long and six miles wide. This was the famous "Chouteau-Lamine" claim, given originally by the Osage Indians in 1792 to Maj. Pierre Chouteau, a brother of Auguste Chouteau, one of the founders of St. Louis. Chouteau's title was confirmed by the Spanish lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana, Charles DeHaulte Delassus, in 1799, but when this country came under the flag of the United States by the Louisiana purchase there was some dispute as to whether or not the new rulers would recognize the title. Ashley was then a member of congress and through his efforts the title was confirmed by an act of congress on July 4, 1830. Chouteau later sold the entire tract to Ashley for $1.25 an acre.

Ashley made his home on this grant on a high bluff overlooking the Missouri and Lamine rivers, surrounded by a number of Indian mounds. He was married three times but at the time of his death in 1838 he left no descendants. According to tradition, when he felt that death was near, he walked along the river bluffs looking for a site for his last resting place. His selection was the top of one of the Indian mounds in a bend of the river, overlooking the wide sweep of the Missouri, against whose muddy stream he had set forth upon his "magnificent adventure" and down which had come the boatloads of furs to bring him his vast fortune. There he was buried.

Although the school histories have neglected him, Ashley's deeds have been recorded in Capt. Hiram Chittenden's monumental "History of the American Fur Trade of the Far West," in Professor Dale's scholarly study, in J. Cecil Alter's fine biography, "James Bridger," in Neihardt's sagas and in the writings of that appreciative historian of the Old West, Emerson Hough. Missouri now proposes to erect in his honor a more enduring memorial than the printed page and it is a project in which all Americans can have a sympathetic interest.

A BATH TUB
that tests automobiles

S-P-L-A-S-H through the bath tub goes the General Motors car. Out onto the slippery road it dashes. On go the brakes!

What is the reason for such torture of an innocent automobile?

The answer is that the engineers at the General Motors Proving Ground take nothing for granted. They want to know what happens when a car ploughs through water. They insist too on measuring, with special machines which they have built, just how quickly the car can be stopped and just how much pressure of the foot is required to stop it.

Altogether General Motors has 136 different tests by which cars are proved as they never have been proved before; nothing is left in doubt. All of which means that you are buying doubly assured safety, reliability and comfort when you choose a General Motors car.

Ice "Sinks" Airplane

The great obstacle in the way of transatlantic flight by airplane is ice, the same element that bothers the seamen. It is not that the icebergs get in the way, but when flying through a cold mist the ice forms quickly on the wings and by filling in the curvatures changes the contours. This will sometimes "sink" an airplane in eight minutes.

A saving of $25,000,000 a year in expenditures for the printing of checks, drafts and vouchers is being effected by the adoption of standardized forms.

When Mother is Alarmed!

CONSTIPATION, biliousness, coated tongue, feverish headache, sick stomach---then is the time when mother relies upon Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. "My son had been constipated and bilious since birth. At the age of five he had such an attack of sour stomach and bad breath I had to take him out of kindergarten. It was then I gave him Syrup Pepsin. He improved from the first dose and soon was back to school completely restored and healthier than he had ever been before. It is a great comfort to have a medicine for children in which we can have such implicit confidence." (Name and address sent on request.)

Wins Confidence of Old Folks

Old people are charmed by the gentle, kindly action of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. No pain, gripe or depressing "flushing" of the bowels. Just an easy movement and the fine feeling of restful comfort. There's seldom any real sickness in the home that learns to use Syrup Pepsin at the first sign of coated tongue, fever, biliousness, headache and such troubles due to constipation. Recommended in a million homes. Sold by all druggists.

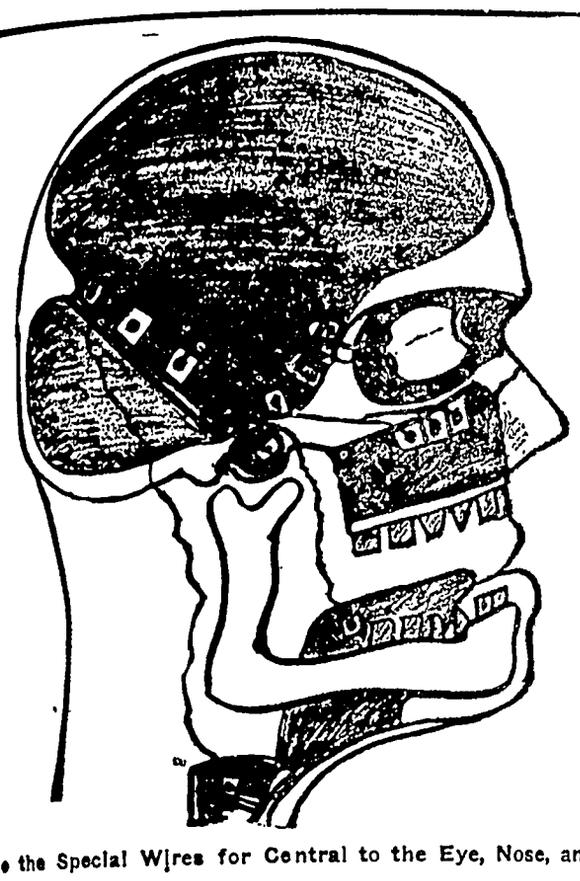
YOURSELF and YOUR BODY

By WILFRED T. GRENFELL

THE FRAMEWORK

A "Central" That Never Says "Excusit Please."



You See the Special Wires for Central to the Eye, Nose, and Throat.

THE first thing about a house is the foundation, isn't it? Well, this isn't going to have a special one except that the whole universe is its foundation. It is far more wonderful. This house has got to run and jump and tumble around—so that is one thing not to worry about.

The next thing is a frame. It is the most wonderful frame ever dreamt of, because once you start it grows larger all by itself.

"It must be upright, for the man is the master of the animals.

"It must bend every way, so as to allow it to move about.

"It must have lots of elastic, so as to save it from shocks, which would break it."

"How can we build a framework?"

"We cannot use a frame of wood, for that would break, or of iron, as that is too heavy. We must use something 'steady' yet awfully strong and lasting. Let's pretend that we are making this framework. Some of the cells we spoke of make just what we want. The substance is called bone. At first it is soft, then, like concrete, it gets hard. But it is far more marvelous than concrete, because it is alive, and the cells go on building and repairing it day and night all the time. They are half water and half solid matter. The solid is mostly chalk and gristle, which is elastic and fibrous. Here is a bone which I put in acid a week ago. All the chalk has gone, and only the gristle is left. See, I can tie it in a knot. We must leave spaces between the flat bones, just as they do in cement roads, to allow for growing. We shall need flat, and round, and all shapes of bones. Some of them will be hollow, to make them lighter, except for a little marrow where the cells live which do the mending, and where new baby soldier cells are born, and live in safety until they are needed in some part of the body."

"Let's begin with the head, father, and the eyes and mouth."

"Very well. Fetch along those flat pieces for the sides and that piece with two plates for the eye-holes for the front, and the piece with a hole for the back, and one with plenty of holes through for the bottom. The one for the side must be good and solid to hold the ear, and also fetch one for each upper jaw, and one for the lower jaw. There are 200 bones in the body, so I won't draw them all. What do we call this bony office?"

"The skull."

"Yes, and what is in it?"

"The brain."

"Right; and what does it do? Why, it orders all the rest of the body about—and interprets all messages. In it are the cells with which we see and hear and speak and smell and think. They are soft, fat cells, making a layer more than four-fifths of an inch thick. Each cell is an electric battery or electric wire, that sends or carries all the telegrams to all parts of the body. There are many millions of these cells, all being charged all the time. There are so many of them that they have practically to stand on the top of each other in our small box and be placed in folds, so as to let it hold still more."

"Won't they get all mixed up, father, when we jump about?"

"Yes, if we don't put in plenty of shelves and then tie them all in their places, and put good oil-bags between them, and then a bone wall to keep them from bruising each other. You see here the cells and the wires on their shelves, and then the strong bag filled with oil round the whole to prevent any banging of the cells as we move our heads.

"Now we will saw the box both ways to show you how it goes. On the bottom are many ridges and holes, and now look at the middle compartment which holds the soft cells when we roll our heads. Isn't it a jolly fine box? It is all ready to wire and put the cells into.

"You see, we use only one-half of our brain. A left-handed boy uses the right side of the brain, and a right handed boy the left. The other side is carefully kept in reserve, so in case an accident happens to one side, then we can learn to use the other.

"It is really a fine set of offices. You see, the cells are outside. The keyboard on which you and I play when we direct the machine is at the front and on the top.

"The balancing key and cells are in the back, on the lower shelf, and all the cells that run the levers and engines are at the back, low down. It is the busiest repeating office in the whole world.

"Some few wires must go through private holes, like the hearing and seeing wires; but nearly all go through that big hole in the back-bone, in a big rope called the cord of the spine. So we must make a few special holes in the floor.

"You see here how the little cords for the nose and the eye and the ear and the tongue go. Cords also go to all the factories, to the heart to keep it pumping, to the lungs to keep them breathing in air, to the kidneys to keep the filter cells working, and so on.

"That is enough for today. I do hope you boys have some brains, and that it isn't all fat inside those round heads of yours."

Odd Creature Found in Jungles of Java

A scaly monster of the prehuman ages of the earth, surviving into modern times in the almost unvisited swampy fastness of southern Java, is reported to the German scientific journal Die Umschau by Dr. P. Valgeler. It is described as a one-horned rhinoceros, related to a form already known elsewhere in the East Indies but differing from it in that its almost naked hide is closely covered with small, hard, horny scales. It also has enormous front teeth, like those of a hippopotamus. It has often been described by the natives under the name "Tanggiling," which means "scaly beast," but Europeans were incredulous, regarding these reports as folklore. A few professional hunters among the whites had killed specimens; but they could obtain such high prices from the Chinese, who use the hide and horns of rhinoceroses in medicine, that they were secretive about the business and did not share their knowledge with scientists. Finally, however, photographs were brought out of the jungle showing clearly that the animal is something entirely new to science. Now that its existence has been authenticated it is expected that efforts will be made to obtain living specimens for zoological parks.

Lesson for July 3

SAUL CHOSEN KING

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 10:17-25; 11:12-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?

PRIMARY TOPIC—Saul Becomes a King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Saul, the First King of Israel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Calls to Life Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Opportunities for Leadership.

The period of Judges ended with Samuel's administration. This lesson shows us the transition from the rule by the judges to the monarchy. For a comprehensive view of the transition it will be well to make a survey of chapters eight to eleven.

I. The People Demand a King (8:1-9).

1. Their reasons for this demand.

(1) Samuel was incapacitated by old age; (2) the unfaithfulness of his sons whom he had appointed as his successors. In this Samuel committed a great blunder, for the office of judge was not hereditary. (3) The desire to be like other nations. The surrounding nations had a king as their leader. They wanted a king who would go out and fight their battles (v. 20).

2. Samuel's behavior under this trial (vv. 6-9). He took the matter to the Lord in prayer. Even though Samuel's blunders in part brought on this trouble he did the wise thing in taking it to the Lord in prayer. The Lord comforted him by assuring him that this rejection was not merely his rejection, but the rejection of the kingship of God.

II. Samuel Tells of the Manner of the Kings (vv. 10-18).

He shows them that the king will be very exacting and arbitrary in his dealing with them.

1. He will take their sons and make them to serve in the army and do all kinds of hard work on his farm and in his house. He will make slaves of their daughters also.

2. He will take their lands, even those inherited from their fathers, and give them to his favorite officers and servants. Not content with that he will take the tenth part of the produce that remains and give to them.

III. Samuel's Protest Disregarded by the People (vv. 19-22).

Having made up their minds they deliberately shut their eyes to the truth and rushed madly into the experiment.

IV. The King Providentially Pointed Out (9:1-10:16).

Saul was sent by his father to search for the asses that had wandered away. This was quite natural. While Saul and his father were acting freely in this matter, at the same time God's sovereign purpose was being carried out. Although difficult to understand, God carries forth His sovereign purpose without interfering with man's freedom.

V. The King Chosen at Mizpeh (10:17-27).

The Lord had already pointed out to Samuel who should be king and Saul had been anointed. Let us observe:

1. Why Saul was chosen. If they would have a king the Lord would give them the one best suited to fill the place. He was from Benjamin, a small tribe, which would prevent undue rivalry between Ephraim and Judah, the leading tribes of Israel. He was also chosen because of his personal fitness (v. 23).

2. How Saul was chosen. The method was by lot. Samuel called them together before the Lord, and before the lot was cast he again remonstrated with them against such action. He showed them the base ingratitude of their rejection of such a God and King who had done so much for them, and gave them a chance to forego their rash demand.

3. How the king was received by the people. Saul knew that the Lord had chosen him, but through modesty and fear he shrank from the responsibility. When he was brought forth Samuel presented him to the people, assuring them that Saul was the Lord's choice.

VI. The King Confirmed at Gilgal (ch. 11).

Soon after the election at Mizpeh the Ammonites made a desperate demand upon the men of Jabesh-Gilead. Saul hearing of it hastily summoned the tribes together for war and won a remarkable victory. As he thus proved his ability the people wished to punish the sons of Belial, but Saul forbade them. Samuel took advantage of this auspicious situation and called all the people together at Gilgal where they formally crowned him their king.

The Life

To apprehend the life that is to be we must learn to think more largely and sacredly of the life that is now. We must enlarge the scope and measure of today, must identify today with what we call eternity.—Charles Cuthbert Hall.

Moving Forward

To move forward in life, you do not need to be forward in conduct, but you must keep your face to the front, and see your objective.—The Gideon

Little Financial Gain From Immortal Works

William Shakespeare's emergence from practical poverty to comparative wealth near the close of the Sixteenth century was not the result of his play writing, but the earnings of his shares in the Globe and Blackfriars theaters.

His plays brought some returns, but not nearly enough at that time to enable him to buy New Place, the most imposing residence, with one exception, in Stratford. It is estimated that his shares paid him about $1,500 a year, equal to perhaps $12,000 at the present time. At about this time he received substantial sums from performances at court, and his fees as an actor and dramatist increased.

Previously he had at times been unable to remain clear of debt. In the tax records it is revealed that he was in arrears in 1596 when he moved from Shoreditch to Southwark, and later he paid the overdue taxes in installments. His wife also found it difficult to make both ends meet. Some time before 1596 she borrowed a sum from her father's shepherd and she had not repaid in 1601.

Oldtime Clocks That Are Now Curiosities

The first pendulum clock ever made in England was constructed by a Dutchman named Fromantel, in 1622. The clock given by King Henry VIII to Anne Boleyn on her wedding day is only four inches deep and but ten inches high—a real pigmy clock! There are also still some specimens of the old "Act of Parliament" clocks existing. These were so-called because Pitt, when prime minister, placed a tax on watches, and consequently taverns and other places where people gathered had large clocks made for the benefit of people who could not afford watches. At Buckingham palace there is a wonderful clock made by Lapine. This clock takes the form of a negress' head, and the hour numerals are shown in one of her eyes, whilst in the other are the minute divisions.

Character Shown by Posture of the Body

Much of a woman's character is shown by the way she walks, according to an article in Liberty by John K. Winkler. "Human beings lift their feet like horses," the writer explains, "the higher the step the more breeding. Many stage stars walk with the ease and body control of a fencer, chest up but not out, stomach flat, whole leg in movement.

"The perfect posture of the body is found in the women of southern countries who carry baskets on their heads. These peasant women move with never a break in the body between hip and shoulder. Fitting one's walk to one's character is an art in itself. Stage technicians say that some stars have this ability to perfection. Perhaps you have noticed the enormous difference in the walk of their varying stage characters."

Hard and Soft Metals

Iridium, a metal belonging to the platinum group and often used on the tips of fountain pens, is the hardest pure metal known, recent tests have shown, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Molybdenum is next and tungsten third. Of the common metals, nickel is the hardest, ranking fifth. The tests did not include alloys, such as those of steel with a high percentage of carbon, which ranks higher than any. The tests showed that thallium is the softest metal, being twenty-fourth on the scale, lead was twenty-third and tin twenty-second. Gold ranks as number eighteen, silver fifteen, copper eleven, and iron ten.

Like Ghost From Past

In a letter recently received from her daughter Mary, Mrs. Randolph Winslow of Baltimore, Md., learned Mary was greatly enjoying her vacation, that she was a good girl and would be home soon. Mrs. Winslow appreciated getting the letter, although it had been written 30 years ago and Mary now has two children of her own. After a service of 40 years on the front porch, the Winslow family mail box gave up the ghost and this letter when the bottom fell out.

The Good Time Coming

President John H. Moss was responding ao a toast in his honor at a Kiwanis banquet in Milwaukee:

"The condition of Russia under Bolshevism," he went on, "was curiously hit off by an I. W. W. orator, who shouted from his soap box one day:

"'Yes, gents, there's a good time comin' when every man'll do what he likes, and if he don't, he'll be made to, by crinus!'"—Minneapolis Tribune.

HOW FAKE AUCTIONS GET YOUR MON

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

(This is one of a series of articles exposing the wiles of sharpers who after your money.)

NEARLY everyone is ready "to take a fling" at getting so thing for nothing or at least for less than it is worth. cause of this many are duped into paying more than regular r ket prices for things they buy. This clas people is especially susceptible to the appea anything resembling an auction. Fake tions with the cards stacked against the bu are very common. They rank high among fraudulent schemes of the country.

W R MOREHOUSE

The "here today and gone tomorro auction faker rents a fine looking house some high-class section of the city in which plans to operate. He furnishes this ho with the cheapest imitations of high-class f nishings, with here and there a fine p which is to serve for bait. Certain pieces alleged antiques with a thread of glorious tory behind them. Of others it is claimed t they have been handed down for generatio originating with some person noted in hist or with some famous Southern family. other pieces it is maintained that they made of rare and precious woods impor from far across the sea. The overstuffed furniture, it is claim is all high grade of standard manufacture.

Regardless of its superiority and antiquity, the furnit must be sold at once, for the owner is compelled to take an extended trip, the family physician having ordered travel and a change of climate as a means of saving his life. Nothing is to be spared and the deep slashings of the auctioneer's axe must go on with no price too low. Individual pre-auction sales, of course, will be arranged for persons who are unable to attend the auction.

The day of the sale is here. Purchasers are arriving. They are met at the door by the woman member of the outfit—a dramatic person who knows when to shed tears at the thought of having her happy home broken up and her valuable furnishings torn from her. She tells her sad story—how she must leave her home and go to distant lands with her husband whose health is broken and life in danger. But she is resigned to her "awful calamity" and will sell all her lovely furniture even at a great sacrifice.

Victims Clamor for Fake Pieces

As she directs attention to certain pieces of furniture her voice quavers. She almost sobs aloud as she names the price she is forced to accept. "Less than half the original cost, but price is no object. We must take the train tomorrow," and she wipes a tear from her eye. Fully convinced the sale is genuine, and sympathizing with the unfortunate woman, buyers clamor for the furniture.

But no sooner are the articles transferred from their setting in the slightly darkened rooms of their original owner and displayed in the sunlight of the purchaser's home, than the truth about the sale begins to dawn in the mind of each new owner. Close examination reveals that evidently this wonderful collection of furniture was but odds and ends and unsalable pieces picked up from second-hand stores by these fly-by-night fakers. Some proves to be the rankest of imitations of the cheapest grade, and the overstuffed is so poorly constructed that it squeaks and weaves under the lightest weight.

The Birds Have Flown

When those who have been cheated rush back to the house the next day, intent on making it "hot for the faker," they find hanging in the front win a sign, "For Rent." The birds h flown, without leaving any addr

Fake auctions are not exclu to residences, but are sometim staged in stores. We have reports certain furniture firm that fail d, ing on hand stock invoiced at $42, An auction sale was announced. usual the stock must be closed ou satisfy creditors within a few d regardless of cost. On the wind appeared glaring announcements big bargains. though represe as a legitimate s it had the earma of an auction Messrs. Catch 'em and Skin

An investigation of the store m six months later disclosed that stock was then larger than the day announced the auction. Its sales the interim had exceeded $600,0 The facts are that two trucks h backed up to the rear of the st nightly and unloaded new merch dise, principally odd lines and job l picked up here and there at a barga Under the guise of a legitimate a tion, or private sale at auction pric fourteen times as much furniture w sold in the six months as the st contained at the time of the failu Comparison of sale prices disclos that victims were persuaded to b liberally on the assurance they w getting sacrifice prices, when as a m ter of fact they were actually pay from five to 25 per cent more than liable stores were charging for bet goods.

Fake auctions and private sales used not only for furniture but also the sale of jewelry and other merch dise. The lesson which this st teaches is that there is nothing to gained by patronizing such sales. the other hand, there is a better th 50-50 chance of sustaining a loss.

Not all auctions are fraudulent, some are conducted fairly and hone ly, but before you draw your savin from the bank and spend them for a tion goods it will pay you to get t facts. For your own protection ma it an unbreakable rule to confine yo expenditures and investments to liable firms and individuals. In de ing with them you are assured square deal.

TRUST COMPANIES RANK NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING HIGHEST

The outstanding trust institutions of the United States are those that were pioneers in using advertising as a means of selling their services, a speaker told a conference of trust companies held in New York recently. He presented the results of a questionnaire sent out by the Trust Company Division, American Bankers Association, making an inquiry into the advertising practices of institutions doing a trust business. Three out of every four trust companies and banks engaged in extending trust services were found to be advertising. The opinion was expressed by the speaker that their growth would closely follo the amounts spent each year for a vertising.

The local newspaper is the mo highly regarded advertising mediu it was disclosed. In all, 929 compani answering the questionnaire used th local papers and 338 did not. The i stitutions buying space in local pape are evenly divided among all section of the country. Comparing six medi for selling personal trust services a considering their effectiveness fro the standpoint of producing result the speaker declared that the loca newspapers should head the list. Fol ers and booklets can reach a limite audience, he observed, but the news paper is the best medium for acqui ing prestige and mass circulation. should never be omitted, he urged.

Power and Pageantry Despised by Emperor

Incomprehensible to the Russian court as were the simple tastes of Alexander I, that emperor was but voicing the common plaint that "everybody's job looks better than mine." He was known to long to retire from a position which most men coveted and he consistently led a life as devoid of pomp and ceremony as possible.

He took long walks into the country unattended, wore no ornaments, not even a ring, detested flattery, never played cards and abhorred snuff and tobacco. He would help, moreover, to move a sick or wounded soldier, and was known to have stopped his carriage, never attended by guards, to take up an old and lame peasant woman painfully plodding on the road. Accused of having unfashionable ways and tastes he replied, "I should like nothing better than to retire and lead the life of a country squire." There is a legend that he quit the throne when he was supposed to have died and became a hermit.—Kansas City Star.

Glowing Portrayal of School of the Future

The little red schoolhouse is poetic in songbooks and sentimental orations but it exacts an appalling toll in the health of children condemned to spend much of their youth within its insanitary walls, a writer in the Chicago Daily News asserts. The schools of the future will be built primarily to serve the health needs of the growing child and the reward will be a generation of sturdy citizens with color in their cheeks and a spring in their steps.

Such is the picture painted by Dr. Max Seham, professor of pediatrics at the University of Minnesota and a leading authority on fatigue in children. Doctor Seham, in Chicago in connection with recent baby week activities, holds that while America has been piling up riches beyond those of any nation in history, its children have been drifting toward physical bankruptcy.

"One million children have beginning tuberculosis. Four hundred thousand have leakage of the heart. One million suffer from spinal curvature and other deformities. Two million have defective hearing, and five million reveal malnutrition," Doctor Seham cited these figures as warrant for a vigorous effort on the part of the state to reorganize its educational program so as to build up the health of future citizens.

"Sixty per cent of the 25,000,000 school children of America attend rural schools. Hardly a rural community is without one or more insanitary, indecent, unfit schools. Children are compelled to pass their days in buildings in which no employer would think of asking workmen to toil."

The schools of the future, rural as well as urban, "will have fresh-air rooms, lighting will be from the sun, seats and desks will be adjustable, lunches will be served at least one wholesome, rational meal a day, physical education under the leadership of experts will be compulsory and universal, Doctor Seham believes.

"The weak and defective child, through corrective exercise in small special classes, will get its full opportunity for normal development. There will be clinics for the diagnosis of mental as well as physical ailments, with full-time physicians and nurses watching the health of the children.

"The teachers will be prepared to instruct in practical hygiene as well as in academic subjects. All of this will be linked up with the home—the school being considered the day home of the child."

Wrens Require Space

For years it has been recommended that the entrance to a nest box for house wrens should be only the size of a 25 cent coin, or about seven-eighths of an inch in diameter, says a federal report. This advice was on the theory that the wren needs protection from larger birds that might oust it from bird houses. The wren itself, however, may have other ideas about the matter, for of several bird boxes with seven-eighths inch entrances tried out by the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture last summer on the experimental farm at Glenn Dale, Md., not one was occupied. Ten broods of wrens were reared, however, in houses having from 1¼ to 1½ inch entrances, a fact that clearly indicates the bird's preference for more ample entrances.

It Wasn't an Accident

The dead speak to a chemist and tell him the truth. The father of a family went to work one morning as usual. An hour later a son went to his mother's room and found it full of gas from a broken fixture and his mother lifeless. The coroner made a routine examination and discovered nothing, but a chemist found no carbon monoxide in the blood, positive evidence the victim was dead before the gas was turned on. There had been no suspicion of murder up to this point. Next it was found the back of the woman's neck bore finger prints. She had probably been suffocated by holding her face down in the pillow. The gas fixture was then broken to hide the crime. Her husband was convicted of murder.—Capper's Weekly.

Coming "Air Train"

Aeronautical engineers in Germany are working on plans of an "air train" as a possible means of travel in the future. The locomotive will be a powerful airplane and the "pullmans" a row of gliders coupled to the locomotive and to each other, as the cars of a train, only with considerably greater spacing between the units. Passengers in each glider will be destined for some particular town, and as the airdome of each town is approached the glider for that destination will be released from the end of the string and settle gracefully down with its special pilot and its passengers.

Wright Caustic

"Peter Wright, the slanderer of Gladstone, is a caustic chap," said a New York publisher. "I heard him once, at the Bath club in London, denouncing all our popular novelists.

"Then he denounced Arnold Bennett, Bernard Shaw and H. G. Wells for their long-windedness.

"'Those men,' he said, 'think they can make their books immortal by making them everlasting.'"

BIRDS SELECT OLD MATES FOR SEASON

Prevalence of monogamy among Hungarian partridges and polygamy among Chinese pheasants has been demonstrated on the state game farms, says the Portland Oregonian. Interesting? Yes, but read on: Bernard Shaw's theory that the female is the aggressor in mating arrangements has been demonstrated.

"It is interesting to note," says the game farms section of State Game Warden Averill's report, "that at least a part of the Hungarian partridges have selected the same mates they had last year and that this selection was made in each instance by the female birds."

Identifying Him

"Please give me the particulars, doctor," said the reporter.

"The poor fellow was found dead in the snow,' replied the coroner. "He wore a linen duster with fur on the collar, one rubber boot and a carpet slipper. In his pockets were a rabbit's foot, a photo of a movie actress, a price list of swell motor cars, a crossword puzzle partly worked, printed directions how to woo and win an heiress, a map of the Arkansas diamond fields and two wooden toothpicks."

"And who was he?"

"All we could do was to decide that he was an optimist."—Kansas City Times.

Wives Should Be Picked

Dr. Thomas Galloway, noted biologist, says if social hygiene were interpreted correctly and taught with kindness and careful guidance, young men would learn how to pick mates instead of marrying for infatuation. Clear understanding of life would eliminate a large number of marriage failures. Divorces would fall off. I do not mean, however, that marriage is a failure, for there are fewer matrimonial failures in proportion to business failures. Marriage is a sound institution. —Capper's Weekly.

Man Using Both Hands Can Accomplish More

Out of every hundred babies born, 17 are naturally right-handed, 3 are left-handed, and the remaining 80 are capable of using either hand with equal ease. Yet, owing to our method of training the young, by the time those hundred babies are three years old all except the three who were left-handed will use the right hand for such essential work as writing, painting and the use of all tools.

There are said to be over 400 different sorts of work in which the equal use of both hands is an advantage, but even in those in which one hand only is generally used it is a tremendous advantage to be able to use the left hand in order to rest the right.

Sir James Barrie, when his right hand failed him, had to learn to write with his left, but Sir Robert Baden-Powell, when bitten by a dog and forced to carry his right arm in a sling, went right on with his work, writing and drawing with the other hand, for he has been able to use both hand equally all his life.

The great animal artist, Landseer, could paint two pictures at the same time, using both hands. The famous Leonardo da Vinci was equally accomplished, and so was Holbein, the portrait painter. More wonderful seems the fact that the well-known surgeon, Mr. Simeon Shell, could operate equally easily with either hand. Sir Oliver Lodge is another well-known man who uses both hands with ease.

It is the left side of the brain that controls the muscles of the right side of the body, so by learning to use the left hand a person actually rests one side of his brain and is therefore able to do more work at a stretch.

Beautiful Church Tower

Many of the parish churches of England and Wales are beautiful, but the tower of the church at Wrexham, Wales, with its corner turrets high as medieval fortresses, its spiralets and crockets, intricate bands and graceful cornices, is a thing of astonishing beauty and worthy to have graced a minster. As a noted traveler once said: "One cannot look at it without acknowledging a debt of deep gratitude to those who built it so many centuries ago."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Three Divergent Schemes for Naval Limitation Offered at Geneva.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THREE great powers, in conference at Geneva, through their representatives, for the purpose of devising further limitation of naval armament, are considering three widely divergent plans, and if they get together on any scheme it will be only by making big concessions and after long debate. The initial positions of the three powers may be succinctly stated thus:

United States—Extension of the 5-5-3 ratio to all warships, with definite tonnage limits for cruisers, destroyers and submarines.

Great Britain—Further limitation of battleships, reduction in size and armament of both capital ships and cruisers and extension of the 5-5-3 ratio to 10,000-ton cruisers, but no mention of application to auxiliaries.

Japan—A naval holiday on the basis of the status quo, and a ban on battleship construction.

Ambassador Hugh Gibson opened the conference and presided as chairman because it was called by President Coolidge. In submitting the American plan he suggested the following allocation of tonnage:

Cruisers—United States and Great Britain, 800,000 tons; Japan, 180,000 tons.

Destroyers — United States and Great Britain, 250,000 tons; Japan, 150,000 tons.

Submarines — United States and Great Britain, 90,000 tons; Japan, 54,000 tons.

In polite terms, Mr. Gibson hinted that if an agreement among the powers for naval limitation was not reached, the United States was prepared to resort to an extensive building program.

According to American experts, adoption of the British plan would enable England in time of war to swamp the American fighting ships through utilization of her mercantile marine as auxiliary cruisers; her big passenger liners would be capable of carrying airplanes and transporting troops as well as mounting 6-inch guns. In the Japanese proposal to adopt the status quo the Americans found a joker in the fact that Japan possesses considerable more cruisers and destroyers in commission or capable of utilization than the United States and the legalization of this strength would place Japan just below Great Britain and above America for these categories.

Admiral Sir Frederick Field, British delegate, explained the British point of view. He declared Great Britain requires more light cruiser and destroyer tonnage than any other power because England relies on its food supply from overseas and also for marketing the dominions' products and safeguarding the long routes of communications.

All this was set forth at length when the proposals were turned over to a committee of expert technicians who were instructed to try to find a common ground for discussion. The British claim to greater tonnage of light craft was supported by elaborate charts showing how England's trade routes and lines of communication criss-cross every body of navigable water on the globe.

Naval experts in Washington openly attacked both the British and Japanese plans, and their view was shared by Congressman Britten of Illinois, ranking member of the house committee on naval affairs. Mr. Britten predicted that failure of the Geneva conference will result in increased naval building by the United States but this view is not shared by Senator Borah, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee. Mr. Borah feels there is little likelihood of the conference achieving real results, but that even if it does fail, this government will not enter upon a large building program.

POLAND'S firm and dignified stand against the demands of Russia in connection with the murder of the Russian minister in Warsaw seems to have had good results, for it is now reported that the two countries are in a fair way to negotiate a treaty of amity. But the Soviet government's savage reprisal in the way of wholesale executions of counter-revolutionists and others accused of being spies in the pay of foreign governments has aroused widespread indignation. An instance of this is the resolution adopted by a joint meeting of the executive committee of the British Labor party and of the general council of the British Trades Union congress.

"While recognizing the Soviet government's indignation at the murder of M. Volkev," the resolution said, "we are obliged to protest against the execution of persons innocent thereof as a reprisal. We are of the opinion that meeting murder by murder is a degradation of the standards of civilized life and can produce nothing but harm to Soviet Russia."

In this connection it is interesting to read that Pope Pius XI in an allocution before a secret consistory denounced bolshevism as an insidious, subversive doctrine that is permeating the ignorant classes throughout the world.. Basing his remarks on knowledge coming to him through evidence gathered by his diplomatic outposts, the pope charged bolshevism with being chiefly responsible not only for the troubles in China but also in Mexico.

MARSHAL CHANG TSO-LIN is now the absolute dictator of northern China—though he may not enjoy that pre-eminence very long. In a twenty-word speech in Peking he announced that he had assumed the office of generalissimo in order to work for the regeneration and unification of the country. The diplomatic body was absent from the brief ceremony and so avoided official recognition of Chang's new status. In a circular telegram to the provinces the marshal pledged himself to fight against communism while breath remains in his body. He added that any seeking to undermine the nation's foundations or acting in collusion with foreigners for a like object, will be regarded as public enemies deserving death.

There are indications that the Hankow and Nanking nationalist factions will soon get together, at least for the purpose of getting possession of Peking and Shantung provinces. The Shanghai bankers are reported to have raised two-thirds of a $30,000,000 loan to assist General Chiang in his drive northward.

FAILURE to reconcile the National peasant and Liberal parties in Rumania resulted in the downfall of Premier Babu Stirbey, favorite of Queen Marie, who only recently was elevated to that position. He handed in his resignation and the former premier, Ioan Bratiano, was called on to form a new cabinet ponding elections. The National peasants not only refused to co-operate with the Liberals but announced that they are publishing a manifesto making scandalous revelations against the government party.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, who caught his first mess of rainbow trout by using worms as bait, has heard the sorrowful protests of the Izaak Walton league members and now is landing the fish with the regulation equipment of fly and casting rod. And Mrs. Coolidge has proved herself no mean angler. The Chief Executive has been receiving various groups of citizens, including the members of the National Editorial association and their wives, and on Tuesday he motored to Rapid City and reviewed the South Dakota National Guard at its camp near there. He took back to the summer White House as an over-night guest former Gov. S. R. McKelvie of Nebraska, who is the editor of a farm paper. Mr. Coolidge accepted an invitation to attend the Belle Fourche roundup on July 4, which is his birthday, and promised to go to Ardmore on July 16 for a big gathering of farmers from South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

Governor General Wood of the Philippines was the President's most important individual caller of the week, having been invited to report on conditions in the islands. Other visitors included several congressmen.

REPRESENTATIVE W. R. GREEN of Iowa, chairman of the house ways and means committee, went to Washington for a conference with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, and told the correspondents that there was small hope of a substantial tax reduction in 1928. Present indications, according to Mr. Green, are that, if there is any surplus in the national treasury at the end of the fiscal year, it will not be large enough to permit such reductions as were made in the last revenue bill, which authorized cuts aggregating $400,000,000.

In this view Mr. Green takes sharp issue with other Republican leaders, notably Senators Edge of New Jersey, and Reed of Pennsylvania, who have predicted a surplus exceeding $300,000,000, and probably running as high as $400,000,000.

BECAUSE of his refusal to return to the United States and testify in the trial of Albert B. Fall and Harry F. Sinclair in the Teapot Dome oil lease fraud case, the Department of State has put Harry M. Blackmer much in the position of a "man without a country." The former chairman of the Midwest Refining company has been deprived of his passport by order of the department and so is without the protection of the government on his travels. While his passport has been revoked he has one chance to recover it, namely, to apply for a passport to return to the United States. But as Blackmer evaded service of a subpoena for a long time and finally actually refused service, officials here do not believe he will seek a chance to come home, knowing that this would mean facing another subpoena on landing, or arrest for contempt of court, or confiscation of his American property under the drastic Walsh law, recently enacted by congress to meet this very case.

COMMANDER BYRD and his three fellow aviators waited all week for weather conditions favorable to the start of their flight to France in the Fokker monoplane America. Heavy fogs and fluctuating winds prevailed over the north Atlantic, and Byrd saw no object in starting as he was not planning a record-breaking flight or contemplating any sensational performance.

Colonel Lindbergh had a few days to devote to his own affairs, and then was summoned to Washington to confer with officials of the Army, Navy and Commerce departments. He flew there from St. Louis in an army plane, making one stop, at Dayton, Ohio. A committee of St. Louis business men has offered Lindbergh the presidency of a projected airplane manufacturing company with large capital.

CITIZENS of Indianapolis grew tired of the doings of the city hall ring there and, being given the opportunity at a special election, they smashed it by voting, five to one, in favor of abolishing the council and mayoralty system and substituting the city manager form of government. In March the anti-manager forces persuaded the legislature to amend the law so that the change cannot be made before January 1, 1930. If this legislative action is held unconstitutional the city manager will take office next New Year's day.

UNQUALIFIED approval of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project is given by the joint New England-St. Lawrence waterway committee of business men, financiers, economists, and engineers in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine, and Connecticut.

After months of study this committee has concluded that the all-American waterway route through New York, proposed as an alternative to the St. Lawrence route, is impractical from a financial and engineering standpoint, and in a formal report the spokesmen for the six states urge the Washington government to initiate negotiations with the Canadian government upon a treaty which will speed completion of the St. Lawrence project.

NO FORM of government is preordained to permanence. The whole history of government denies it. The American hope is simply that ours may live without interruption by clinging as long as possible to the formula of our fathers and, when that program can no longer be reconciled to changing times, to adapt it to new conditions and new experience. This was the intention of the founders who intimated clearly in their construction that they considered it neither sacrosanct nor incapable of new development.

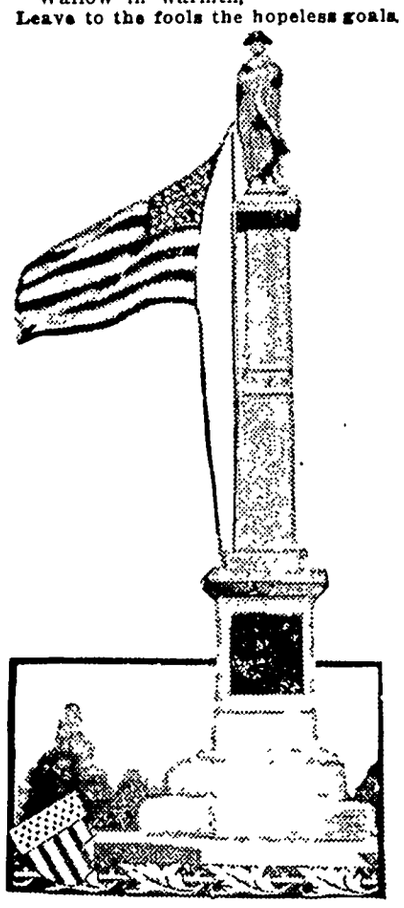
CHRISTMAS DAY AT TRENTON, YEAR 1776

When the Light of Freedom Was Rekindled.

Footprints in the snow. . .
The road is slow.
They plunge and stumble; sharp flakes blind.
Crust bites knees. Bare feet freeze,
Tear on ice. . . . And still they go
Over the road on Christmas day,
The road to Trenton Christmas day,
The dark road to Trenton,
The deep road to Trenton,
White before—and red behind.

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Hopes are low
For those who dare dream to be free.
In New York town, the oath to the crown
Is the popular thing. Hear the word go:
"There's no more war this Christmas day."
"The king has mercy Christmas day."
"We're loyal subjects. . . ."
"We were misled. . . ."
"We will prosper Let us be."

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Weeks ago,
All have left but stubborn souls.
When defeats, brought retreats,
The sane went home. Sane men know
It's good to be home on Christmas day,
With the wife and children Christmas day,
To sit near the fire,
Wallow in warmth,
Leave to the fools the hopeless goals.



Trenton Battle Monument.

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Hear them blow
The roof off the barracks with a song
Mug on mug. Jug on jug,
Vanish in laughter. "We'll all go Back to Hesse after Christmas day."
In the warm town of Trenton Christmas day,
The sleek town of Trenton,
The roaring town of Trenton,
They say the word: "It won't be long."

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Wind gusts blow
The rags aside, and stab and freeze.
Farmhands with gaunt, flaming eyes
Drag to the battle, just to show
That stubborn men on Christmas day
Are as stubborn as on other days.
Mules have a right
To die like gentlemen.
Men lie frozen near the trees.

Footprints in the snow. . .
Bugles blow.
They crouch and charge, raggedly lined.
Muskets bark. Cannon spark
To flame and thunder . . . Years ago
A party was spoiled on Christmas day,
A cause rekindled Christmas day
On the road to Trenton,
Gay, sleek Trenton.
White before—and red behind.

Pennsylvania's Honor

On the vote regarding the acceptance or ratification of the Declaration of Independence six colonies had recorded their votes in the affirmative and six in the negative. John Morton cast his vote for Pennsylvania, in favor of the measure, thereby securing the majority of colonies and the adoption of the Declaration of Independence. Thus it is that the vote of Pennsylvania became the keystone of the Arch of Liberty.

Valley Forge

In 1742 a small iron works called the Mount Joy Forge was built on a little creek which flows into the Schuylkill river about nineteen miles northwest of Philadelphia. This iron foundry was also known as the valley forge. Hence the name of the creek and the camp. The place is famous in American history because Washington and his army wintered there in 1778-79. Valley Forge is now a state park

The intervening space was narrow, it took me but a few moments to cross it. In a small opening ahead of me I could see McAllister's figure bending over and fumbling as if for something hidden in the ground. Irresistibly the thought of Capt. Francis Barclay and his cross-bearings. Then, suddenly, as if in fear, for he glanced hurriedly over his shoulder, the kneeling figure began to dig until presently I heard the grating sound of metal. Evidently, like Captain Barclay, McAllister was a hider of treasure. And then all at once I realized the truth. Doubtless—and my heart beat faster at the thought—this was the hoard itself, this was the treasure concealed with Barclay's blood, and for which Barclay's lady had laid down her life. Instantly I saw that, knowing the spot where it lay hidden, I might be in a position to drive a reward bargain, might betray the treasure without betraying McAllister, and even save his miserable life, which, of far more importance to me, might save Helen's life and my own. But my thoughts went no further. As I have told you, I am not a believer in the supernatural, but I declare to you that at this moment something—I know not what—possessed me; an indefinable fear which shook me from head to foot, a nameless dread of some terrible, impending doom. In the next fraction of a second I was aware that something—man or ghost—was concealed in the mangroves behind McAllister. All was dark and shadowy, but from the fixed shadows one that moved detached itself and crept noiselessly nearer and nearer. McAllister was on his knees; he had raised the lid, for such I was sure that it was. Over its hiding place and was, I imagined, examining it to see if its contents were intact. It all flashed over me now. He was worried by the thought of the mysterious visitor in the canoe—thinking, perhaps, that it was Barclay himself—and had now crept forth to examine his treasure.

There was something terribly fascinating in the picture. The miser, intent upon his gold and jewels, forgetful of all else in the world; and here, almost at his shoulder, this vengeful shadow drawing nearer and nearer, advancing stealthily on its prey. As I pulled, pistol half-raised, suddenly the crisis came; I saw the crouching figure rise to its full height, the figure of a man, immensely broad, head set grotesquely low on his shoulders—and at that instant I leveled my pistol and fired.

For a moment all was confusion. Simultaneously I heard a shriek from McAllister and a cry that was almost a roar of pain and rage; and instantly some one—whether it was McAllister or his assailant I could not tell—dashed by me in the thicket, heading in the direction of the house. Without loss of a second, I dashed in pursuit, and, emerging, saw that it was not McAllister but the other. Evidently, then, my bullet had taken effect, for the figure ran curiously bent over, as if badly hurt, and still straight for the house. Then in a flash I thought of the rope leading to my room, and cursed myself for leaving it there. If the fiend should see it, should gain the house and pull the rope up after him, what might he not do before I could gain admission through the door. The thought of Helen filled me with apprehension. Yet in the uncertain light I dared not fire my rifle; I prayed for a ray of moonlight.

For a moment the figure, rounding the corner of the house, was lost to view. And as I followed, I saw that my gravest fears were realized, for the creature, with a speed and agility which seemed incredible, was swarming up the rope and even in this short space of time was nearly at the top. On the slight chances does life or death depend! Even as I had hoped and prayed, at that instant the moon shone forth from behind a cloud, and, despairing with the dread of the climber gaining the shelter of the house, I gave a terrific shout, in the hope of arresting his progress. The expedient was successful. He stopped for an instant, as if surprised, and turned to look down; I caught a momentary impression of a horrible, bestial face, with lips drawn back and grinning teeth, then threw my rifle to my shoulder, aimed for the brain, and fired.

For a second I could not judge the result of my shot. The head seemed to collapse and sink, but the hold on the rope did not loosen; and there, between earth and sky, that huge bulk swung; then, all ot once, it released its hold and came crashing to the ground, a dead, lying motionless without sound or movement. Yet such was still my dread of it that even now I took no risks but reloaded my rifle before I cautiously ventured near. Immediately large my victim loomed in the moonlight, and somehow more and more unlike a man; yet it was not ape. I stood by its side that the full truth dawned on me, for now, in one blinding flash, the whole mystery became clear as day. The fiend which had ravaged the island, and eluded our vengeful, and which had been stopped in its path of destruction only by the most fortunate chance, was not a human being but a huge bull ape, possessing, according to the naturalists, seven times the strength of a man—the far-famed orang-utan of Sumatra and Borneo.

CHAPTER XI

The Crisis.

The events of that night nearly finished McAllister. Luckily, however, for his secret, the maroons were so terrified by the uproar and the sound of shots that not one of them ventured forth; and it was I who, going back to the mangroves, found him stretched prostrate on the ground, apparently dead. A hasty examination showed that his heart was still beating. I dared not waste time, therefore, in examining the chest, although one hurried glance disclosed gold and jewels in magnificent abundance; and closing the lid, I lowered it into its resting place, replacing the dirt above it as skillfully as I could. Then, lifting McAllister in my arms, I made my way back to the house, and with the aid of the key, which I found in his pocket, I got him indoors, and, summoning Helen to help me, we worked until daylight over the unconscious man. He had a constitution of iron, and, rallying from the shock, appeared next day to be almost as well as ever.

As to the mystery of the giant ape, that was now not hard to understand. The captain of the Ashantee was a great lover of natural history, and was given to bringing home from foreign parts beasts, birds and reptiles of all descriptions. That he had somehow obtained possession of the orang-utan either at Sumatra or Borneo, was clear. Next, with the coming of the hurricane, it was evident that either by accident or design the ape had been freed from his cage or the quarters where he was confined, and that his enormous strength had enabled him to cling to some piece of wreckage and to make the shore of the island in safety. Unquestionably, also, my strange sensations on the night of the wreck had been caused by the passing of the ape toward the grove of trees, to which he had instinctively turned for shelter. Here he had taken up his abode in the tree tops, and had in turn trailed and killed the dog, the heifer and the two negroes. My discovery of the canoe and shooting of its occupant was one of those coincidences which justify the good old rule that circumstantial evidence is a dangerous thing on which to rely. Presumably the occupant of the canoe was some harmless fisherman cruising up the river; he may have been approaching the island with the most peaceful intent, and his sudden flight have been by terror at hearing Cudjo's shriek of agony.

As I expected, McAllister questioned me at length as to what I had seen on the night of the encounter, but while he appeared somewhat chagrined that I knew of the whereabouts of his treasure, yet after all I had saved his life and he was scarcely in a position to be otherwise than grateful.

All this time I had naturally not been unmindful of the future, but, as may well be imagined, the constant strain of these tragic events had made it impossible for me to settle on any definite plan.

I felt, however, that one point was clear: I could no longer deceive Helen as to my identity; whatever she might think of me, I must tell her the truth. And accordingly the next evening, at our favorite station near the point of the island, I took, as the saying is, my courage in my hands, and told her, first of all, that I loved her with all my heart and soul, but that before I spoke of that further there was something else which I must make clear to her. And then, reluctantly enough, I told her the whole story, explaining to her, in conclusion, that I was in duty bound to return to the captain with my report.

How she answered my declaration of love I may not tell you here; some things in the life of each of us are too sacred for the printed page. It is enough, perhaps, to say that when she realized the danger which confronted us, all her mocking gayety dropped from her like a cloak, and I saw, for the first time, the depths of courage and truth that lay beneath. It was then that I knew, beyond all doubt, that she loved me, so that suddenly, to my eyes, the whole world seemed bathed in glory, and I felt that hereafter nothing could really alarm us, neither fate nor misfortune nor death itself.

But at length, when our first transports had subsided, there was much else to consider. As to McAllister, Helen, with her quickness of wit, saw the situation in a flash, grasping the meaning of all that he had done, and believing implicitly, as I did, the story that Barclay had told. Then, very seriously, she asked me what reception I should meet with from the captain I was in such an exalted state, and so splendid did the world appear, that I think I half persuaded myself that the captain might look upon our love affair with favor, and might even help us to solve our difficulties. And thus, my arm around her waist, we strolled slowly back to the house.

To McAllister I made the brief explanation that private business demanded a visit to the Port; and accordingly the next afternoon I took leave of Helen, not letting her see that I felt any uneasiness as to my return, and left the island behind. Once headed for the plantation, however, my heart suddenly turned heavy, for when I thought of Barclay's hatred of McAllister, I became fearful lest this hatred should extend both to Helen and myself. Yet I reasoned, too, that I had at least been faithful, and could only hope that this fact might sway the balance in my favor.

Thus debating the matter in my mind, I came to the mainland and unwillingly enough went in search of Shively. On my way I came across one of his assistants, a decent enough looking lad, and the youngest of the lot. He, casting a quick glance around him to see that we were not observed, signed to me to follow him into one of the outbuildings. And here, swearing me to secrecy, he told me that matters on the plantation were going from bad to worse, that he suspected a general rising among the slaves, and he begged me, if I heard anything of this on my trip to the Port, to be sure on my return to let him know. "What is there to stop them?" he asked. "Here we are, a dozen whites against seven hundred blacks. And who could blame them for rising? Shively"—he tiptoed to the entrance of the building, reconnoitered and returned. "He's a beast," he confided with bitterness. "The things he does! The way he persecutes these poor devils! Pah! it would sicken you to know. But I'm mortally afraid of him. He has told us that he's short-handed, and that if any one of us tries to leave him he'll make him rue the day. I ought to cut and run for it this very minute, but he'd hunt me out, and when I think what he'd do to me when he caught me—"

He broke off short, his pause more eloquent than words, and I could not help pitying him. Still I could hardly advise this irresolute lad to take a chance, which, if unsuccessful, would mean his death. So I told him to keep up his courage and that I would see him on my return, and forthwith continued my search for the overseer.

I found him inflamed with drink, not yet at the quarrelsome stage, but for him in what might almost have been called a mood of good humor of a brutal sort. On my saying that I was in haste, he had saddled for me a good horse, a fleet, gentle iron-gray, bade me good luck and returned to his liquor.

I had gone perhaps a mile or two of my journey, and was jogging leisurely along, when I came face to face with a fellow traveler, mounted, like myself, on horseback. To shield his eyes from the declining sun, he had pulled his hat well over his face, giving me but a glimpse of him; and yet, absorbed though I was in my meditations, I seemed to find, in his dress and bearing, something of home, something that turned my thoughts toward Straitsmouth, and New Jersey's sandy shores. As we passed, it seemed to me that he threw me a glance, almost of recognition, and for an instant, indeed, he made as if to rein in his horse and hail me; then, appearing to think better of it, and with the air of one who had mistaken his man, passed on. Yet of all this, in my abstraction, I thought little at the time, and, continuing on my way, came to the Port about sundown, and cantered out to the race course to put up my horse, and to have a chat with Quashy.

I was disappointed in his greeting, for he did not appear glad to see me, and though, as we talked once again of the great race and Satan's famous victory, he thawed to some extent, he still seemed solicitous to know why I had come to the Post; and when I gave him, as I was obliged to do, somewhat evasive answers, he inquired with an earnestness there was no mistaking whether I meant to go back to the island that night. To this I replied truthfully enough that I hoped to return late in the evening, and this appeared to please him greatly, for he repeated several times, "That best way. Port bad place to stay. Island good place. Go back to island quick." And with that I was forced to be content; and at length, having received his promise that he would look after my horse, I took leave of him, but as I did so, he again displayed his anxiety by saying, "If you no go back tonight, see me first thing in morning." And I promised him I would do this.

Arrived at the Palace, I found that its gayety no longer charmed me. For one thing, George Lewis had departed, and for another, so changed had I become in this brief space of time that what had before seemed dazzling and alluring now appeared cheap and tawdry. Altogether I had little appetite for my supper, ate but sparingly, and then, with a careful eye to my weapons, started down the winding road toward the trysting place.

As I came nearer and nearer to the shore I was suddenly filled with a wild hope that there might be no one there to meet me. But when I had made my way through the well-remembered belt of trees that fringed the shore, and had emerged at the very spot where I had landed two weeks ago, my heart suddenly sank like lead at the sight of the familiar boat upon the beach, two sturdy members of the crew holding her bow against the sand, while the figure of Burford reclined comfortably in the stern.

As we made our way toward the vessel, I perceived that my companion was not in a communicative mood, and indeed I was too much occupied with my own thoughts to care for conversation, and presently, harassed with grim forebodings, I found myself once more on the deck of the Black Panther.

Let me be honest, however, and confess that it was not without a thrill of pleasure that I again clasped Barclay's hand. Whatever his merits or his failings, after the furtive McAllister and the drunken, bullying Shively, it was like a cool breeze on a summer's day to find myself again in the presence of a Man.

"Well, my lad," was his first comment, "so you have kept your promise."

My nerves, I imagine, must have been, with all my worries, in rather an uncertain state, for I flared up, though quite without occasion, at his words.

"Then you doubted me?" I cried.

At this he gave me one of his sunniest smiles. "Never," he assured me. "The boy who owned to missing his bird off the Jersey coast, that morning in the fog, would never break a promise. Before you tell me of your doings, one question first. Have you become an admirer of the brave McAllister? A disciple of the benevolent Shively? If so, my labors have been in vain."

Simple Form Letter Intended for Brides

This form "Thank-You" letter to be sent in acknowledging the receipt of wedding presents is offered by the Kansas City Times to brides as a practical help to get them over one of the roughest spots in the matrimonial road.

(My) Dear Mrs. Woosis (Uncle Jack, Bozo):

I can't find words (time) to tell you how tickled (pleased, delighted, grateful) Bob (Joe, Xerxes) and I were over the lovely (beautiful, clever, ducky, dear) candlesticks (salad plates, vase, pitcher, spoons) you gave us. They are charming (lovely, beautiful, ducky, dear) and we can't thank you enough (too much) for them (it). We are going to use them (it) on our table at our first dinner (pick-up supper) in our new home (apartment, cottage, houseboat).

We are having (had hoped to have) a wonderful (awful) honeymoon. Our hotel is (was, should have been) delightful. Bob (Joe, Xerxes) is wonderful (a bore). I knew he would be. We shall (will) be glad to be in our home (homes), though, so that we can use your lovely (beautiful, ducky, dear, charming) candlesticks (salad plates, vase, pitcher, spoons).

Bob (Joe Xerxes) and I are getting along beautifully (a divorce). We do so hope that we shall (will) see you soon (very soon, some time) in our new home (court).

Thanks just loads (heaps, so much) for your (you know) candlesticks (what have you).

Much love (your sincerely).

Dead Letters

Letters which are sent to the dead letter office in Washington are opened, and when addresses are found in them they are returned to the senders. When a check or money order is found, but still no sufficient address, the letter is returned to the post-office of its origin, and inquiry is made at the bank or money order office. Parcel post matter or other mail of value which can neither be delivered nor returned, for want of sufficient address, is sold by the Post Office department. Other undeliverable matter is finally destroyed.

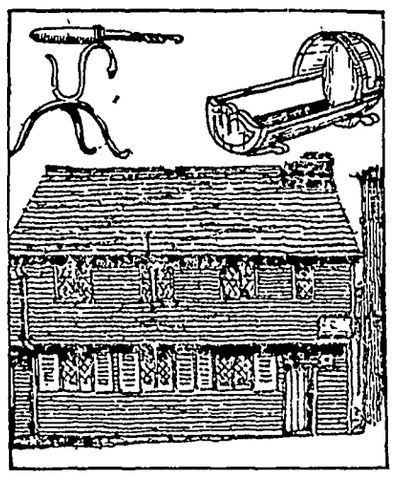
PAUL REVERE HOME MADE INTO SHRINE

Practically as It Was in the Revolutionary Days.

The home of Paul Revere in North square, Boston, Mass., was built sometime between 1630 and 1680. It was purchased by Paul Revere in 1770 and he lived in it until 1800. The house, which is now owned by the Paul Revere Memorial association, has been restored to its original condition and is open to the public.

Once inside the small paneled entry one sees the flight of stairs that rise sharply to the second floor. From the entry one passes through a left-hand doorway and finds himself in a pine-sheathed room. The walls on all but the fireplace are covered with quaint wall paper.

The other downstairs room is the old kitchen. This room is both paneled and plastered. Above the fireplace on a narrow shelf are found sundry candlesticks and other paraphernalia. One of the most interesting things in the entire kitchen is the toddy warmer, shown in the accompanying sketch, which was made by Paul Revere himself. When in use, the straight iron rod of this utensil was removed from its resting place in the thimble-like cap, and after being heated in the coals of the fireplace.



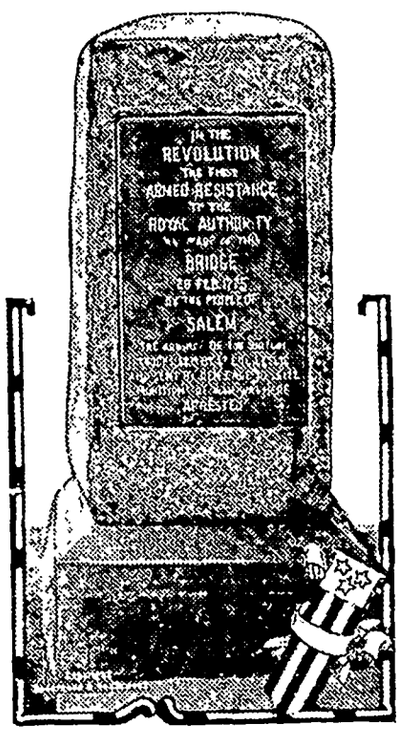
The toddy stick or toddy warmer in its holder (upper left) and the cradle are two of the prized antiques in the Paul Revere home (shown below).

was thrust red hot into the cold wine or ale, producing a burned taste which was much esteemed in those days. Near the fireplace is a battered baby's cradle fashioned from a barrel (see illustration). Its worn rockers and scarred sides testify to its ancient origin and faithful service.

Though Revere's memorable ride was undertaken over 150 years ago, thanks to Longfellow's immortal poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," practically every school child knows the story well. When criticized for mentioning neither William Dawes, Samuel Prescott, Sexton Robert Newman, nor Captains Pulling and Barnard in the poem for the parts they played on that memorable night, Longfellow replied, it is said, that the name Revere was a poetic one, and that it would do no one any harm because the poem would soon be forgotten. But histories show that he was wrong, for they have been founded on that poem. In fact, it is claimed that if it had not been for the poem, Revere would not have been honored in so many ways.—Pathfinder Magazine.

THE MINUTE MAN

By ISAAC BASSETT CHOATE



Blithe speeds the plow this warm sweet day of spring,
When April's sun has broken winter's reign,
Unclasped the hold frost had on lake and plain;
Swift hurry swallows north on eager wing;
To plowboy's whistle thrush and bluebird sing.
The brook runs glad, escaped from icy chain
Which tyrant winter forged, but forged in vain;
All fields and woods with songs of freedom ring.
Now halts the plow in furrow, ready hand
Grasps ready musket in defense of right;
The plowboy is a soldier at command,
His country serving well; before the night
Shall sound of musketry assurance bring
That now hath Minute man succeeded king.

HOW MRS. WEAVER WAS HELPED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

As Mrs. Weaver herself says, "I was never very strong." This is a mild statement describing her condition, for, according to her letters, she was subjected to no small amount of ill health. Fortunately, her sister was familiar with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged Mrs. Weaver to try it. "After three or four weeks," writes Mrs. Weaver, "I felt a great difference in myself. I would go to bed and sleep sound, and although I could not do very much work, I seemed stronger. I kept on taking it and now I am well and strong, do my work and take care of three children. I sure do tell my friends about your wonderful medicine, and I will answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Lawrence Weaver, East Smithfield St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

If you knew that thousands of women suffering from troubles similar to those you are enduring had improved their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, wouldn't you think it was worth a trial?

In some families, the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

K-R-O Kills Rats Only

Kill rats wholesale

Get rid of them safely. Here's a new sure way. K-R-O, a fine non-poisonous powder, kills 'em off in a hurry. Made from squill bulbs, the new safe way urged by government experts.

Safe for poultry and pets

Actual tests proved that it killed rats and mice every time but other animals and poultry were not injured by the largest doses. Think what that means to farmers and merchants.

Not a poison

Use K-R-O freely. Place it around your home, your barn, your granary or farmyard. Contains no arsenic, phosphorus or barium-carbonate. At your druggist 75c. Large size (4 times as much) $2.00. Or sent direct from us postpaid if he cannot supply you. Satisfaction guaranteed.

"Clip" Made Trouble

A cook in Rockland, Maine, shaved his head and bumped into trouble right away. Being in such close proximity to the penitentiary at Thomaston, he was arrested on suspicion of being an escaped convict. He had much difficulty in convincing the police that he had merely removed his hair to avoid getting grease into it when he was frying food.

A ONE HUNDRED PER CENT CREA MHAULER

A. D. Gimer, manager of the Klemme Co-Op. Creamery Company reports they had one patron, James Kurtz who never missed a single day the last half of June in making his daily cream deliveries. Mr. Kurtz made thirteen deliveries which consisted of 902 pounds of cream. Mr. Gimer says, "Let's have more patrons try out on this record."

Mr. Kurtz' name is always found on the high check list each month.

BALL GAME HERE SUNDAY

The Renwick base ball team will come to Klemme Sunday to play the locals for a return game.

Klemme and Renwick recently played a good game which resulted in the long end of the score in Renwick's favor. The locals are after Renwick's scalp this time and the chances look good for a win.

Will Attend Installation Of Pastor In Minnesota Sunday

Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch of the Klemme Reformed Church, accompanied by Rev. C. A. Schmid of the Elltown Reformed Church and Mr August Katter of Garner, will leave Saturday morning for Berne, Minnesota to be present at the installation services of Rev. Klaudt of that place, which will be held there on Sunday.

Belmond Herald-Press Sold July 1st To Independent

Another newspaper consolidation took place last week when the Belmond Herald-Press was sold to the Belmond Independent on July 1st.

A great number of papers have consolidated the past year as there is a general demand for only one paper in a town. One paper in a town can serve the business men and people far better than two papers could cover the same field.

We predict real success for the Independent-Herald-Press.

Mrs. Hilda Johnson from Paxton, Illinois and Mr. and Mrs. Eric Ryberg and son Dick of Rossville, Illinois, came Saturday for a few days visit at the Happy Johnson home. On their way home they will go by way of Omaha, Grand Island, Nebr., and St. Louis to Chicago.

Mrs. Will Barz and daughter, Norma, of Garner, were visiting at the Lena Schroeder home Wednesday evening.

Extra Pressure

Keep up the summer advertising.

This is hte season of the year when the average merchant lets up in his advertising and when the mail order house begins to get in its deadliest work.

It is hard for the merchants in the smaller towns to understand that it pays to advertise during July and August just as well as it pays in November and December.

The chain stores, the big department stores and all other well-managed businesses never let up in their advertising—never. And they put extra pressure behind their advertising when business begins to slack up a little bit. That's the time when their advertsing departments run "full blast."

Cut down your overhead, yet, cut off all unnecessary expense, but for mercy's sake don't cut off your advertising, whatever you do. And the editor of The Times does not say this from a selfish standpoint, but for the good of every merchant and business house in Klemme. Advertising is not an unnecessary expense. Good, persistent, all-year-'round advertising is absolutely essential to the success of any business.

People will buy from you regularly if you ask them to regularly.

V. A. COOK HAS HERD FOR JUNE IN NO.3

JOHN BOCK SCORES SECOND ON HIGH HERD AVERAGE

Number Three Cow Test Association Makes Good Record In June

This association made a fine showing for the month of June due to the fact that the pastures have been in excellent condition It is interesting to note that the herds fed balanced rations during the winter made no increase in production when turned on grass. This shows that by taking a little extra care in the feeding of a dairy cow, you can give her ideal pasure conditions the year around.

Two hundred seventy-eight cows were on test during June, 251 were in milk and 27 were dry. From this number the averages were obtained. Average milk, 696.4 pounds; average fat, 26.0 pounds. Feed cost per pound butterfat, 11.31 cents.

The highest herd average was again made by Virgil Cook's herd of pure bred and grade Holsteins. This herd of fourteen cows, all in milk, made an average of 1,186.9 pounds milk and 43 38 pounds of fat per cow.

John Bock of Klemme had second high herd. His herd of 11 pure bred and grade Holsteins, all in milk, made an average of 1,114.9 pounds milk with 41.81 pounds fat.

The following herds made an average of over 30 pounds per cow: V. A. Cook, Goodell; John Bock, Klemme; Harry Gibbs, Klemme; Albert Swanson, Klemme; E. G. Beier, Garner; E. J. Blummer, Garner; Ben Goll, Garner; Chas. Haes, Garner.

V. A. Cook had high cow for the month. His grade Holstein, Granny, produced 2,238 pounds of milk and 78.3 pounds of butterfat for the month on twice a day milking.

In the monthly report for May, of the associations in the state, it was found that the associaions with the highest averages, all the members fed grain and pasture, in comparing these averages of the associations, nearer the bottom it was found that less of the members fed grains. In the new associations of the state there was a greater separator loss, and more cows sold for beef. This shows what cow testing is doing.

Mr. and Mrs. Eric Clark and son of Garner were Klemme visitors Wednesday evening.

THREE CARS WRECK HERE PAST WEEK

JULY FOURTH CLAIMS WRECKS OF TWO CARS ON HI-WAY

Cars Badly Smashed But Drivers Not Badly Injured In Smashups

Three cars were wrecked on the Wilson Highway near Klemme the past week but only one young man was quite badly injured.

Early Monday morning two young men from Belmond returning home in a Chevrolet Landau struck a rough piece of road a few rods to the south of Herman Stromers farm home which caused their car to hit the ditch and turn it over twice. In the smash-up one young man received a bad cut on his right hand and a broken left wrist, while the other escaped with a slight scalp cut. Herman Stromer gave the young men first aid and took them to Belmond hospital. The car was not badly damaged, the windshield being broken, a head lamp broken and a fended bent.

While Mr. Stromer was taking the young men to Belmond someone stole a pair of glasses and a wrist watch from the car.

A second accident happened at about the same place a short time later when another car, a Ford coupe struck the rough spot on the road and took the ditch. The car was damaged but the ocupants were not injured.

Both of these accidents were caused by the rough condition of the road where the grade had been raised, and as there were no danger signs placed near this spot the drivers had no warning. Red flags were later placed at this place on the road to warn motorists to slow up.

Milton Lamb, an assistant at the Rock Island depot at Garner wrecked his Ford touring car early Monday morning just west of Klemme Mr. Lamb was returning to Garner from Clarion where he had been to visit his folks. Mr. Lamb fell asleep when driving along the river grade and when he woke up found himself in Henry Ludeke's pasture, his car having gone thru the gaurdrail and a barb wire fence. His car was badly smashed up, but he was only slightly bruised and badly shaken up from his narrow escape.

The Camp Fire Girls hiked out to the R. W. Elder farm Tuesday and had a fine meeting.

TRAINED DOGS WILL APPEAR AT BAYSIDE SUNDAY

Milwaukee Red Sox Will Play The O-P Team Sunday Afternoon

Nagle's wonder dogs will be at Bayside Amusement Park, Clear Lake, noxt Sunday, July 10th. This group of trained canines is now at Riverview Park, Des Moines. Mr Nagle has taught his dozen or more white dogs a number of new and thrilling stunts. They will perform afternoon and evening with other attractions on the open-air stage. At three o'clock Sunday the Milwaukee Red Sox will play the Mason City O-P team at the Bayside ball park. Another good game is predicted. The Webster City band will play concerts in the afternoon and evening. This is a large band and it will entertain Bayside's Sunday visitors with delightful programs. Each Sunday many families take their lunches to Bayside and use the free picnic grounds and tables. The children amuse themselves at the playgrounds. Dances are now held at Bayside on Wednesday and Friday nights and at the White Pier on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, Hurst's Club Royal Orchestra is supplying the music.

METHODIST CHUROH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Services for this week and next Sunday are as follows:

Morning worship at ten o'clock in Klemme and at eleven thirty o'clock in Liberty Church. The Sunday School is held in Liberty before and in Klemme after preaching service. We shall begin and close on time and try to have all services during the hot weather period brief and profitable.

Both Women's Foreign Missionary Societies meet this week. The Liberty Society meets on Wednesday afternoon at the church and has a joint meeting with the King's Heralds (Children s Society). The Klemme Society meets at the home of Mrs. John Josten and they have the Extension members for their guests of honor.

Junior League meets again Saturday afternoon on the church lawn.

Epworth League and preaching service regular on Sunday evening. The attendance for the most part, in the several services has been splendid, let us continue!

NO SERVICES AT REFORMED CHURCH SUNDAY

There will be no services at the Klemme Reformed Church next Sunday as the pastor will be at Berne, Minnesota to take part in the installation of Rev. Klaudt of that place.

KLEMME AUXILIARY ISSUE A REPORT OF ACTIVITIES

Have Done Much Toward Relief Of Flood Victims

Following is a report of the work done by the Klemme Auxiliary Unit from May 5th to June 15th and which is of interest to the people of Klemme in general:

Collected $80.55 for flood district relief.

Made four complete new layettes for flood sufferers (Each layette consisting of 25 pieces.) Also sent some clothing which was donated for the same.

The Unit bought three subscriptions to the Iowa Legionaire and gave one to each Gold Star Mother in town and one to the Public School reading table.

Had a party for an Auxiliary member who was leaving town.

Made two pairs of curtains for the Soldiers Hospital at Knoxville.

Sent $2.00 each month for Child Welfare Work.

Had Poppy Sale which amounted to $30.70.

Completed history of Unit and sent to the State Historian.

Auxiliary now has 25 members.

Auxiliary holds their meetings the first Thursday night of every month at the Legion Hall.

Grandma Schroeder and Mrs. M. Croner entertained Mrs. Lena Schroeder and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schroeder, of Chicago, to a duck dinner Monday.

NORTH IOWA CROPS SHOW UP VERY FINE

SOUTHERN IOWA CROPS NOT UP WITH NORTHERN CROPS

Corn Is Knee High Around Ames And Des Moines

Ye Editor and family left early last Thursday morning for an over the Fourth visit with Mrs. Jorgenson's sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs Hugh Chapman at Kansas City, Missouri and with other friends and relatives.

We took particular note of the crops on the way down and compared them with crpps in Hancock County, and our conclusions are that North Iowa is far ahead of the south section of the state this year.

Corn from here to Ames looks very gdoo, and of course, it is knee high and better around Ames and Des Moines. Further south in Iowa the corn looks poor; being very spotted in appearance, that is, some quite high, more rather small and the stand being very poor.

Around Osceola and Leon are a great number of timothy hay lands and this crop is excellent.

Around St. Joseph and Kansas City the corn again looks good and in many places is waist high and the stand is good this year.

Practically all of the wheat and oats has been cut around there and it appears to be real good and the shocks set thick on the fields.

Small grain all along the way is looking good this year and the pastures and haylands are doing well as plenty of rain has fallen until just recently as it is ow getting a little dry.

Taken alltogether the crops in this section of the state are very good compared to crops further to the suth, which are usually about two weeks ahead of us.

We would say that the Hancock County farmer is "sitting pretty" this year.

DIRK ULEN PANHOFF DIED LAST WEDNESDAY EVENING

Had Been A Resident Of Hancock County Nearly Twenty Years

Dirk Ulen Panhoff was born on the 13th of April, 1859 at Marienhafen, Germany. He attended the schools and Church of Marienhafon and was confirmed on the 6th day of April, 1879

On the 2nd of April, 1892 he was united in marriage to Miss Grace Osterkamp, of Eilson Osterfriesland. The young couple came to America the same year and found a home at Grundy Center, Iowa. Later they came to Hancock County ,living on a farm near Goodell for about 12 years. During the last 7 years the Panhoff family resided on a farm in Liberty Township.

Mr. Panhoff had been ailing for about seven months and he died June 29th, 1927 at 8:30 o'clock in the evening, at the age of 68 years, 2 months and 16 days.

Twelve children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Panhoff, two of whom died in infancy. Surviving him and mourning his death are: his wife, seven sons: John, Kasper, Fred, Edward, Dick, William and Melvin; three daughters, Mrs. Mickish, Mrs. F. Hess and Mrs. C. Louden; 13 grandchildren, and one brother in Germany.

Funeral services were held at the Klemme Reformed Church Saturday afternoon with Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch in charge. Interment was made at the Goodell Cemetery.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank all those who so kindly assisted us in our recent bereavement, for words of sympathy and for the flowers from the Klemme Legion and Auxiliary and from friends. Mrs. Dirk Panhoff and family.

The Misses Marie Gauger, Mabel Schaefer, Dora Swanson and Ethel Wellemeyer all came home from Cedar Falls to spend the week end and the Fourth with home folks. They are attending summer school at the State Teachers College.

BENNINGTON BATTLE MONUMENT

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN STARK

UNITED STATES-VERMONT SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AMONG the many sesquicentennial celebrations which have already been observed or which are yet to take place there is none more interesting than the one which will be held at Bennington, Vermont, on August 16 of this year. It commemorates the victory of Gen. John Stark and his force of patriots over the British troops commanded by Colonel Baum, which had been sent by General Burgoyne to capture the large stores of supplies that had been placed in this little Vermont village. The sesquicentennial celebration of this American victory is of particular interest for more reasons than one. It is a high spot in the history of the Green Mountain state but its historical importance is far greater than that of an event in the history of one state, or of the three states, Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, all of which have a share in the glory of that victory.

For one thing, Bennington was an important event in the campaign which proved to be the turning point of the American Revolution. The defeat of Baum and the failure to capture the supplies which Burgoyne so sorely needed was the second blow that had been struck at the ambitious plan of this British general to split the colonies, by cutting off "the head" of the rebellion, New England, from the rest. The first blow had been struck ten days earlier when the expedition of Col. Barry St. Leger failed before Ft. Schuyler in western New York. Sesquicentennial celebrations of this part of the campaign—the Battle of Oriskany and the successful defense of Ft. Schuyler—will also be held this summer. These celebrations and the one at Bennington are a preliminary to the one which will be held in October at Saratoga where was fought one of the Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World, and where the final downfall of Burgoyne took place. Since Bennington was one of the steps which led to Saratoga, the celebration there this summer has nation-wide significance.

In recognition of that fact there was formed some time ago a United States-Vermont sesquicentennial commission of which President Coolidge is a member and this commission, co-operating with the Vermont State Sesquicentennial commission, headed by John Spargo, who is also president of the Vermont Historical society and of the Bennington Battle Monument and Historical association, will have charge of the dual sesquicentennial anniversary: that of the independence of Vermont, and of the Battle of Bennington. In honor of these events the United States government has issued a commemorative half dollar and early in August will issue a commemorative postage stamp.

In addition to these, the local association has issued another medal, designed by Charles Keck, reproductions of which are shown above. Five hundred of these medals in bronze have been struck off and they have already taken a high place among the rarities and are much sought after by numismatists.

On the medal shown above appears Fay's Tavern, which was the headquarters of the Council of Safety at the time of the battle, and there General Stark held his most important councils of war. The victory wreath of laurel surrounding the Tavern bears the names of some of the patriots prominently identified with the battle. Three names are especially notable since they represent the states of New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts. New Hampshire is represented by the name of General Stark since that state had given him the rank of general and placed him in command of its militia. Vermont is represented by Col. Seth Warner, commander of the Vermont forces and said to be the real victor at the battle. The name Allen at the bottom in the center, stands for Parson Allen of Massachusetts. The other names are those of the captains of the local companies of militia and the local victims who perished on the field. On the reverse side of the medal is a Green Mountain Boy with his firelock poised, guarding the Stars and Stripes.

The appearance of the Stars and Stripes on this medal is of particular importance because it represents some unknown history which has come to light during the preparations for the celebration of this anniversary. As a result of the investigations of John Spargo, whose qualifications as a historian are indicated by the positions which he holds, some of the history of the United States flag may have to be rewritten. According to the popular belief, the first American flag, composed of alternate red and white stripes and a field of blue with white stars upon it, to fly in the face of the enemy, was that which was raised over Ft. Schuyler on August 3, 1777. Historians generally have accepted this fact, even though the evidence was not absolutely conclusive. The researches of Mr. Spargo have developed the fact that the honor claimed for Ft. Schuyler in reality belongs to Bennington.

In an address on "Vermont and the Stars and Stripes in 1777" made before the Vermont Society of the Sons of the American Revolution a short time ago he presented the results of his investigations which demolished the tradition of the raising of a Stars and Stripes flag at Ft. Schuyler, at least, so far as the stars in the blue field are concerned. In the Bennington Battle museum visitors at the celebration this summer will see the flag which was raised by Stark's forces, 150 years ago, which so far as is now known, is the oldest Stars and Stripes flag in existence and which it is believed, as a result of Mr. Spargo's researches, was the first flag of its kind to fly in the face of the enemy and therefore takes that honor from the Ft. Schuyler banner. It is this flag which is shown on the medal reproduced above. This flag is of unique design, the stripes being in the reverse order, that is, the white stripe on top. The stars are seven-pointed and arranged in the form of a Masonic arch.

This Bennington battle flag has a romantic history. It is believed to have been present at the Battle of Saratoga and the surrender of Burgoyne and eventually came into the possession of Nathaniel Fillmore, grandfather of Millard Fillmore, President of the United States, who preserved it and handed it down to his descendants. For many years it was in the possession of members of his family who lived in Illinois, but eventually it was turned over to the Bennington Battle Monument and Historical association. Among the names on the victory wreath shown on the medal is that of Fillmore, which stands for Nathaniel Fillmore, who preserved for posterity this historic relic.

Just as Mr Spargo, in connection with the plans for the Bennington sesquicentennial, has corrected some of the erroneous ideas about the first Stars and Stripes to be carried into battle, it is appropriate that some popular misconceptions about the battle itself be corrected. In the first place the battle itself was not fought at Bennington in the state of Vermont but at Walloomsac in the state of New York. Bennington was the headquarters of General Stark and so the battle has come down to us named after that town, even though it was fought six miles away. According to the popular idea the victory was won by "General Stark and his Green Mountain Boys," thus implying that Stark was a Vermonter. He was not. He was a native of Manchester, New Hampshire, and had served with distinction as a colonel at the Battle of Bunker Hill and under Washington at Trenton and Princeton. He had resigned from the Continental army because he had been passed over in the making of promotions and the people of New Hampshire felt that he had been discriminated against because he was a plain man of the people.

When Burgoyne's army captured Ticonderoga in July, 1777, consternation spread throughout Vermont and New Hampshire. Vermont had but a short time previously declared its independence as a state and it was felt that the capture of "Old Ti" had laid the new commonwealth open to any punishment which Burgoyne might wish to inflict upon its people. Vermont called upon New Hampshire for assistance in repelling the invaders and urged that such forces as that state could raise be placed under an independent command instead of the regular officers of the Continental army, in whom they had no confidence. New Hampshire raised a force of militia, and placed Stark in command with the rank of general. Officers of the Continental army resented this action by New Hampshire and congress on August 19 passed a vote of censure, three days after the victory at Bennington had been won and just a day before the news of the battle reached that august body!

General Stark marched his troops to Manchester, Vermont, on August 7, and was met by General Lincoln with orders from General Schuyler to join him at Stillwater, New York. He was also met by the Vermont Council of Safety which urged him to disobey Schuyler's orders. The state government of New Hampshire upheld Stark and instead of going to Stillwater, he marched to Bennington, planning to strike Burgoyne on his left wing. On August 13, Stark received word of the approach of a force of British and Hessians under Colonel Baum. On the morning of August 14, Stark and his men, accompanied by Colonels Warner, Herrick, Brush and Williams, marched out to meet Baum. At the same time he sent messengers to Manchester to summon Warner's regiment of Continentals which had been left there in charge of Lieutenant-Colonel Safford, and to rally the militia. He then set forth to meet the enemy, drew up his forces in battle array and awaited Baum's attack. Baum, however, took up a strong position and halted. So Stark drew back about a mile, and pitched his camp for the night within the present town of Bennington. That night a body of troops, commanded by the redoubtable "fighting parson," the Rev. Thomas Allen of Pittsfield, arrived from Massachusetts. The next morning, although it was raining in torrents and Warner had not yet arrived, Stark decided to attack. For an hour and a half Stark could make little headway against the entrenched enemy but at last about four-thirty in the afternoon, his men gained the crest of the hill and after a half hour of desperate hand-to-hand fighting, the enemy retreated, leaving in the hands of the victors their mortally wounded commander. The house in which Baum died a short time later is still standing.

After the flight of the British, Stark's undisciplined forces scattered over the field collecting the plunder. Suddenly another force of 500 British, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Breyman, who had been marching to reinforce Baum, appeared. Stark's men were taken by surprise and fell into line in the greatest disorder. At a critical moment Warner's forces appeared and Breyman was defeated. Stark's army was approximately 2,500 men, composed mostly of militia and volunteers. It outnumbered the enemy, it is true, but that enemy was composed of 1,400 disciplined and well-trained troops, among them the flower of the British army and their allies, the Hessians. In one day, Stark's men fought two stubborn engagements with a loss of 30 killed and 40 wounded. The enemy suffered a loss of more than 200 killed, 700 prisoners, 4 cannon and 900 muskets, swords and pistols. The victory at Bennington did more than strike a blow at Burgoyne's plans. More important was the fact that it raised the morale of the patriots after a long, unbroken chain of discouraging events. The bells of Boston pealed forth in rejoicing when the news became known. The congress, which on August 19 had passed the resolution of censure, on October 4 voted its thanks to Stark and his men and made him a brigadier general in the United States army.

New Section of Montana Is Open to Settlement

More than 1,000,000 acres of rich Montana land in the great Redwater Valley will be opened up and provided with new transportation this year by a branch line of the Northern Pacific Railway now being built from Glendive to Brookway

This territory has long been known to possess rich, well-sodded soil adapted to the production of specialty or diversified crops. In the immediate vicinity a new type of corn has proved so successful that the acreage of this crop in Montana has increased by hundreds of thousands of acres in recent years. Corn has paved the way for livestock production, dairying and a variety of crops including oats, flax, barley, alfalfa, sweet clover and garden truck.

Wheat produced here averages 14% protein content and has graded consistently 72% number 1 quality, a classification which has determined top prices on every market. The yearly production of wheat is increasing in this region as well as in the state as a whole. Montana last year produced 11,000,000 bushels more of wheat than in 1925.

The area now served by the new branch line, although considered the greatest potential farm area in the Northwest, has never been developed to the extent its fertility merits.

Already several important groups are preparing to move in. Communities are established in some of the sections already. Churches have been built. Schools are open and well attended.

"The Northern Pacific will do everything in its power to assist the new settlers," says J. M. Hughes, Land Commissioner. "It is prepared to advise and assist in the selection of seed and equipment—in the selection of soil and location for the kind of farming desired. We want the right kind of farmers—settlers, not speculators. Farmers who will build homes, help develop the country, and share in the rich future which we believe is inevitable for Montana, will be favored in our settlement program."

It's pretty hard to be good-natured and dishonest at the same time.

Elevator for Mount Blanc

Mount Blanc, Europe's tallest mountain, will soon be "climbed" by elevator. The cableway, with a car similar to a hotel elevator and carrying from 50 to 70 people, will soon be in operation from Chamonixto the summit of Aiguille du Midi. The ascent may then be made in two hours and without guides. Construction of the elevator cableway was started years ago, but was interrupted by the war.

YOURSELF and YOUR BODY

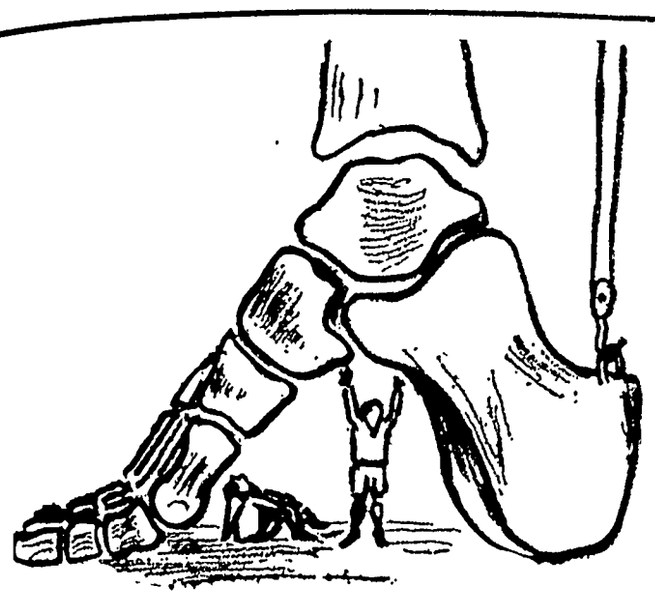
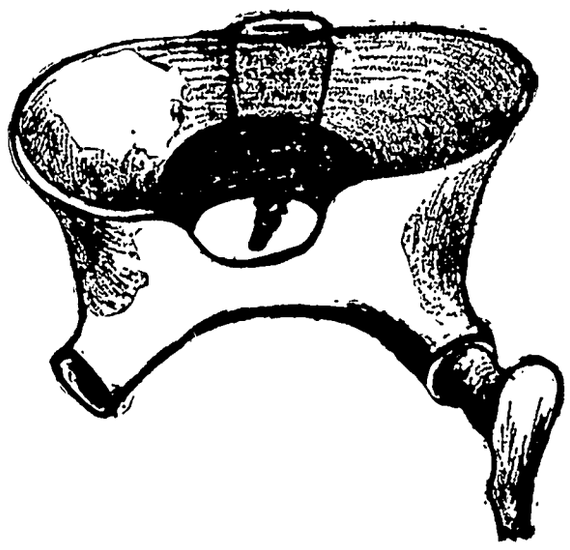
THE DIFFERENT UNITS

How to Make a Powerful Arch—Your Knee Cap.



The Arch of the Foot and the Tendon for Pulling Up the Heel.



The Basin That Makes the Arch.

NEXT we must make a big arch to stand our spine and head on. The pillars must be on good pedestals, and we will put them on arches also so as to be stronger and give good springiness, since these pillars must be able to jump about with the weight of the body on the top of them. Luckily we have better stuff than steel to use, because steel wears out, while bones and gristle repair themselves. Each arch needs twenty-seven bones. Here are pictures of the arches. The back end, called the heel, has to be very solid and with no joint in it, since it has to use the lever to lift the body. The toe pad must be all springs.

"Now bring two good long bones to rest on the top of the arch. There must be some play again to prevent breaking, so we will just lash these together with ligaments or binders. We must have a joint half way up or our body will never be able to run about, or stoop down and pick up anything. Now we must get the pillars set up. Fetch the bones and we will set them together. Now we will call these legs.

"Now for the next pillars. They must go on the top of the last like gymnasts in a Marconi station. They must not be tied to the side like common poles, but balanced on the top, and even then with spring enough to bend and run and jump. I'll show you later how that is managed. But now watch those great, huge, heavy bones which are able to carry anything. We shall need a big scaffold and some strong pulleys and ropes to get them in place. They have balls on the top, because ball bearings are the best; they don't come out of the sockets easily, and are strong and work very smoothly.

"Done at last. Now comes the job of putting the cap on the arch and having two good sockets to fit it onto the nice round heads of the pillars. We will call these thighs.

"Let us think what we shall want on the top of our arch. What comes after it? Our body. What is inside the body?"

"Our bowels."

"Yes. They are awfully slippery things, aren't they? Like a lot of eels—sprawling everywhere if only you will let them. A flat top will be good, for everything would tumble off, so we will have a top like a basin or a basket. Also, all the waste water which we drink and all the ashes of the food collect there, so of course a basket-shaped bowl is needed. It is like two arches, back to back, and stretched also from side to side. There are lots of give everywhere, so that it will be almost impossible to crush it. The edge is there to fit the spine upon. That will make the keystone for our arch.

"This bony basket will be closed behind, and being the lowest part has to hold the cesspools of useless water and the garbage until the time comes when it is convenient for us to empty them. The cap of the arch closes the basket on the top. Now we will hoist the whole into place. There is the big arch complete. The rigging on the great arch shows how it is braced up. Now we can build up the spine to carry our head office. Won't it be a fine lookout for seeing around! Also where you can suck in all the fresh air you need. We have put a rubber buffer between each block of the spine, as I told you before. Also you can see by the picture how the body can stand on tip-toe; that is really how we lift up the body and carry it forward when we walk.

"On the right leg I have put in the muscles to show you how they are tied to the bones. I have not put them all in. But you see how they bend the leg and kick it out again. The little bone in the muscle over the knee is the kneecap. It is a kind of lever, and also protects the joint. You can feel it in your knee if you put your heel on this chair and move the little kneecap from side to side with your fingers."

Nature Marked Grave of Murdered Soldier

By the roadside near the old Hosmer place, between Avon and Caledonia in western New York, a wild flower grows that is interesting because it is the only one of its kind in all that region, but that is still more interesting because it is connected with a strange, true story of the War of 1812.

One Sunday afternoon in October, 1814, a large body of troops from Fort Niagara, near Buffalo, encamped to eat their midday rations on their way to Sackett's Harbor. They had been paid the day before, and were jovial and lively; but before night the body of a dead soldier was discovered in a clump of bushes, not far from the smoldering embers of the camp fire. There was a bullet hole through his head and an attempt to conceal his body indicated that he had been murdered.

Word was promptly sent to the officer in command of the troops and by a roll call he discovered that two stragglers had been left behind when the troops resumed their march. One of them was the dead soldier, John Alexander from Connecticut. The other was suspected of the murder, arrested, tried and punished. John Alexander was buried by the side of the road where he was found, and there the matter dropped. But the following year a plant of a species unknown before in that region sprang up on the grave, and the next year two other stalks of the same plant appeared a few feet from the first one. Little attention was paid to them at first, but gradually people noticed that the same unknown plant sprang up vigorously each year in the same spot and flourished and blossomed about the time of the wheat harvest.

Finally, a visiting botanist recognized it as false gromwell, a plant that is indigenous to the soil of Connecticut; and some one remembered that Connecticut was the soldier's home state. How came this Connecticut plant to grow on that lonely, neglected grave beside that New York road? people asked. Was there in the soldier's pocket a letter from loved ones at home containing the flower of the plant, which had ripened into seed and taken root?

The mystery has never been solved, but the flower still blossoms every year on the spot where the murdered soldier was buried more than a century ago.

Methods Used to Control Yellows

Disease of Cabbage Is Caused by a Fungus Which Persists in Soil.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Yellows of cabbage, through injury to the fibrous root system, stunts the plants, giving them a lifeless, yellowish green color. It may usually be noticed in two to four weeks after transplanting, but may appear in the seedbed. Yellows is caused by a fungus which persists in the soil for many years. The disease greatly retards the growth of the plants, death resulting, in the worse cases, within two weeks or so after transplanting. Most of the plants, however, continue a sickly existence for a month or more, and a few live through the summer, heading imperfectly.

Only Safety Plan.

While various methods are employed to control the yellows, the only safety lies either in planting the crop on disease-free land or in using only yellows-resistant varieties. The Volga and Houser are the most resistant of the older domestic varieties. The Wisconsin Holl der is a disease-resistant selection from the standard winter variety Hollander, or Danish Ballhead, and should be planted wherever the late crop is grown on "yellows-sick" soil. All Seasons and Brunswick, two of the leading midseason varieties used for sauerkraut, are now known in the trade as Wisconsin All Seasons and Wisconsin Brunswick, respectively.

Disinfection of Seed.

Disinfection of the seed reduces the danger of spreading the disease to new districts. Put the seed in a sack of a thinly woven material, such as coarse cheesecloth, large enough to allow thorough agitation of the seed. Soak for 30 minutes in a solution composed of corrosive sublimate (mercuric chloride and water in the proportion of 1 to 1,000. This chemical can be obtained from drug stores in tablet form, the package containing directions for making up the solution. After soaking, thoroughly rinse in clean water, then split the sack and spread out seed in a thin layer to dry, stirring as necessary. Corrosive sublimate is a deadly poison, and both tablets and solution must be kept out of reach of children and farm animals.

Check Depredations of Different Garden Pests

Some insects are not fussy about their diet. They will devour almost any of the vegetables. Of this type are cutworms, plant lice, flea beetles, But the leaf hopper dines chiefly upon potatoes, tomatoes, strawberries and beans. A nicotine sulphate or dust will control this pest, and also plant lice.

Favorite foods of the flea beetle are radishes, cabbages, turnips, tomatoes, potatoes and eggplants. This pest usually feeds on the underside of the leaves, and can best be destroyed with nicotine dust or bordeaux mixture. About the only way to check the depredations of those bandits, the cutworm and the grasshopper, is with a poisoned bran mash.

Asparagus has a beetle of its own. Spraying from both sides with lead arsenate will put a quietus upon this red, black and yellow feeder; also upon the Colorado potato beetle, the tortoise beetle, which attacks the sweet potato; the horn worm and fruit worm, which are the tomato's chief foes, and the worst enemies of the plebeian but necessary cabbage—the cabbage worm and cabbage looper.

Sudan Grass Is Favored for Live-Stock Pasture

Sudan grass has proved to be the most satisfactory summer pasture for all classes of live stock in Kansas, according to the report of L. E. Call, dean of the division of agriculture at the Kansas State Agricultural college and director of the Kansas experiment station. It retains its succulence in dry weather and withstands drought better than any other pasture crop under observation by the experiment station.

Sweet clover is less valuable for hogs than alfalfa but is satisfactory for cattle and sheep.

Orchard grass has proved to be one of the most satisfactory permanent pasture grasses. It is easy to start, stands grazing well, and all classes of live stock relish it throughout the entire grazing season.

Charleston in Ireland

The charleston has been included in the annual dancing tournament between cities of Ulster, Ireland. It is not classed as one of the regular dances, such as the fox trot, waltz and tango, but is given a special and separate competition. The tournament this year was conducted in Victoria hall, Belfast, by the Ulster Amateur Dancing championship, and every amateur dancer in Ulster was eligible. The first p e was a loving cup presented by the lord mayor of Belfast when the contest was inaugurated three years ago. Miss Katherine Watson of Derry judged the trials, and admitted that Belfast had better dancers than Derry.

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

MAKE USE OF MAPS AS DRESS PATTERNS

Old maps are amusing and interesting, says the Paris correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. Whether they will be altogether suitable as patterns for dresses remains to be seen. The French couturiers, who have ransacked the world for ideas, have now hit upon the notion of designing geographical frocks. They have taken the Sixteenth and Seventeenth century maps and propose to convey their quaint colors and contours to silks and satins. Afternoon and evening robes are dotted with many-starred mariners' compasses and little images indicating winds.

Sometimes the new frocks are covered with wavy seas and tree-bearing islands, but others are simply bordered with map scales. The firm which first thought of this ornamentation made a large collection of early travel books containing primitive maps. It is said that the new models have been favorably received by the "trade."

"Shut Your Eyes and Look"

Dr. Alexander Cairns, contributing to the editorial page of the San Francisco Examiner, is moved to rhapsody on the subject of education. With great eloquence he declaims: "No Roman triumph staged by American Caesars returning from foreign conquests ever thrilled with such passionate significance as that endless procession of American youth marching away to the seats of higher learning." He adds: "Just shut your eyes and look at them." He follows his own advice and declares: "Note the epaulets and culture and the music of synthesized talents, and the proud and stately bearing of innate ambition." That is exactly what one might expect a man with his eyes shut to see.—The Argonaut.

That's All

The daughter of the house had taken delight in listening to her father dictate the cryptic words of a telegram over the phone. Later that day at the supper table she was making a detailed explanation of something to her mother. Her father asked her, when she had stopped talking, whether she had anything more to say.

"No," she replied, "that's all there is. Period. Stop."

Big Colonies for Brazil

The Brazilian government has just granted to a Japanese company a concession of nearly 250,000,000 acres of land in three different zones in the state of Amazonas for colonization purposes. The company will spend a large sum developing the region in which the concessions will be established.

Meant Well, Anyway

For months an aged Indian woman of Visalia, Calif., dropped cents in the toll booth at the passenger station. When asked the reason she explained that she always contributed to worthy causes and thought the phone box was a contribution box for charity.

MOUNDS MAY HOLD SECRETS OF PAST

Camp Sites in Texas Interest Anthropologists.

Camp sites thousands of years old on the plains of Texas and ancient funeral mounds in the wooded regions of the state may hold the secret of the relations of three of the greatest Indian civilizations ever on the American continent.

The Aztecs of ancient Mexico, the pueblo dwellers of southwest United States and the mysterious mound builders of the Mississippi valley, form a triangle at the apex of which lie the remains of a little-known culture of prehistoric Texas, says Dr. J. E. Pearce, professor of anthropology of the University of Texas.

Ancient camp sites known as the "Burn Rock Mounds," are found on the plains and prairies of Texas along streams and water holes, Doctor Pearce says. These mounds are from four to five feet high and are made up of superheated limestone, with bones and other kitchen refuse. Nowhere else in the world are mounds of just this type found, says Doctor Pearce, who has studied some of these camp sites. He found not only the bones of many animals and birds, such as the buffalo, deer and turkey, but also many human leg bones split for getting at the marrow. These Indians, with their at least occasional taste for human flesh, must have built one fire on top of another until, after thousands of feasts cooked on limestone slabs, the mounds piled up.

There is no doubt of their great antiquity, Doctor Pearce believes, because many of the mounds contain as much as 1,500 cubic yards of refuse, and one cubic yard of material piled up in a year is a fair estimate. The chances are that they are still much older than this accumulation rate would indicate, because the Indians were a nomadic race and the camp sites may only have been occupied for a few weeks all told in a year. The Texas Indians of historic times knew nothing of these mounds or where they came from, and they were no longer used when the white man arrived. Doctor Pearce believes that their beginnings may go back from 2,000 to possibly 5,000 years.

Another group of prehistoric Texas Indians had established a civilization in the wooded parts of the state and built mounds in which to bury their dead. They were clever potters and rivaled the earthenware of the Mississippi valley mound builders.

A study of the remains of these two civilizations might yield valuable data on the migrations and origins of early American cultures, Doctor Pearce says. —Science Service Bulletin.

Hunters Grow in Number

More than 5,150,000 hunting licenses were taken out during the season 1925-26 by sportsmen throughout the United States, including Alaska, and the returns to state treasuries amounted to more than $6,800,000. Although data are lacking from four states, detailed figures for the season compiled by the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture show increases in the numbers of licenses issued and fees received over the two years preceding.

In 1923-24 season the licenses numbered 4,395,000, and the fees paid were $5,594,982. One year later 4,904,740 hunters paid for their licenses a total of $6,190,803.94. During the 1925-26 season the license figures were 5,168,353, and the fees paid totaled $6,872,812.59. Pennsylvania with 525,045 licenses and fees of $646,467.25 headed the list both in licenses and returns to the state treasury.

Railway Through Forest

The Nepal government railway, the first passenger line in the kingdom of Nepal, has just been opened. It is 24 miles long, extending from Raxaul, terminus of the Bengal and Northwestern railway, to Amlekhganj. It cuts the traveling time between the two places from three days to one. For eight miles the line runs through the Bhaber forest, which is the home of tigers, rhinoceroses and many other wild animals. Malaria is so prevalent that land had to be cleared for half a mile on each side of the track to prevent the spread of the disease to passengers.

Country's "Special Weeks"

Though there are only 52 ordinary weeks on the calendar, the civic development department of the United States Chamber of Commerce has compiled a list of 100 "special weeks" to be celebrated during the year in this country. Alphabetically, these special weeks range from "Achievement week" to "Y. W. C. A. Week." These special weeks do not include a wide variety of special days which are set aside for mother, father and a whole array of famous men, as well as private interests.

Thrifty Philadelphian

Diogenes has a rival in Philadelphia who bids fair to outdo him in simplicity. The other night he was seen in the Reading terminal washroom shaving himself with a safety razor blade.

Perhaps it was money, maybe time he wished to save. Soap and water are free there, and he had a safety razor blade. That does not mean handle and blade combined, but just the blade. He did a good job with what material he had on hand.—Philadelphia Record.

WORLD'S WISDOM

Hope is the mother of faith.

Dignity becomes elderliness.

The well of true wit is truth.

Struggle makes life worth living.

Time is of value, but it is inexhaustible.

There is nothing the world needs so much as cheer.

Nothing is achieved by harsh and bitter criticism.

Never judge a man by the opinion he has of himself.

One can love his enemy, but hardly a malicious one.

Pursuit of culture should not be accompanied by vanity.

Everyone in his own house and God in all of them.—Cervantes.

A woman doesn't thoroughly enjoy anything she can't cry over.

People are always getting in the way of genius and obstructing it.

Some widows seem to think that a husband is better late than never.

If you would advertise your troubles without cost tell them to a gossip.

A woman doesn't really begin to have faith in a man until other people lose it.

Some men are so mean that they even refuse to let their wives have the last word.

A man may be able to trade his reputation for money, but he can't trade back.

A bad temper is something that always catches us off our guard; and its tricks are endless.

One of the things a man can't understand is why his enemies seem to have so many friends.

Sometimes a woman spends a great deal of time looking for a husband after she has secured him.

Has Society No Place for Repentant Sinners?

An inmate of a prison at Alcatraz, Calif., writes to us as follows: "There is no one to whom I can speak and none would understand if I did. I am soon to be released from Alcatraz prison and I have nothing to look forward to. What have I to live for? Those who pretend friendship are cold. My faults are all they see. There is no one to say 'I will help.' It is hard. Yet I am used to it. I am now thirty-three years of age. Twelve years have I spent behind bars. What have I learned? The answer is, nothing. I have degraded myself so low through the association with other inmates that it seems hopeless to be a success in the future. But regardless of what others may think or say I will endure until my aim in life is accomplished and I clear myself of this black stigma that rests upon me. It is true I have done wrong in the past, but I have paid dearly, as only those who know confinement understand."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Henhouse "Warming"

John Walker, of Gray Mills, Maine, has just completed a commodious new henhouse. It is such a nice henhouse, in fact, that Mr. Walker decided it is fit for social affairs—until the hens move in—and so as a sort of dedicatory function he entertained at whist in the building. Candles provided the illumination, pine boughs were used as decorations and there were five tables at play.

Making Horse Comfortable

One day grandmother came to town driving her horse and buggy to visit her four-year-old grand-daughter, Jean. On her arrival she tied the horse to the hitching post in front of the home. Jean, delighted with seeing her grandmother, rushed into the house to announce her arrival by saying: "Grandma will be in as soon as she hangs her horse up."

Frivolous Parisians

Paw plates for dogs of the idle rich are appearing on Paris boulevards. A little silver chain holds a half-inch silver plate on the left front leg of the dog. The plate carries the name and address of the wearer. It looks, at first glance, much like a wrist watch, which may be the next step.

Rainproof

Spriggs—Strohm doesn't save a cent. What would he do in case of a rainy day?

O'Neil—Write a couple of rubber checks.—Judge.

Sure Thing

"A business doctor suggests that to avoid opening small charge accounts the merchant loan the customer $5."

"That ought to bring in plenty of customers."

Tiresome

Gwen—I took this letter out of your book. Were you using it for a bookmark, dear?

Geraldine—My cats! Yes, I was. Now I'll have to start all over!

Mr. George Elder and two children, Earl and Vera, came from Vernon Center, Minn., last Wednesday for a visit at the R. W. Elder home.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Army Lieutenants Fly to Honolulu, and Byrd Hops to France.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

TWO more great feats in aviation marked the week, and both were American accomplishments. First and of more importance was the flight of Lieuts. Lester J. Maitland and Albert Hegenberger from San Francisco to Honolulu. Taking off from the Oakland municipal airport in a huge three-motor army Fokker monoplane early Tuesday morning, they reached Wheeler field on the island of Oahu, their destination, in 25 hours and 50 minutes. The distance is about 2,400 miles.

The army aviators thus made the longest transoceanic airplane flight on record, and made it without mishap. The passengers and crew of the steamer Sonoma, 740 miles from the Golden Gate, were electrified when Maitland brought his plane out of the mist and dropped to within 200 feet of the water as he passed by. He had then been more than nine hours on his way.

The next report from the flyers came from the steamship President Pierce, 1,100 miles from California, which reported hearing their radio asking for a bearing to be sent to establish location. At 3 a. m. the plane radioed that the flyers were 700 miles off Honolulu.

The landing was made on a rain-soaked field. The huge plane taxied the entire length of the field. Then, circling it came back to the front of the review stand, where army, navy and civil authorities were waiting to extend congratulations to the flyers. The crowd went wild with joy and enthusiasm. Guns thundered in salute as the plane stopped before the reviewing stand.

Colonel Howard, department air officer, rushed to the plane, grasped Maitland's hand and shouted, "You did it, and I congratulate you."

Maj. Gen. Edward M. Lewis, commander of the Hawaiian department of the army, clasped hands with Maitland and Hegenberger. The eyes of both aviators filled with tears as he said:

"My boys, I congratulate you."

Maitland said that the radio beacon on the island of Maui failed to function.

"Our compass," he said, "is what got us here. If we hadn't had that we should have been out of luck."

The flyers were presented to Gov. Wallace R. Farrington, Rear Admiral John D. McDonald and other dignitaries, who loaded them with beautiful Hawaiian flowers and leis, the native emblems of greeting.

Cablegrams and radio messages of congratulation were showered on the happy young men, and they were especially pleased by a congratulatory wire from Commander Byrd, who learned by radio of the success of their flight while himself winging his way across the Atlantic. Army officials in Washington were especially pleased by the achievement of two of the army's birdmen, which supplemented the almost successful attempt of Commander John Rodgers of the navy in the fall of 1925. Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, in his dispatch to the lieutenants, said:

"I can't help alluding to the fact that coming on top of the Byrd polar flight and the Lindbergh and Chamberlin flights, this latest flight again demonstrates the reliability of the air-cooled engine and represents a distinct advance in aviation."

HAVING waited many days for favorable weather, Commander Richard E. Byrd of the navy hopped off Wednesday morning from Roosevelt field, Long Island, on his scientific flight to France. With him in the big three-motored Fokker America were Bert Acosta, Lieut. George Noville and Bernt Balchen, formerly of the Norwegian navy. In the earlier stages of the flight the American made faster time than did Lindbergh or Chamberlin. Radio messages from Byrd were received frequently, and told of passing through continuous dense fog and low-lying clouds which completely cut off the vision of the aviators. Thursday afternoon the America reached France, where the airmen were warmly welcomed.

AFTER several days in Washington and New York, conferring with officials and business men concerned with aviation development, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh flew back to St. Louis for the purpose of getting his Spirit of St. Louis and making a non-stop flight to Ottawa, Canada, where he was to be the guest at the jubilee celebration of the Confederation of Canada. In New York, Harry F. Guggenheim, president of the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, made this announcement:

"Arrangements have just been completed under which Col. Charles A. Lindbergh will undertake a country-wide airplane tour of the United States for the purpose of furthering public interest in aviation development."

PROSPECTS are growing brighter for some good results from the naval limitation conference in Geneva. Great Britain had been steadfastly demanding virtual revision of the Washington agreement in a way the United States could scarcely accept, and Japan caused surprise by coming out in favor of the British proposals. But unanimity is a requisite and the American delegates showed not the slightest sign of yielding. Then the British apparently, though tacitly, recognized they could not put across their plan, though they still hoped that the question of the size of battleships might be discussed at a plenary session of the conference. The technical committee announced that "a considerable measure of agreement between the three delegations" concerning destroyers had been revealed.

In the matter of cruisers, the English delegates proposed that those vessels be divided into two classes. Only a limited number of the 10,000-ton 8-inch gun cruisers would be allocated, the balance of the cruiser tonnage going into ships below 7,500 tons, carrying 6-inch guns. These lighter ships would be worthless to the United States because it is without naval bases and the ships are incapable of accompanying a battle fleet into combat operations any great distance from a base. As the technicians decided against any limit for small craft under 600 tons, the Japanese and British could set the seas swarming with little boats jammed full of torpedoes, any one of which is capable of disabling a capital ship.

SACCO and Vanzetti, the Massachusetts radicals whose conviction for murder has attracted international attention, will not be executed during the week of July 10. Governor Fuller, who has been studying the case carefully, has granted the men a reprieve of 30 days. He has also given a 30-day respite to Celestino Madeiros, sentenced to death for another murder. Madeiros has asserted he was a member of the gang that committed the murders for which Sacco and Vanzetti were convicted and that they were not involved.

THREE years of trouble over the defunct Grain Marketing company and the Armour company was in a fair way to be ended when petitions were filed with the Illinois commerce commission to bring into existence a corporation to control eleven grain elevators in place of the Grain Marketing company. The Armour Grain company asks permission to quit operating public warehouses in Chicago and the Rosenbaum Grain corporation asks authority to enlarge its business and to issue $2,500,000 of bonds. The documents are in the names of the Export Elevator company, an Armour property, and the Postal Elevator company, a Rosenbaum organization.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE may include in his next message to congress a recommendation that an insular bureau be established under which the Philippines and our other island possessions would be gathered together under one civil department head. He told this to the correspondents after his conference with Governor General Wood. The idea is not new and has been suggested before by Mr. Coolidge.

The President said he had no change in Philippines policy in view as a result of his conversation with General Wood. He was encouraged, he said, by the report that the general gave as to conditions. The general result of the administration's attitude has been, he finds, an acceptance of the policy on the part of the Filipino people (political leaders excepted) and a feeling of security and stability. He pointed out that 95 per cent of the local government is in the hands of the natives; they hold nearly all the offices and carry on most of the government.

SOCIETY, especially in the East, was intensely interested in the news that Miss Grace Vanderbilt, twenty-seven-year-old daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, and Henry Gassaway Davis III, a mining engineer, had eloped in New York and were married first in the municipal building and later in the Little Church Around the Corner. The bride, according to report, had been sought in marriage by many men of high position, including Prince George of England, Lord Ivor Spencer Churchill and the marquis of Donegal. Her brother said that General and Mrs. Vanderbilt were strongly opposed to her marriage to Mr. Davis. The groom is a grandson of former Senator Davis of West Virginia. He was graduated from Princeton in 1924 and has been a post-graduate student at the Columbia school of mines.

REPRESENTATIVES of 45 nations gathered in Stockholm for the twenty-fourth convention of the International Chamber of Commerce. King Gustaf and the crown prince attended the opening session and the delegates were given a reception in the royal palace. The 400 German delegates were greeted with especial warmth by the other members, since this is the first time Germany has been represented at the international business parliament, as the convention is called.

INDICTMENTS against three of the most prominent bankers in Los Angeles in connection with the investigation of the overissue of stock of the Julian Petroleum corporation were returned in Superior court there. Fifty-five others already had been indicted in connection with the case.

The indicted bankers are Charles F. Stern, president of the Pacific Southwest Trust and Savings bank; John E. Barber, president of the First Securities company and vice president of the Pacific Southwest, and Motley H. Flint, executive vice president of the Pacific Southwest Trust and Savings bank. Stern and Barber are charged with felonies—three counts of embezzlement and another count of accepting a banker's bonus. Flint is charged with usury.

SHANGHAI cablegrams say that the Nationalists suffered a tremendous reverse at the hands of the northern army, losing hundreds of thousands killed, wounded and captured. But not much reliance should be placed on such stories until they are confirmed. Peking dispatches indicate that Chiang Kai-shek's offensive in Shantung is in full swing. Japanese along the Shantung are in a state of panic and calling for troops from Tsingtao. The moderate branch of the Nationalists has formally charged the Japanese with breach of neutrality, asserting that Japanese troops were sent into Shantung province for the purpose of enabling Marshal Chang to maintain the dictatorship of North China. Immediate withdrawal of the troops was demanded, together with cancellation of the unequal Sino-Japanese treaty and recognition of the Nanking government.

BOTH major political parties were warned by the Anti-Saloon league that, under the league's guidance, the drys in both parties will be organized to demand the nomination of "satisfactory" candidates for President and congress and on state and local tickets in the 1928 campaign.

The proclamation of the league, issued by its general counsel, Wayne B. Wheeler, asserts that "the Anti-Saloon league will use its well-established and successful methods in the coming political campign."

SAMUEL'S FAREWELL

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel, Chap. 12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy loving kindness is before mine eyes and I have walked in Thy truth.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Samuel the Faithful Servant.

JUNIOR TOPIC—An Old Man's Advice.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Make a Clean Record.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Righteousness in Public Life.

Samuel means "asked of God." God gave him in answer to his mother's prayer. She promised to give him back to God. In his early childhood his mother cared for and taught him. At an early age she handed him over to the care of Eli to minister unto the Lord in the Tabernacle. While he was thus engaged God called him. He responded to this call and spent a long life in useful service to God and his nation as judge and prophet. Our lesson today is his farewell address.

I. Samuel's Challenge to the People (vv. 1-5).

1. Reminder of the way the king had been given (v. 1).

He showed that they were directly responsible for the change in government. Though keenly feeling the reflection upon himself, and their ingratitude to God in their demand for a king, he had not resisted their wish.

2. Review of his own administration (vv. 2, 3).

(1) Walk from childhood (v. 2). Samuel's was a remarkable life; from childhood to old age he had lived an upright and pure life. (2) Career as judge and ruler (v. 3). He boldly challenged them to show where and how he had even in the smallest matters defrauded or oppressed anyone.

3. The vote of confidence by the people (vv. 4, 5).

It was Samuel's right as he laid down the reins of government to have his record vindicated and to have his integrity established beyond a doubt, so that no evil-minded man could ever be able to cast reproach upon him.

II. Samuel Reviews God's Dealing From the Time of Moses (vv. 6-15).

He reasoned with them concerning the good hand of the Lord upon them from the time of Moses. Though they with ingratitude turned from the Lord and demanded a king like the other nations, He had acceded to their request and set a king over them.

1. National prosperity conditioned by obedience (v. 14).

Though they had displeased God in choosing a king, if they would fear the Lord and render obedience, national prosperity would still be given. Would that the nations today could see that obedience to God is the only way to prosperity! Nations should find out God's will and then bring themselves into harmony therewith. God's law must be obeyed by the rulers as well as the subjects.

2. Disobedience to God meant the nation's ruin (v. 15).

It is folly to ask God's blessing upon a nation while it is living in rebellion against Him. True statesmanship is to find out God's will concerning the nation and so direct that in all its laws and customs there may be harmony with that will.

III. Samuel's Own Vindication (vv. 16-19).

This was such a critical hour in the history of the nation that Samuel sought to indelibly impress its meaning on their hearts. This he did by means of the thunder and rain out of season. Harvest time was not the season for thunder and rain, so when it came at the call of Samuel the people were affrighted. They saw it as an example of God's mighty power which, if directed against them, would destroy them in an instant.

IV. Samuel's Gracious Response (vv. 20-25).

1. "Fear not—serve the Lord with all your heart" (vv. 20-22).

Samuel did not minimize their sin, but assured them that if they would serve the Lord wholeheartedly He would not forsake them. The ground of their hope was in the faithfulness of God in keeping His covenant. "For His name's sake" shows that God's honor is at stake.

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you" (v. 23). Though the people had rejected Samuel, yet he had such magnanimity of soul that he has not allowed their ingratitude to stop his intercession for them. Such failure he regarded as sin for himself. He assured them that in spite of their sin their one concern should be to fear the Lord and serve Him wholeheartedly.

Be Ready to Act

Doors are opening or closing all the time in life, and what they will do for you depends on the way you grasp or fail to grasp the opportunities that come to you. Be watchful; be ready to act.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

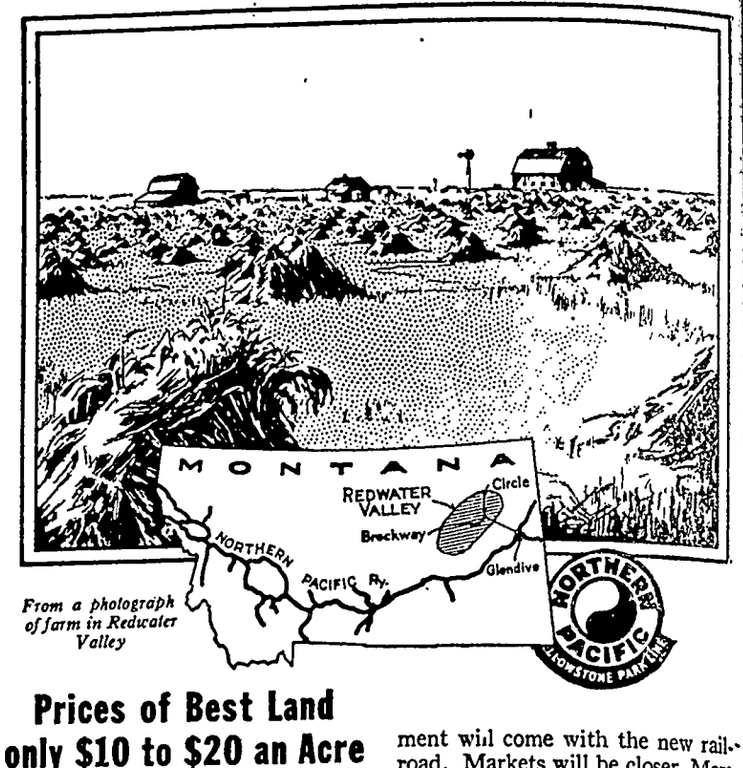
Influence depends less on our activities than on the qualities that lie behind our activities, as the planet attracts, not by its motion, but by its weight.—Thomas Starr King.

MILLION ACRES OF RICH MONTANA LAND OPENED BY NEW RAILROAD



From a photograph of farm in Redwater Valley

Prices of Best Land only $10 to $20 an Acre

ONE million acres of rich, low priced land in the great Redwater Valley country of Southeastern Montana will be opened to farmers this year by a new branch line of the Northern Pacific Railway, running 63 miles from Glendive.

Here the Northern Pacific will sell direct to farmers a half million acres at prices ranging from only $10 to $20 an acre, with 20 years to pay. Taxes are extremely low. Special advantages are available to neighbors and colonies desiring to settle together.

Mixed farming is successful throughout this area. Corn has increased by hundreds of thousands of acres in the last few years in Southeastern Montana. Hog production has grown rapidly. All classes of livestock are raised. The dairy industry is getting a good start.

Communities already are established. Churches have been built. Schools are open. Rapid development will come with the new railroad. Markets will be closer. More farmers will come in. Land values will increase.

The Northern Pacific Railway will help farmers in getting started right. Settlers are wanted who seek a real chance for themselves and their families. The Northern Pacific will send a representative to talk the matter over, if desired. Investigate this opportunity. Let us send you booklets, prices and easy payment plan. All sent free.

was quite prepared for ridicule, instead his whole expression grad-ly changed and saddened, and I de no doubt that torturing memo-s of his past came back to him. So t when he spoke his voice was gen-r than I had ever heard it. "Yes," answered. "I'm sure she is. And we must consider."

There was a long silence. And once re, when he did speak, I was un-pared for his words:

"Go now back to the island. To-rrow night put the girl in a skiff d row her downstream. I'll be wait-for you in the longboat, off the uth of the river. I can take you the coast to a place where she will safe, and then you can help me run old fox to earth."

I have never, I think, in my life felt ch a thrill as I did at that moment. seemed to hold the whole world in grasp. "Captain," I cried, "do this me, and I'll remember it as long I live."

He waved aside my thanks. "You'll end the night here," he said, and I alized, with pride, that we seemed be no longer on the footing of cap-and captive, but of equals. "I'll nd for Burford," he went on, "and 'll have a bite to eat, and a talk er old times."

But cheerful as this sounded, sud-nly Quashy's veiled warning came to y mind. "I was advised," I said, "by friendly negro to get back to the land tonight. Perhaps I had better sh on. What do you think?"

But the captain made light of it. Nonsense!" he declared. "There are ways mutterings of a rising of the aves. That's what he meant, of urse, but they never take place. It's thing but talk. And anyway it's far fer to travel by daylight than by

This completely satisfied my mind, and for the next two or three hours all three of us, I think, enjoyed ourselves to the utmost. So delighted, indeed, was the captain at the prospect of coming to grips with his enemy that for once he seemed to throw reserve to the winds, and I had, for the first time, a glimpse of the ambitions that lay next his heart.

"Imagine, Dick," I remember his saying, "that the fight is over and the island is ours. Do you see the humor of it? In the eyes of the world you are McAllister's nephew, and you succeed to the estate. What a chance for you to run the plantation as it should be run."

But the prospect did not appeal to me. Things had been moving at such a pace that I had had no time to be really homesick, but I was aware that a great yearning for the Jersey shore was always in my heart. And this I told the captain.

"And the lass?" he asked.

"Will go where I go," I answered proudly.

He nodded. Then, after a time, laughed to himself. "Dick," he cried, "I tire of the sea. I tire of fighting. One more battle, and then, if you will, you may deed your fine estate to me. Jamaica is the loveliest island in the world; I'll live out my days here. I'll be a power in the land; drive in my carriage; be knighted before I die. Sir Francis Barclay—what do you say to that? Come, Dick, is it a bargain?"

I was quick to assent. In my present state of joyous excitement, I could see the rollicking humor in my signing over to the captain a huge estate to which I had not the slightest claim. There was humor, also, of a more subtle kind, in Francis Barclay becoming a pillar of society; and I could only trust that he would not employ, on land, those forthright methods which had made him so successful upon the sea. Altogether, with the future mercifully veiled from us, we were all three in the highest spirits, and it was long after midnight when at length, thoroughly wearied, I flung myself into my berth, and in an instant was sound asleep.

CHAPTER XII

The Avengers.

We paid the penalty, next morning, for our joyous bout, for we all slept late, and arose in a somewhat chastened frame of mind; but at length breakfast was over, and after a final discussion of the evening's plans, I stepped into the gig, and, brimming over with impatience, left the Black Panther behind me.

Once ashore, I was of course all eagerness to regain the island and tell Helen the splendid and unhoped-for news; but the day was too hot for any rash display of speed, and, curbing my zeal as best I could, I walked the two miles to the Port as rapidly as I dared, and, once arrived there, had my mind so centered on my own affairs that I forgot entirely Quashy's earnest insistence that I should see him before I left. Yet, as it chanced, as I was on the point of mounting my horse, I was suddenly reminded of what he had said by seeing him hurriedly entering the stables. As he caught sight of me he gave me a reproachful glance. "I tell you see me before you go," he exclaimed; and, hardly heeding my excuses, demanded impatiently, "What time now?"

I looked at my watch and told him it was half past eleven, at which his face grew grave. "Wait minute," he said abruptly, and soon a mighty tumult and confusion led me to infer that the diabolical Satan was being saddled and bridled. Presently, indeed, the black cyclone appeared, erect on two legs as usual, and Quashy, motioning me to follow him, dashed out of the stable into the highroad. There, as soon as he was able to get his mount under temporary control, he called to me, "You got d—n good horse. I got d—n good horse. You want ride like h—l?"

"I'm ready," I called back, wholly mystified, but willing and eager for any plan that would bring me the sooner to Helen's side. And forthwith I had little time to think of anything else, as we made off at a terrific clip, in the direction of home; for though, after the first wild burst, necessary to keep Satan from bolting or performing some similar escapade, we settled down to a more reasonable pace, still we were traveling at a rate of speed which quite justified the picturesque language which Quashy had employed.

There was an earnestness in his manner that made it clear to me that something was in the wind. I thought of the rumors of an uprising among the slaves and of Shively's contemptuous rejection of the idea. He ought to know, I reflected, and yet Quashy's manner made me feel that a revolt might actually be near. His first words confirmed my worst fears.

"Slaves make rising," he said.

At the words a great fear darted through my mind. "Then I must get to the island at once," I cried.

Quashy laid a restraining hand on my arm. "You try to go island now," he said, "you killed quick." That why I hurry. Make rising at twelve o'clock. White folks tired, hot, eating, resting—black folks s'prise 'em."

I glanced at my watch; the slender minute hand and the hour hand made but a single line. And at the instant the boom of a gong rang out, sounding the hour of noon, and filling my mind with premonitions of tragedy.

Even had I wished it, I was powerless to act; but as a matter of fact I had no desire to interfere. What I had seen of the cruelty of Shively and his associates had filled me with wrath; anything they were now to receive as punishment I felt they richly deserved. And so, like a spectator at a drama, I seated myself and waited for the curtain to rise.

There was no delay. Perhaps five minutes intervened, the absolute hush of drowsy noon brooding over the fields. Then from the barracks of the slaves I saw a swarm of black figures stealthily emerge and quickly cross the space between their abode and the little cluster of buildings where dwelt the overseer and his assistants. Evidently everything had been carefully planned and rehearsed, for they divided quickly and methodically into smaller groups, which entered the various houses at almost the same moment of time There was no tumult or outcry. In almost every instance the slaves emerged a few minutes later, with one or more bound captives in their midst; from one cottage a figure, which I was sure was the young bookkeeper with whom I had talked on the previous morning, leaped from a window and dashed straight for the boat landing, but the next second his dusky pursuers were after him like a pack of hounds in full cry, and he was soon sent sprawling to the ground and bound like the rest. It was only, indeed, as might have been expected, in Shively's quarters that anything occurred which could be dignified by the name of a struggle. Here there came to my ears, faint and distant, the "crack! crack! crack" of pistols; then all was silent; and when the blacks again emerged from the big house it was with Shively's tall figure in their midst, still striving desperately to burst the bonds which held him, while behind him followed a group of rebels bearing two or three motionless bodies, mute witnesses to the fact that the overseer had fought to the last.

That such care was taken to bind the prisoners made me hope that they were merely to be held as hostages, and were not to be tortured and put to death. And indeed for a time I believed myself correct in this supposition, for the little knot of whites were led to the shelter of the wood, guarded by a ring of blacks armed with weapons which only a few moments before had belonged to their masters. The rest of the negroes dispersed, apparently to search systematically through the different dwellings, and when they emerged it was easy to see for what they had been hunting—liquor. And the moment I saw this I realized what would inevitably happen. Yet it did not take place at once. For perhaps an hour the blacks caroused, the fiery liquor continually rousing their passions to a higher and higher pitch; while on their native drums they beat melodies, if such they may be termed, which doubtless woke in their hearts memories of the land from which they had been torn, and of all the long chain of ensuing cruelty and abuse.

All this time, however, my thoughts had been but partly on the scene before me, for I was thinking of the island and of the fate of those who dwelt there. I had no doubt that after the blacks had tortured and slain their victims they would turn their attention to McAllister, who was, in reality, the chief object of their revenge. If Cudjo and Caesar had still been among his garrison, the outcome would have been at least hard to predict; and indeed, even as it was, the protection of the house and the good aim of its defenders might prevail against overwhelming numbers, and the possible danger and terror of a night attack. Surely I felt that I was needed there as never before; some way of reaching Helen I must devise. It might be possible, while the rebels were enjoying the barbaric delights of the torture, for me to slip down the hill to the river, strap my rifle on my back, and float down with the current, unobserved. Yet I had to confess that this, at best, could only be regarded in the light of a desperate and well-nigh foolhardy undertaking; for if they once caught a glimpse of me, they would launch a boat from the shore and overtake me in no time. No, galling as it was, there seemed nothing for me to do but to lie quiet and watch events below.

Nor had I long to wait, for the passions of the blacks, long pent up, now burst their barriers as a river in flood time surges beyond its banks. And I could not but reflect, as I sat there on the brow of that wooded hill on this November day, that there is nothing in the world more terrible than a just revenge. Surely these men, lying bound and helpless, were only encountering their just reward.

Yet, just though it might be, it was not less horrible to witness, for these blacks, following their native custom, did not kill at once, but first subjected their victims to every refinement of torture. The laying on of the whip was but the beginning, and indeed I cannot set down here the details of the butcher work that followed. Shively and Evans, as the ringleaders, were reserved until the last, and their passing furnished a frightful climax to this ghastly scene. And then, as I had feared, with these subordinate persecutors out of the way, the thoughts of the vengeful blacks turned toward the man who stood at the head of the hateful system which oppressed them—the man to whom they had appealed in vain against the despotic cruelties of the overseer. I saw them gather in groups, saw them point to the island with much talking and gesticulating, and then go to the landing where the boats were kept, evidently carefully investigating their means of transportation. After which they returned to their search of the houses and shops, and I saw them bring out a number of ladders, and, evidently dissatisfied with the supply, start at once, with axes and with the tools of the carpenter, to cut down saplings and manufacture more.

This was enough. Whether they meant to make an immediate attack, or intended to wait for darkness, I could not guess; in fact, any attempt to foretell the actions of these rebels, newly liberated from the oppressor's yoke, half-crazed with liquor, and with their fiercest passions roused by their revenge upon their persecutors, would have been a hopeless task. And though it was a greater risk than I cared to take, I felt that the only course open to me was to try to gain the island at once. Accordingly I explained, in as few words as possible, that I should make the attempt, and although Quashy's expression showed grave fears for my safety, he saw, I think, that it would be useless to try to dissuade me, and therefore announced that he would come with me as far as the bank of the stream; whereupon, without further loss of time, we hastened down the steep and wooded hillside toward the river.

Classified Under the Head of "Information"

Last summer Miss Moody, an artist in search of perfect quiet and rest as well as beautiful scenery, pitched her tent in one of the remotest and wildest corners of the great Northwest, where she rejoiced in the absence of all modern conveniences.

One day, as she rode her horse over a corduroy road in a swampy forest, she was amazed to hear the sound of a motor-car horn. Suddenly a bend in the road brought her face to face with a small motor car.

Her bronco fiercely resented this sight, and absolutely refused to pass the car, which, owing to the great roughness of the road, was traveling at a very low speed.

Seeing with what difficulty the rider was retaining her seat as the horse reared, plunged and backed, and realizing that he could not get by the frightened animal on so extremely narrow a highway, the motorist stopped his car, jumped out, caught the bridle and led the horse past it with soothing words.

After expressing her thanks, Miss Moody wishing to show an appreciative interest, inquired what machine it was.

"It's an automobile, lady," was the indulgent reply.—Kansas City Star.

Significant Pause

The native genius of a Lancashire man had carried him to big success in business without much aid of education.

He was asked to distribute the prizes at a school, and made the usual speech of good counsel.

"Now, boys," he said, "always remember that education is a great thing. There's nothing like education. Take arithmetic. Through education we learn that twice two make four, that twice six make twelve, that seven sevens make . . . and then there's 'geography."—London Tit-Bits.

Elusive as Soap

Owing to its coloring, a new fish at the zoo can, even under the closest scrutiny, appear and disappear in the water. It must be about the same shade as a tablet of bath soap.—Humorist.

Master of Music Had Novel Piano in Mind

Berlioz, the illustrious master whose name dominates French music of the last century, ordered from a piano manufacturer a specially constructed instrument, so fashioned that the strings could be used as a harp.

Berlioz loved to play stringed instruments and in his early days gave lessons on the guitar. In spite of the poverty which he mentions in his memoirs, he had succeeded in buying a piano, but it was not the sort of instrument that he wanted.

"If I were rich," he wrote, "I would have continually about me a big grand piano, two or three Erard harps, some Saxe trumpets and a collection of basses and Stradivarius violins."

The piano which he later invented was in part an answer to this dream. It is at present in the possession of a widely known collector who loaned it to the organizers of the Berlioz exposition of the great musician's centenary.—From L'Ere Nouvelle, Paris, (Translated for the Kansas City Star).

Voice Distinction

The distinction between a soprano and mezzo-soprano is range. In the case of lyric and dramatic voices the difference is in timbre. Grove's dictionary calls attention to the fact that many mezzo-soprani can sing higher notes than many soprani; but there is a middle to every voice, which, as a rule, it is not difficult to find, and about this the tessitura of the music (literally, the texture) and the practice should be woven.

IS A HEALTHIER STRONGER GIRL

Because She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The fertile valleys of Oregon help to supply the tables of America. This is possible through the magic of the humble tin can.

In one of the canning establishments, Julia Schmidt was employed. It was complicated work because she did sealing and other parts of the work. It was strenuous work and she was not a strong girl. Often she forced herself to work when she was hardly able to sit at her machine. At times she would have to stay at home for she was so weak she could hardly walk. For five years she was in this weakened condition.

She tried various medicines. At last, a friend of hers spoke of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she gave it a trial.

"Everyone says I am a healthier and stronger girl," she writes. "I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to all my friends who tell me how they suffer and I am willing to answer letters from women asking about it." Julia Schmidt's address is 113 Willow St., Silverton, Oregon.

Girls who work in factories know just how Miss Schmidt felt. Perhaps they, too, will find better health by taking the Vegetable Compound.

JOSTEN'S NEW BARN NOW FINISHED

EDWIN JOSTEN HAS FINE, NEW AND MODERN BARN

Carpenters Completed Work And Barn Soon To Be Used

Carpenters and painters last week put the finishing touches to the new barn on the Edwin Josten farm suoth of Klemme.

The new barn is built on modern ideas of barn construction and has many conveniinces not found in all barns, and the arrangement will add to the ease of doing up the chores and caring for the farm stock.

As some of our readers may not be acquainted with the general construction of the new building it might be of interest to them to have at least a description, although a trip to the Josten farm would be of greate- interest.

The barn is 42 feet wide by 56 feet long, 14 foot posts and 36 feet high to the peak The construction is of building block and lumber. A good heavy cement foundation and numerous piers support the building. The building blocks are rough faced and laid up for the first story, about ten feet and the balance of the walls and ends are car-siding lumber which makes a good appearance. Ventilating type steel frame windows are installed thruough in thea building so that it can be well ventilated.

The ground floor of the barn is divided into two large divisions. On the extreme west end of the barn are planked stalls to accomodate ten horses In the east part of this section are the stanchions for the milk cattle, there being a feeding alley between the cows and horses. This entire section of the barn has a good cement floor The stalls for the horses have planks laid on the cement and the partitions, mangers and feed boxes are made of planks. The milk cows have cement feed boxes at the front of each stanchion and cement gutters behind for easy cleaning

At the east side of the barn near the cattle is a room partitioned off for separating the cream. This room is cool and well ventilated and has running water installed. On the west and also on the east side of the separator room are large oats and feed bins The east section of the barn will be used for housing the feeding steers

The barn roof is of the hip type and is roomy and will hold a large amount of hay The roof is heavily braced, as well as other sections of the barn, with large timbers, many of which are both spiked and bolted together

Convenient doors are located on the north, west and south sides of the barn

Mr Josten tore down his old wood stave silo and much of the lumber from that and also the old barn was used to good advantage in the construction of the new barn. He is planning to build a new silo on the south side of the barn later.

Mr Josten will also improve other parts of the farm by removing a hog shed from the south of his new barn to another location, and will tear down another building. This is one of the nice farms of the community, has a nice large house with modern conveniences, a well arranged farm yard, electric lights and a fine water supply.

Mr and Mrs. Josten have a place they can well feel proud of.

Our Own

A man was stranded on a desert island. He was afraid of cannibals, so he moved very cautiously. As he was climbing up a small hill he heard voices.

"Who in hell trumped my ace?

The man lifted his eyes to the sky above and said. "Thank Heaven, there are Christians on this island."

Declined

"McDanall, will ye not have a cigerette?"

"Thank ye, no. I never smoke wi' gloves on. I canna stand the smell of burning leather."

A DOLLAR BILL

Start a dollar bill out early in the morning on its million of service and if kept going it will pay ten, a hundred or more dollars worth of obligations, and nine times out of ten it will find its way back into your own business The same is true of bills of larger denominations Put them to work in community service. But what about the dollar spent out of town? Once it is started on its journey it never sees the old town again So far as local community is concerned, the dollar sent away is out of circulation

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

We regret to note that some that we fully expected to see there, were absent from our services last Sunday. We shall look for them on the coming Sabbath day. On the other hand we were glad to have visitors and strangers present at both of the churches to worship with us. They are always welcome.

Our services on the coming Sunday morning will be held at the regular hour. The service at Liberty church will be a Children's service. The sermon will be especially adapted as will the singing

The Epworth League meets at 7:15 Sunday evening. The evening preaching service will be omitted.

KLEMME WINS GAME SUNDAY FROM RENWICK 4-5

Fans Say It Was One Of Best Games Played This Season

Klemme won the ball game from Renwick here Sunday by the score of 4 to 5. Baseball fans say it was one of the best games of the season and both teams displayed good and clean sprtsmanship.

Next Sunday, July 17 the Klemme Tigers will play a Clear Lake Independent team called "Mason Whippets" The boys would like to have a big crowd out as this team comes on a paid guarantee.

AMES TOURS ATTRACT MANY THIS YEAR

People From 37 Counties Have Attended Ames Tours

Iowa farm people are interested in seeing their state agricultural college and experiment station judging from the numbers this year who have visited or expect to visit the Iowa State College at Ames. A recent check showed that so far delegations from 37 counties have toured to Ames, while two more are sceduled for trips this month, two for August and two for September, with others considering dates fore these months.

While it is impossible to get an accurate count of the numbers visiting, it is estmated that nearly 7,000 farm folk have visited Iowa State this summer Delegations from 34 counties were at the college in June, which is as many as came during the whole of last summer.

The largest delegation, 400, was from Marshall County. Guthrie County had around 350, the second largest group. Of the people coming this year, about 95 percent have never been on previous tours, it has been found.

Some of the counties farthest away have stayed over night at the college in order to prolong the time available for seeing the institution Those who did this have been housed at one of the college dormitories.

The Northwestern railway granted a special rate of $4.75 for a round trip from Clinton for farm people and it is expected that many will take advantage of this. The regular fare for one way is $6.50 Negotiations are under way to secure special rates for other sections too ar removed to make an auto tour practical.

RELATIVES HAVE ANNIVERSARY SURPRISE PARTY SUNDAY

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Keraus Given Surprise on 14th Anniversary

Sunday the relatives of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Keraus had planned to have a big picnic in honor of their fourteenth wedding anniversary, and the affair was kept a secret that would blossom out into a grand surprise at the proper moment.

The scene of activities were laid at the tourist park near Garner and a pretty place was selected under three large trees for the long picnic table Decorations of red and white crepe paper strung up between the trees and streamers coming to a point on the table where a large wedding cake was placed, added to the attractiveness of the occasion.

At the proper time, when all had gathered Mr. and Mrs. Keraus and sons had previously been invited to Garner to have dinner at the Joe Horecka home They arrived in due time and finding only Mr. Horecka at home, he explained that because of the hot weather Mrs. Horecka had planned to have a picnic dinner at the park and directed them to go there.

Upon their arrival at the park they heard a group singing, "Here Comes The Bride," and it was not until then that they grasped the whole meaning and that they were the victims of a happy surprise.

Those present were Mrs. G. W. Kluckohn, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus, Frank Kluckhohn and family, Mrs. Sadie Turgeson and sons Vernon and Donald, Clarence Kluckhohn and family, Fred Kluckholn and family, C. G. Waterman and family, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Mitchell and Mr. Joe Horecka.

All enjoyed a good time and report that there was more than plenty to eat.

ONE SCHOLARSHIP GIVEN FOR EACH COUNTY

Will Aid Farm Boys Who Have't Money To Get Education

Desirous of helping the younger Iowa farm boys whose education had to be interrupted on account of the lack of financial resources, 104 scholarships of $100 each were awarded by commercial organizations and individuals for a three-months term at Iowa State College during the college year of 1925-26. One scholarship was allotted to each county, and the five largest counties received an additional one.

With this aid 104 Iowa farm boys were enabled to get three months of special training in agriculture After a year's observation the results have proven so successful that this scholarship plan will be repeated this year.

It is planned to provide one scholarship for each county. These scholarships are being secured by donations from companies and organizations, and at the present time 83 counties have been provided for. The state is lending its support by supplementing each $100 cash scholarship with $60 in the form of exemption from fees.

In addition, the winners of last year's scholarships, appreciating the benefits derived from this short training, and desirous of helping other farm boys in like circumstances, have started a revolving fund. This fund will be made up of contributions received entirely from them and will be used as a loan fund for students.

The conditions governing the award of these scholarships will be very similar to those of last year. While the financial circumstances of the boys are taken into consideration, it is desired that these scholarships will be awarded to most deserving applicants in their communities and who will strive for the betterment of agriculture.

AUXILIARY WILL SERVE LUNCH SATURDAY NIGHT

The Klemme Auxiliary will have a social Saturday night, July 16th and will serve hamburger sandwiches, coffee, pop, ice cream and cake and home made ice cream cones. The social will be held on Wellemeyer's vacant lot on Main Street and serving begins at 6:00 o'clock.

BIG USERS OF SPACE

More than $3,300,000.00 was spent for national advertising in newspapers by radio interests in 1926, it is stated. Indications are that in 1927 this infant industry will forge still farther ahead in newspaper space used.

Automobile manufacturers are the largest users of space in news papers in 1926, a total of over 19 million dollars being their expenditure. Radio advertising exceeded that of tire manufacturers by half a million dollars and that of soap concerns by even more.

Remedy advertising once the support of smaller papers totaled over two million dollars.

Advertising pays both the buyer and seller—the buyer in smaller costs, the seller in increased production.

This is the day of advertising

LEAGUERS TO HAVE MOONLIGHT PARTY TONIGHT

Something New In The Way Of A Party Will Be Staged

Tonight is the night for the July frolic of the M. E. Epworth League. The affair takes the form of a Moon Light Mystery Party, and the Leaguers meet at the church at eight o'clock to depart for regions mysterious and awe-inspiring. After an evening of tricks, stunts, and games original refreshments will be served the merrymakers. Florence Gates, elected fourth vice-president of the League, is in general charge of the party.

Instead of attending the Okoboji Institute, the League decided recently to join the Garner delegation and go to the Clear Lake Institute instead, which takes place the last wek of July. Some who cannot be there for the entire week will attend for a few days Even a day of Institute is well worth a Leaguer's while, acording to those who have attended in the past.

"The Eternal Goodness" will be discussed Sunday night at 7:15, led by Donald Gibbs aud Wayne Pavey Asa Arnold led last Sunday's meeting very capably.

HUNT IOWA'S BEST NUT TREE

Contest Open to Any Boy or Girl, Says Extension Forester

Iowa boys and girls this year are asked to help ind the best nut tree in the state. This all there will be a nut gathering contest in October and November and later county contests to find the best nuts in each county. The state wide contest will be held next winter at Iowa State College during the boys' Junior Short Course.

Announcement of this contest was recently made by I. T. Bode, extension forester at Iowa State College, Ames. Complete information regarding the contest may be obtained by writing him.

Many good native nut trees have been found in Iowa, but the best are probably still unknown, Mr. Bode says. He urges any boy or girl who knows of a tree which yields large, thin-shelled nuts that crack easily to enter some of the product of that tree, for it may be a prize winner. Any kind of nuts may be entered in the contest.

REFORMED CHURCH NOTES

Services for Sunday, July 17th are as follows:

10:00 A M. Rev. Grosshuesch will preach in English.

11:00 A M Sunday School.

Evening Service Rev. J. W. Grosshuesch, father of the pastor, will preach in German.

The balance of the week's services will be as heretofore.

Deep Drama

"She laid the still white form beside those which had gone before. No sob, no sigh forced its way from her heart, throbbing as though it would break. Suddenly a shriek rent the stillness of the night. One single, heartrending shriek. Then with a scream more piercing than the rest she rushed from the awful place —tomorrow she would lay another egg."

FEDERAL MEN RAID KLEMME HOME

FRED RIDDER AND SON, LEVI, CAUGHT WITH TWO STILLS

Federal Men Gather In Big Boozo Haul Tuesday Night

Federal prohibition agents working in Klemme Tuesday night made a raid on the Fred Ridder home and Levi Ridder's garage Tuesday night at about eleven o'clock which netted them one of the biggest hauls of the season.

At the Fred Ridder residence the federal men found a complete copper still, of about 10 to 15 gallons capacity, well made and complete A gallon and a half of peach brandy was also found here. At the garage to the rear of the house they found fifteen pints of brandy.

They got their biggest haul at Levi Ridder's private garage on the block north of Fred's home. Here they found a larger still, of the wash boiler type, copper coils in a cream tank, a cabinet containing two mash barrels the top of which was connected to a chimney, and a large quanity of good booze was found, consisting of 2 5-gal. bottles, 1 2-gal. jug, 6 1-gal jugs, 108 pints of bottled goods, all declared to be of fine quality.

Besides the stills and the liquor the agents found a quanity of sugar and dried peaches, numerous bottles, jugs and kegs.

There were three or perhaps more men in the raiding party and they took possession of Mr. Wellemeyer's truck and had him haul the captured stuff to Mason City in company with a guard. The other men took Fred Ridder and Levi Ridder with them to Mason City to appear before the federal authorities there.

We understand the men waived preliminary hearing and were released on bonds to appear later for trial. They returned to Klemme Wednesday afternoon

KLEMME PEOPLE LEAVE FOR VISIT IN THE EAST

Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Harvey and six year old daughter, Enid, left early Sunday morning in their car for Bloomfield, New Jersey, a suburb of Newark, N. J, to spend at least a month visiting with Mr. Harvey's parents who reside in the city of Bloomfield and with other relatives and friends near there.

Mr. Harvey and family have camping equipment with them and will take plenty of time on the way to stop and visit places of interest.

Puts Up New Silo On Farm

Fred Haupt has just had completed a new brick silo on his farm near Klemme and which is occupied by Owen Neuhring and family. Mr. Nels Neilsen, of Rutland, a silo building expert, did the work for Mr Haupt. Fred has one of the well improved farms in this community, and although he is retired and lives in Klemme, he likes to spend a part of his time in the country working around his farm and on his children's farms.

WEEKLY IS ENDORSED

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of the General Motors Corporation, recently gave a strong indorsement of the value of the country weekly newspaper.

In discussing this year's advertising campaign for General Motors Corporation, Mr. Sloan, among other things, said:

"I believe in the country weekly newspaper. I believe that no printed matter in the United States is more thoroughly read, or has more influence than the pages of these home town newspapers."

Really Mace Should Produce an Affidavit

Mace Liverwurst was telling a crowd in front of the blacksmith shop about a cyclone he was in one time at the close of the Civil war. He said it was the worst wind and electrical storm he ever saw, and that a bolt of lightning killed a big fat hog for him, and the wind twisted it in such a manner that the fat was rendered into lard, a frying pan came bouncing through the air and fell right side up beside the hog so that the rendered lard ran into it.

Mace said about that time the wind blew the feathers off a big spring chicken and tore the chicken into pieces, which fell into the pan of grease, the lightning set the grass afire and the grease got hot and the pieces of chicken in the skillet fried nice and brown. When Mace hesitated, to take a chew of tobacco, all his listeners left in disgust, and as we sauntered off we heard him say he could prove it by a dozen persons. Mace can prove anything by his cronies.—Altoona (Kan.) Tribune.

No Uniform Length

The length of a league varies in different countries. The Roman league was 1.370 modern English miles, while the league brought to England by the Normans was equal to 2.9 modern English miles. The metric league is four kilometers. At present the league is a nautical measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree—that is, three geographical miles, or 3.457 statute miles.

Is Handshake Unhygienic?

In the storehouse of a coal mine near Dortmund there is a curious placard on the wall. It reads as follows:

"Gentlemen, commercial travelers and others coming here for business are requested to omit handshaking from their visits.

"Shaking hands is a waste of time, is unhygienic, is often badly received, and will not have the slightest influence on the placing of orders from our firm."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

United States and Japan Oppose British Cruiser Demands.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BRITTANIA rules the waves, and she intends to go on ruling them, if the efforts and arguments of her representatives at the Geneva naval limitation conference are a true indication of the national spirit. Last week the conferees devoted themselves to the subject of cruisers, earnestly discussing the conclusions reached by the naval experts and, at this writing, having reached nothing like an agreement. As was explained a week ago, the British demanded a minimum of 600,000 tons of cruisers, most of them preferably below 7,500 tons each, on the ground that their world-wide commerce lanes and their need of protecting the home food supply required this, and evidently because their innumerable naval bases would enable the vessels of restricted cruising radius to operate anywhere. America wanted the limit put at 250,000 tons and said the United States needed vessels of 10,000 tonnage, not having adequate naval bases abroad. Her delegates, however, in the effort to make the conference a success, offered tentatively to make the maximum limit 400,000 tons.

Then the Japanese, who previously had supported the British desire to have the battleship program revised, surprised every one by coming out strongly against the British cruiser demands. Having received cabled instructions from Tokyo, Admiral Saito announced that the original minimum American figures of 250,000 tons as the maximum cruiser tonnage for America and Britain were quite acceptable to Japan. At the same time he declared the British figures, totaling approximately 600,000 tons, are out of the question so far as the Tokyo government is concerned.

"Japan is anxious to achieve a real reduction and limitation of armaments," Admiral Saito said. "We find the figures in the American plan most reasonable. Japan believes the minimum American figures should be adopted rather than the higher tonnage, which, by promoting construction, would increase armaments. The other suggestions of vastly larger tonnage, which would require the other interested powers to build up to these high levels, would defeat the purpose of the conference."

"We would never dare get off the boat in Japan if we accepted the British scheme," one Japanese delegate said.

Much taken aback, the British delegates said they would look over their figures again to see what possible alterations could be made with a view to further discussions.

Observers in Geneva and official Washington see in the British demand for at least 550,000 tons of cruisers a manifestation of the British insistence on preserving the mastery of the seas. Lord Robert Cecil and his colleagues, they say, are convinced that, though America would be granted parity with England, our congress would not permit the building of so large an American navy for reasons of economy and because the United States has no fear of war with Great Britain. Indeed, Viscount Cecil said as much last week.

"America does not fear us; America knows there is no possibility of war with Great Britain—then why does Washington insist on limiting our navy below the strength the admiralty states we require?" he said. "We must have the cruisers we demand. The admiralty insists they are essential to our defense." Concerning the United States' demand for 10,000-ton cruisers he asked: "But why does America need these boats? What possible potential enemy can she have in mind for such weapons?"

In the experts' sessions concerning submarines the United States won when Great Britain's efforts to have 21-inch caliber torpedoes reduced were rejected and the Anglo-Japanese proposals to divide submarines into two classes—coast defense craft of about 600 tons and fleet submersibles capable of going to sea with a combat squadron approximating 1,600 tons, were abandoned. The experts decided merely to limit the size of the largest submarines and set 1,800 tons as the tentative maximum.

China's voice was heard in the conference for the first time when Chao Hsin-chu, representative in the council of the League of Nations, made this announcement:

"It is repeatedly reported in the press of the Far East that the naval conference may also consider questions relating to China. I therefore have been requested by the Chinese national government and the people to state that the republic will refuse to recognize any decision affecting China which may be arrived at by the present, or any other conference in which China is not represented, participating equally in the deliberations."

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE had a lot of fun last week, mixed up with business. In the first place he celebrated his fifty-fifth birthday on the birthday of the nation, receiving innumerable messages of congratulation, eating a wonderful cake and receiving the mounted boy scout troop from Custer. The lads presented to the President a beautiful bay mare and a complete cowboy outfit of clothing, and he promptly donned the elaborate regalia. Next day, still wearing his cowboy hat, he attended the Tri-State Roundup at Bellefourche. Mrs. Coolidge acompanied him, and they enjoyed hugely the doings of the wild riders, Indians in war dress, cowboys and trick riders gathered from all parts of the West. The Chief Executive had ignored protests from organized sentimentalists against what they called the "commercialized cruelty" of the rodeo. Wednesday Mr. Coolidge put on his chaps and took a long ride on his new mare.

Most important of the week's visitors at the summer White House was Ambassador Sheffield, who conferred with the President on the Mexican situation, reporting fully on conditions in the neighboring republic, and presumably also discussing the question of his resignation. He has been wanting for a year to give up his post and the time may be considered opportune. John J. Garrett of Maryland and Silas Strawn have been mentioned as successor to Mr. Sheffield.

COMMANDER BYRD and the other members of the crew of the transatlantic plane America were the recipients of many honors in Paris, and the commander was awarded the cross of the Legion of Honor. The aviators booked passage for return to the United States starting July 12. Byrd says he plans to lead a two-plane expedition to the Antarctic in the fall which will spend perhaps a year and a half in procuring information about the continent at the South pole. Clarence Chamberlin also planned immediate return to the United States by steamer, having declined to pilot the Columbia back, but Charles A. Levine said he was hunting for a French pilot who would bring him home on the big plane.

GENERAL CHEN and a large part of his Chinese army went over to the Nationalists and as a result the southerners gained possession of most of Shantung province and at last reports were but a few miles from Tsingtao. The northern forces were still holding Tsinanfu, the capital, and a narrow strip north of the Yellow river. Conditions in Shantung were such that Japan decided to send two thousand more Japanese troops from Dairen to Tsingtao, and a hundred military railway men and telegraphers also were hurried into that region. This movement further enraged the Chinese against the Japanese and caused them to forget their animosity against the British.

KING FUAD of Egypt, whose sovereignty was threatened recently by Great Britain, went to London on a state visit and was received with great pomp by King George, the royal family and the government. He was accompanied by Premier Sarwat Pasha, and the British foreign office undertook to work out with him a treaty which should settle the relations between Egypt and Great Britain for years to come. This plan, however, was opposed by Lord Lloyd, British commissioner in Egypt, who believes the parliamentary regime there will collapse before long and that the British will then have to revive the protectorate. King Fuad is entirely subservient to the British, but Sarwat Pasha is said to be under the influence of Zaghloul Pasha, the Nationalist leader, who opposes the surrender of Egyptian claims to independence.

THOUGH stories of counter-revolutionary movements in Russia are often not trustworthy, those coming now are too numerous and too detailed to be ignored. The revival of the Red terror by the Soviet rulers has failed to terrify their opponents and the anti-British campaign conducted by the government does not distract the attention of the population from domestic to foreign questions. In secret meetings held in central Europe the couriers of the counter-revolution reported a tremendous increase in the dissensions among the Bolshevik leaders, with a new man rising in the background as a lieutenant of M. Stalin, present dictator of Moscow policies. He is M. Eliawa, formerly a quiet member of the party but steadily gaining influence over M. Stalin, since he, too, is a former south Russian peasant. Meanwhile 50,000 counter-revolutionists have succeeded in smuggling themselves into Russian factories.

AT LAST D. C. Stephenson, former ruler of the Indiana Ku Klux klan and now a life convict, has told to the authorities his story of alleged corruption in Hoosier politics, and the people of the state are awaiting a grand explosion. Stephenson made his revelations to Prosecuting Attorney W. H. Remy of Indianapolis, and that official declined to tell what he heard until he is ready for action. Indianapolis newspapers asserted that Stephenson "told all"; that he hit high and low officialdom; that he revealed how he managed and paid for the campaign of Gov. Ed Jackson; that he told of ruling the legislature, dictating which bills should pass and which should die; that he played a stellar role in the election of Mayor John L. Duvall of Indianapolis; that he dabbled in the election of a United States senator, and much more along that line.

On the other hand, Stephenson's attorney declared that his client's only charges had to do with the pending prosecution of Mayor Duvall. The ex-grand dragon himself said in part:

"There's a little seat in the chair shop next to me that is vacant, and I expect to have company before long. I have not blown the entire lid off the Indiana situation. Remy did not insist that I do so. The rest will come later, and I promise that when the entire truth is told there will be a clean-up in this state that will startle the country and will benefit the state immeasurably."

REPUBLICANS of New Jersey, in state convention, overrode the decision of their resolutions committee and the protests of the women delegates and wrote into their platform a plank calling for a Volstead law referendum similar to that passed by the voters of New York last fall. The debate was bitter, the final vote being 67 to 18. It is believed the action will have an important bearing on the gubernatorial and senatorial elections of 1928.

The New Jersey Democrats also held their convention and adopted a platform demanding the right to make and consume light wines and beer.

ATLANTIC CITY had one of its most disastrous fires in years. Nearly one block of the famous Board Walk was wiped out and eight hotels and rooming houses went up in flames. More than five hundred persons were made homeless, and many excursionists lost their belongings.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made in an article under New York American copyright that Henry Ford has ordered his publication, the Dearborn Independent, to discontinue all articles hostile to Jewish people. Ford makes a statement which is an apology to the Jews for admitted injurious attacks.

SAMUEL ANOINTS DAVID

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 16:1-13

GOLDEN TEXT—Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Shepherd Boy Chosen King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Plan for a Boy's Life.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why God Chose David.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Discovering Future Leaders.

I. Samuel Mourns for Saul (v. 1).

1. Why he mourned. The death of Saul was, no doubt, a personal loss to Samuel, for Saul was a commanding and lovable personality. Then, too, the ruin of so promising a career would deeply affect Samuel. Finally the humiliation to God and God's people grieved his heart.

2. Excessive mourning rebuked. The fact that God had rejected Saul should have lifted Samuel out of his grief. Excessive grief over that which God does is a reflection upon Him and should be rebuked. When sorrow becomes a hindrance to the discharge of duty, it merits rebuke.

II. Samuel Sent to Anoint David (vv. 1-3).

1. Samuel's fear (v. 2). Perhaps by this time Saul was becoming a desperate character. Samuel still knew that if Saul should hear that he was taking steps to anoint a successor to the throne, his own life would be in danger. Samuel was wise in submitting this hard situation to the Lord. God's servants are to be brave. However, even when going on errands for God we should not court danger.

2. The Lord's direction (vv. 2, 3).

The Lord smoothed the way for Samuel. He showed him how to perform his duty and escape the danger. Samuel was to take a heifer and announce that he was going to offer a sacrifice unto the Lord and to call Jesse to the sacrifice. The prophet was not told all that would happen. This is usually God's way with us. He gives us our work piece by piece, and guides us step by step. Samuel's purpose was known only to himself. It was to be kept a secret so that the news would not reach Saul. This was a shrewd device but entirely legitimate. We may conceal that which others have no right to know, especially when such a disclosure would be detrimental to the success of our mission. What Samuel said was true.

III. Samuel's Obedience (vv. 4-13).

1. The trembling elders of Bethlehem (vv. 4, 5).

Their unusual movement was an occasion for alarm. To the elders' alarming inquiry Samuel responded with the assurance of peace, inviting them to join him in worshiping the Lord.

2. Examination of Jesse's sons (vv. 6-12).

The Lord had revealed to Samuel that one of Jesse's sons was to be the new king, but not the particular one.

(1) Eliab rejected (vv. 6, 7).

Eliab was the eldest son and therefore he was the first presented as having first right to the place of honor. Furthermore, he was a splendid specimen of manhood, tall and majestic in appearance, so that even Samuel was captivated by him as he had been by Saul (10:24). Outward appearance is favorable, but the realities seen by God were against him. We frequently estimate men by their dress, cultural appearances, wealth and position. These are only surface manifestations and frequently lead us astray, but God looks into the heart.

(2) David chosen (vv. 8-12).

All but one of Jesse's sons had been looked upon, but still the Lord's choice had not appeared. Jesse's reply to Samuel's question as to whether all his children had appeared seems to imply that David was not of much importance. At any rate he was only a boy, while his brothers were already young men. He was considered good enough to watch the sheep, but not to be called to the feast. This is ever the way of man. He overlooks the very ones whom the Lord has chosen for places of honor and influence. Because David was faithful as a shepherd boy, he was in line for promotion when God's given time arrived.

3. David anointed (v. 13).

When the shepherd lad appeared, the Lord directed Samuel to anoint him. When the oil was applied the Spirit of the Lord came upon him. David was a gifted and attractive lad, but his gifts were of no avail without the Spirit of God. Only as we are anointed by the Holy Ghost can we truly do the Lord's will and work.

We Can Choose

More Eggs—Less Shell

"More eggs—thinner shells" is given as the cause of a steady increase in claims for breakages experienced by carriers of imported eggs, who have been authoritatively informed that it is due to the increased productivity of the foreign hen. A poultry expert says that the speeding up of production by foreign poultry keepers has resulted in loss of thickness in the shell.

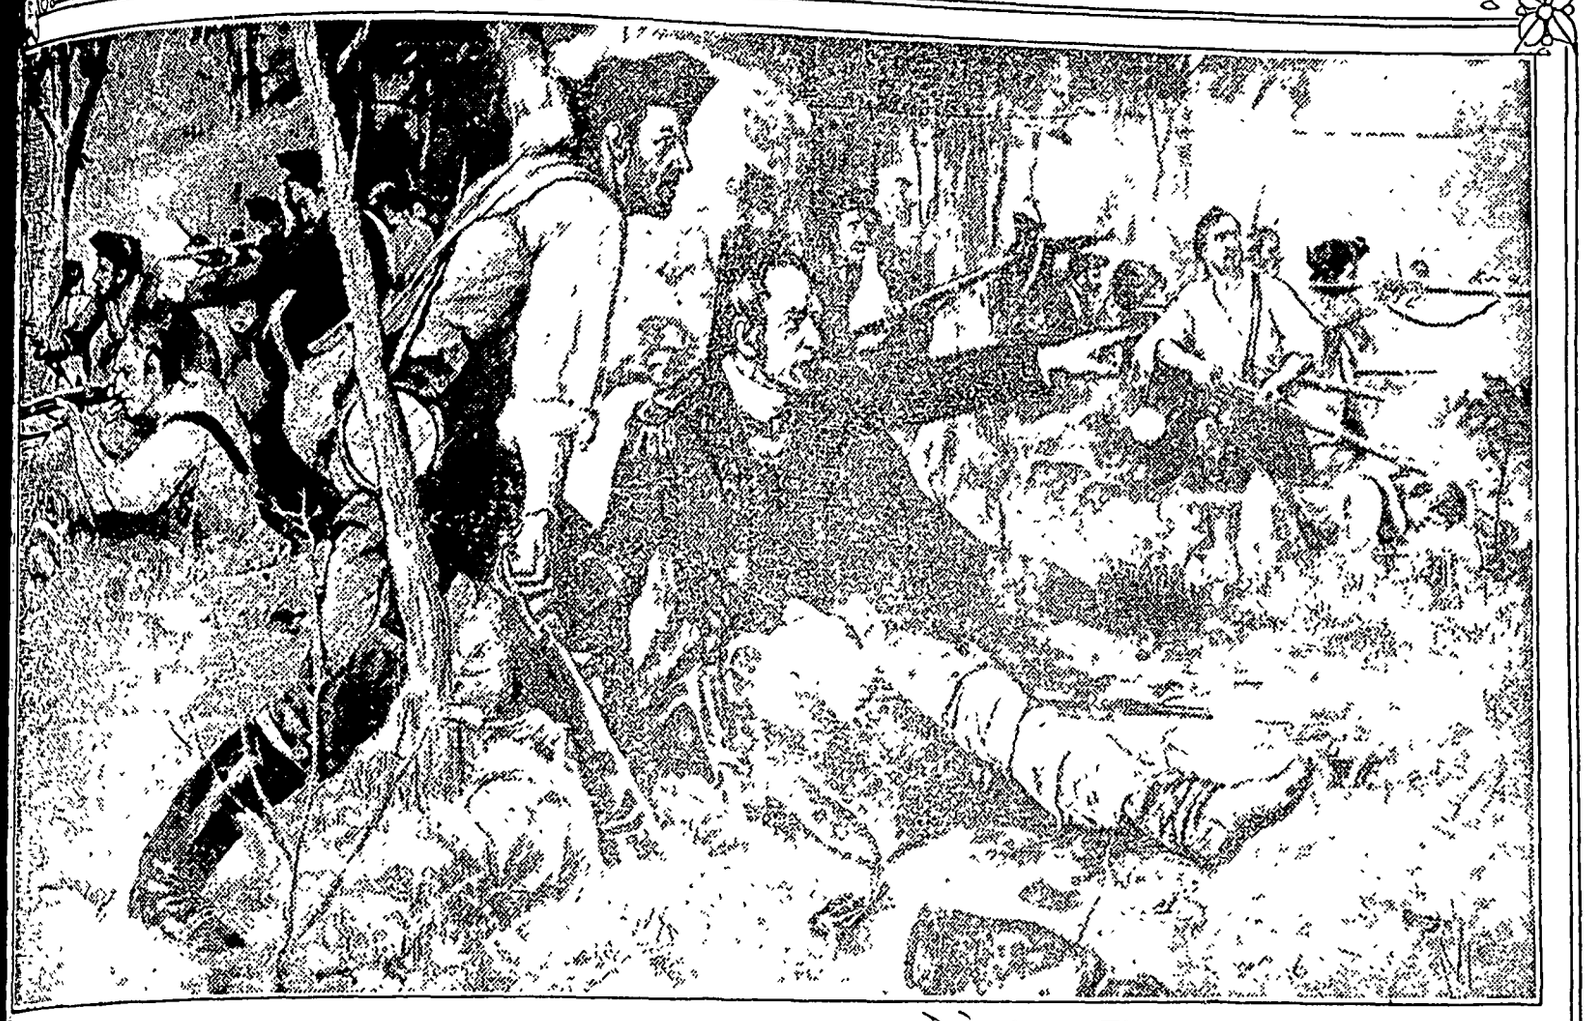
Oriskany and Blue Licks



GENERAL HERKIMER AT THE BATTLE of ORISKANY
Courtesy Utica Public Library

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE hundred and fifty years ago this summer there was fought on the frontier of New York one of the most hotly contested battles of the American Revolution. This was the battle of Oriskany on August 6, 1777, where a force of New York militia led by Gen. Nicholas Herkimer, marching to the relief of Ft. Schuyler won a victory over a force of Tories and Indians, commanded by Sir John Johnson and the half Mohawk chief, Joseph Brant. Five years later out in the wilderness of Kentucky a similar battle was fought between an army of Kentucky frontiersmen, led by Cols. John Todd, Stephen Trigg and Daniel Boone, and a force of Canadians and Indians, commanded by Maj. William Caldwell, who had with him the renegades Alexander McKee, Mathew Elliott and Simon Girty. This was the battle of Blue Licks, often referred to as "The last battle of the Revolution," fought on August 19, 1782.

Although there is no direct connection between the two engagements, they exhibit a striking parallel of the circumstances which brought them about that is worthy of more than passing notice. In both cases the headstrong folly of subordinates overruled the cooler judgment of their commanders, thereby bringing upon themselves the disaster which could have been averted.

The battle of Oriskany was a part of the campaign which centered around Ft. Schuyler on the present site of Rome, N. Y., in 1777. The stirring events of that year are to be recalled this summer in a series of sesquicentennial celebrations which will be held at various places in the Mohawk valley. Chief among these will be the Oriskany celebration where the memory of the men who fought in this dramatic and bloody engagement will be honored by their descendants and hundreds of visitors from all parts of the country. The events leading up to the battle of Oriskany were these: As a part of the British plan to score a decisive success during the summer of 1777 and to crush the Revolution, Col. Barry St. Leger had been sent to sweep through the Mohawk valley to Albany where he was to join the army of General Burgoyne who was coming down from the north. But there was one obstacle to St. Leger's success. This was Ft. Schuyler, held by a force of Continentals under the command of Col. Peter Gansevoort and Col. Marinus Willett. On August 2, St. Leger appeared before Ft. Schuyler with a force of some 1,700 British regulars, Hessians and Tories—led by Sir John Johnson, John Butler and his son, the notorious Walter Butler, and Iroquois Indians. Samuel Gansevoort had appealed to the Committee of Safety in Tryon county for help and the chairman of this committee, Nicholas Herkimer—"Old Honikol Herkimer" was the affectionate nickname for him—(who had been appointed a brigadier general the previous year) immediately raised the militia of Tryon county and set out for the relief of Ft. Schuyler. Herkimer's army, a force of about eight hundred men, was divided into four regiments. The first was led by Col. Ebenezer Cox and was from the district of Canajoharie. The second from Palatine was commanded by Col. Jacob Klock, the third from Mohawk was under Col. Frederick Visscher, and the fourth, from German Flats and Cherry Valley, was commanded by Col. Peter Bellinger. This force assembled at Ft. Dayton near the mouth of West Canada creek, and on August 4 started out, crossed the Mohawk near the present site of the city of Utica and reached Whitestown on August 5.

From this point Herkimer sent an express to Samuel Gansevoort to arrange for co-operation in attacking against the enemy. Gansevoort was to fire three cannon shots as a signal that a force from the fort was ready to make a sortie, whereupon Herkimer was to advance with his army. Herkimer was then about eight miles from Ft. Schuyler and it would be easy to hear the report of the cannons at that distance. But his messengers were delayed in getting through the enemy to the fort and Herkimer's men waited impatiently for the sound of the cannon. Finally, chafing at the delay, they demanded to be led against the enemy. Herkimer steadfastly refused. Then some of his officers, notably Colonels Cox and Paris, began to attack him and even went so far as to accuse him of being a coward and a Tory. But the wise commander resisted their urgings until they became unbearable. Finally, stung to madness by these unjust accusations, he gave the command to advance.

It was more of a disorderly mob than an army that streamed out of the encampment. At Oriskany creek the road led across a narrow causeway of logs over a marsh with thick woods on either side. St. Leger had sent a large body of Tories, many of them neighbors of Herkimer's men in Tryon county, the noted "Johnson's Greens," under Major Watts, accompanied by a body of Mohawk Indians led by the famous Joseph Brant, who prepared the ambush for Herkimer's men. Just as the head of the column marched onto the causeway the Indians impetuously opened fire. Herkimer's rear guard retreated almost immediately, but the rest stood their ground and returned the enemy's fire. They at once sought shelter behind trees and immediately there took place one of the fiercest battles in American history. For the most part it was a hand-to-hand fight. Colonels Cox and Paris, whose rashness had precipitated the fight, were among the first to be killed. Herkimer was disabled early in the fight by a bullet which shattered his knee. His officers urged him to retire to safety, but his reply has become a historic byword in the Mohawk valley—"I will face the enemy."

DANIEL BOONE From Bust by Albin Polasek.

NICHOLAS HERKIMER

During the battle, Herkimer's messengers reached Gansevoort, who had been wondering what the distant firing meant and who fired the three signal cannon. Herkimer's men heard them, but they could not advance now. They were fighting for their lives. So great was the slaughter in both armies that the Indians finally raised the cry of retreat—"Oonah, Oonah'" and left the field. The Tories, seeing this and being alarmed at the sound of the firing made during the sortie from the fort which had been led by Col. Marinus Willett, also retreated. Herkimer and his men held the field on which they had won their dearly bought victory. The losses inflicted upon the enemy and Willett's sortie which had fallen upon St. Leger's camp stampeded a portion of the British force and captured a great store of supplies, which resulted in St. Leger's giving up the siege of Ft. Schuyler. So victory came out of defeat after all, for Ft. Schuyler was saved and the threat of St. Leger's invasion of the Mohawk valley collapsed. Herkimer died a few days after the battle.

Five years later occurred the other battle in which the foolhardiness of headstrong men brought about another disaster equal to that of Oriskany. On August 16, 1782, a mounted messenger dashed up to Boone's Station, a small frontier fort which this famous pioneer had built across the Kentucky river a short distance from Boonesbourough—with the news that Bryan's Station, an important point further west, about five miles from the present city of Lexington, had been attacked by an overwhelming force of Indians and Canadians. The men of Boone's Station immediately galloped to the aid of their brethren, and the next day found Boone, who happened to be at Boonesbourough at the time, on the way to Bryan's Station, with all the men of the vicinity that he could collect. When they arrived, they found that the enemy had already retreated, but since, by the evening of August 17, the Kentucklans assembled at Bryan's Station numbered more than 180, and as many more under Col. Benjamin Logan were expected hourly, they determined to observe the principle of border warfare—that no savage foray should go unpunished. So, without waiting for Logan, they decided to pursue the enemy at once, even though they realized that the enemy, composed of fierce Wyandottes and accompanied by the renegades McKee, Elliott, and the infamous Simon Girty, greatly outnumbered them. Early the next morning the party, commanded by Cols. Todd, Trigg and Boone, set forth. They found that the enemy had left a plain trail, but heedless of this indication that the allies invited pursuit, the Kentucklans dashed on rapidly. On the morning of August 18 they came to the Licking river at a place called Blue Licks. A few Indians were seen on the ridges across the river. Boone was certain the Indians were lying in ambush and advised his men to select a strong position on their side of the river and wait there until Logan and his men arrived.

But this wise counsel was disregarded by the impatient Kentucklans who were anxious to strike a blow at the enemy who had besieged their stations. Boone then proposed that a party be detached, march up the river and fall upon the rear of the enemy at a prearranged signal, while the main attack was delivered in front. While the proposition was being discussed, a decision was forced by a Major McGary, who had supported Boone in the proposal to await the arrival of Logan and had been taunted with cowardice by some of his fellows for doing so. McGary suddenly broke up the council by spurring his horse to the ford and dashing across it, shouting "Let all who are not cowards follow me!"

It was just the sort of an appeal which would influence such rashly courageous men as most of these Kentucklans were. They streamed across the river in disorderly fashion and there was nothing for Boone, Todd and Trigg to do but to follow, and to try to restore some order in the straggling mob. They crossed the river safely and advanced up a buffalo trail to the top of the ridge beyond. By this time some semblance of order had been restored, with McGary leading an advance party of twenty-five. As they approached the top of the ridge a rifle shot rang out as a signal for the crashing volley which then followed. Twenty-three of McGary's twenty-five men went down at this first fire. The headstrong McGary who had precipitated the fight was one of the two who escaped. After this first volley, the Canadians showed themselves on the ridge and from the ravine on either flank, the Indians opened a deadly fire. The Kentuckians stood their ground and returned the fire. Instantly the Wyandottes, always noted as reckless and desperate fighters, came bursting through the smoke with poised tomahawks. There was a short hand-to-hand conflict until the Kentucklans, greatly outnumbered, almost surrounded and in imminent danger of being slaughtered where they stood, broke and fled back toward the river. Nearly every officer of rank was killed. Boone escaped across the river.

The Kentucklans, hotly pursued, streamed back across the river. There Major Netherland rallied his men and offered resistance, ending the pursuit and preventing a massacre.

Of a force of approximately one hundred eighty men, sixty-seven had been killed outright or were murdered as they lay wounded on the field of battle, and seven had been captured, four of whom died at the torture stake. Nearly every man who escaped was wounded in some way. Half-way back to Bryan's Station, the survivors met Colonel Logan with 400 men, coming to their support. How bitter must have been their regret when they realized how different the result might have been if they had heeded Boone's advice and awaited Logan's coming, and had not been swept into action by McGary's rash appeal. Blue Licks was perhaps the greatest defeat ever suffered by the pioneers of the Blue Grass state, but it was also a high-water mark in her history. For the Indians came no more to Kentucky and Blue Licks marked the end of the frontier period.

Oriskany and Blue Licks—two names which afford a striking illustration of the injury which a body of undisciplined men may do to themselves and those dependent upon them. But in the memory of the desperate valor of the men who fought these battles, History forgives them their indiscretion and in these sesquicentennial years remembers only a nation's gratitude to the men who helped in the winning of the West.

Here's Speedy Relief for Tender, Aching, Swollen Feet

Your Druggist Says Emerald Oil Must Give Complete Satisfaction or Money Cheerfully Refunded.

Your feet may be so swollen and inflamed that you think you can't go another step. Your shoes may feel as if they are cutting right into the flesh. You feel sick all over with the pain and torture and pray for quick relief. What's to be done?

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the swelling reduces.

And as for Soft Corns and Callouses a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with powders, footbaths or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

Every good druggist guarantees the first bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil. It must end your foot troubles or money back.

"How Old Art Thou?" was the question discussed by Rev. A. W. Gauger last Sunday night in the church service. His conclusion was that a man's age is not determined by the amount of money he has made, not by the number of years he has been successful, but by the amount of good he has done. More people should have heard this profitable talk.

Your Public Utility Company
AS A CUSTOMER

The worth while citizen is one who helps build his community through production of commodties, and of substantial properties, that benefit not only him, but also his neighbors, or by valuable services rendered that add to the well being of the community; this good citizen shares the burden of his community by paying taxes for the public good.

The money for these taxes he earns by productive labor or service, and this is the kind of a citizen your Electric Company has proven itself to be, for this Company builds for the benefit of the whole community, and pays its just share of the taxes.

It may be of interest to know that Public Utility Companies, including railroads, pay about $4.53 in taxes out of each $100 of their gross income, and that this amount does not nclude Federal Income and profit taxes.

As a comparison, agriculture pays $2.50 in taxes of each $100 earned, while banks pay $3.58 in taxes, mining $2.41, and manufacturing 94¢ in taxes out of each $100 earned, showing that Public Utility Companies pay $3.59 more from each $100 of income than does even such an important industry as manufacturing.

In consideration of the importance in every respect of the Public Utility Company to your community, s not it reasonable that your own Company should be allowed to earn a sufficient amount to cover its full obligation to the community?

Respectfully,

Irene Lemke returned home last Monday after a week's visit at the Charles Dorwager home in Britt.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs Henry Greiman Saturday evening.

Herman Lemke was taken to the Mercy hospital Thursday and underwent a major operation. He is in a very serious condition.

Miss Ethel Beier who has been sick for some time is much better at this writing.

Most of the farmers of this vicinity are nearly through making hay.

A nice little shower of rain fell Tuesday at noon. A larger shower would be more appreciated as the gardens and corn fields are very much in need of rain.

Mr. and Mrs Rhine Lemke and daughter, Irene, were guests at the E S. Viken home at Garner last Sunday

Fredie Beier, who has been very sick the past week or two, is on the gain again.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ben Reemstma Monday. This is the second girl.

Harvey Stille and Sam Terhufen drove to Mason City Sunday morning to visit Loraine Stille who is still in a serious condition at the Mercy Hosptal. The little fellow stepped on a rusty nail some time ago resulting in blood poisoning.

Earl Josten, the hired hand on the John Lemke farm is at Lake Okoboji this week.

"Buzz" and "Red" Carlson were at Clear Lake Sunday evening taking in the band concert.

Orville Bridges, Elmer Beier and Paul Stille left for Kansas Wednesday in the Stille caf. They expect to be gone for several weeks helping during the threshing season.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ludeke and family drove to Fenton Sunday for a visit with relatives. Gerald Koerner looked after the chores during their absence.

ELL TOWNSHIP PEOPLE ENJOY PICNIC AT LAKE SUNDAY

Two Groups Have Chicken Dinners At The New State Park

Sunday being a beautiful day and also an exceedingly warm day, a great many people enjoyed picnics at Clear Lake and various other places. Two large picnics were held at the Clear Lake State Park. One was made up of the following people: Fred Barz and family, Henry Barz and family, Albert Barz and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Barz of Garner, Mrs. Lena Schroeder and little Max Barz, Mr. and Mrs. I. Thompson of Waterloo, Fred Kothenbeutel and family, John Bock and family, Fred Becker and family, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Josten and son Edmund, Wm. and Lydia Bock, Misses Anna, Rosa and Minnie Becker, Wm. and Edward Becker, Walter Rosendahl, Oral Gibson and George Goll.

The other picnic was composed of people north and east of Klemme as follows: Fred Petersen and family, Nels Back and family, Chris Back and family, Alfred Josten and family, Chas. Goll and family, Wm. Hampel and family and Frank Hoyt and family.

Both picnic groups enjoyed delicious chicken dinners, after which bathing was the greatest entertainment for all. At 4:00 o'clock a lunch was served and everyone departed, having spent a delightful day.

Another Picnic North Of Thompson

At an early hour Sunday morning five cars of picnicers motored to the Ralph Brouwer home, five miles north of Thompson and enjoyed a picnic dinner there on the lawn. The picnicers were relatives of the Brouwere family and were the following: Grandmother Schlawin, Otto Schlawin and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schlawin, Louis Griffin and family, Mr. and Mrs Gottlieb Goll and daughter Emma, Werner Schlawin and family, Carl Wille and family and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Goll.

Enjoyed Visit In Wisconsin

Miss Stella Bock returned last Wednesday after having enjoyed a four weeks visit with Miss Irma Alm and her mother in Stratford, Wis. Miss Bock states that Wisconsin is an ideal place for a vacation where you can see woods, rivers and lakes almost any place. The highways wind through the woods where can be seen the remains of Indian settlements. Mosinee was one of the most beautiful places where the Wisconsin River is very wild and has two large dams which furnish power and light for the city and a large paper mill. The highest point in Wisconsin is Rip Hill which is covered with trees and rocks and looks like a small mountain. A few days of their time was spent on a camping trip at Lake Shawano in the northern part of the state. The time there was aken up in fishing and bathing

Other Ell Township Items

Rev and Mrs. Grosshuesch and children, of Klemme, and Mr and Mrs. Kuhlman and daughter, Adella, of Meno, South Dakota, were entertained at the John Bock home Friday evening Ice cream and cake was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Marlin Bruns, of Williams, were dinner guests at the Ed. Buentenbach home Sunday. Mrs Bruns and Mrs. Buentenbach are sisters.

The B W S. Thresher Ring held a business meeting at the Albert Barz home Monday evening.

Wm. Rockow and family from north of Garner were callers at the John Bock and Ed Buentenbach homes Sunday. The Rockow family is riding in a new Chevrolet sedan

Brevity

A cub reporter, frequently reprimanded for prolixity and warned to be brief, turned in the following:

"A shocking affai. occurred last night Sir Edward Hopeless, a guest at Lady Panmore's ball, complained of feeling ill, took a highball, his hat, his coat, his departure, no notice of his friends, a taxi, a pistol from his pocket, and finally his life Nice chap Regrets and all that."

Weighty Problems

A number of problems, including the question whether this is to be a summerless year, are solved by the prediction of a seer that the world will come to an end in August. And neither will it be worth while to cancel that order for the winter fuel supply.

HAM AND EGGS

At last we may eat ham and eggs knowing that it is not merely our appetites which tell us that this is a delectable combination. The department of Agriculture backs us up in this idea by announcing that after careful research ham and eggs are scientific affinities.

Ham is rich in one kind of vitamin and eggs in another. Combined they form almost perfect nutrition Now some one should come out and champion those other fine combinations—corned beef and cabbage, roast goose and dressing, apple pie and cheese, turkey and cranberry sauce.

Traveling Light

A returned traveler says that he can tour Europe on $2 a day. It must be on a spinach diet Things are cheap and life is easy in Iowa but the average tourist will burn up more than $2 worth of gasoline in getting over the roads. We can hardly hope to compete with a $2 rate in sight-seeing unless one rides a bicycle and lives on beans.

Getting Tho Dough

Some of the women are getting the biggest salaries in France. There are sales managers in some of the great dressmaking shops who are garnering from $6,000 to $8,000 a year. This is twice as much as a cabinet minister receives. And it is the money from America that warrants the salaries paid to the successful designers and modistes of Paris.

What's the matter with getting up a non-stop flight for the town pessimist?

Mrs. Ray Kahl and children of Minneapolis came Sunday for a visit with her father, Mr. J. A. Keever who has been quite sick.

Once arrived at our destination, I stopped and briefly surveyed our surroundings. To the south extended, for a short distance, a belt of trees; but beyond this the whole surface of the stream lay exposed to the view of the blacks; my chances, though none of the best, would at least not be so overwhelmingly against me.

To take to the water, then; swim forth into midchannel while I was still sheltered by the woods, and then to make straight for the island—a poor enough expedient, but the best I could devise. If I only had a boat of some description, and could dash for the island at full speed, I might make it.

There have been times in my life when I have felt that things have gone exactly and precisely wrong, but on this occasion, at least, they were to go exactly and precisely right, for, as I took one last look, first down, then up the river, in the vain hope of discovering a craft of some kind, lo and behold! there to the north of me and not over fifty yards distant, I beheld a canoe.

It was not, however, a canoe unoccupied, apparently sprung into existence from nowhere simply because I had wished for it. Fate was not so kind as that. She was manned by two negroes, the one in the bow a stalwart specimen, his companion in the stern smaller and remarkably ugly, with lips of prodigious thickness and the low, retreating forehead of his race. Both men had paddles in their hands and were propelling the light craft downstream in a leisurely manner. Clearly enough, this rising of the slaves was general in its extent, and these blacks were doubtless coming from some plantation up the river to exchange news with their fellow rebels on the McAllister domain. That their rising had been successful I had no doubt, for the muzzle of a rifle protruded over the side of the canoe within easy reach of the paddler in the bow.

I was in a quandary. I hated the thought of taking human life, especially the lives of men with whom I had no quarrel, and with whom I sympathized for the heavy burden of their oppressive lot. Yet that canoe I must have, and my first thought was to step from the bushes as they neared my hiding place, level my rifle at them, and order them to bring their craft ashore. There were, however, obvious drawbacks to this scheme. In the first place, they were two to my one and might have pistols as well as their rifle, so that if both drew on me at once I could kill but one of them, at best, before being shot down myself. And in the second place, even if they obeyed me, it would be hard to get them ashore and to embark myself without their attacking me at close range, and the man in the bow was of such unusual stature and of such athletic build that I felt that in a grapple I would be no more than a child in his hands. And then, with a sudden inspiration, I remembered my companion "Quashy," I whispered, "when I step out of the woods, shout to them—in their own tongue—to jump overboard for their lives. I'll attend to the rest."

He nodded understandingly, and without further parley, for the canoe was now close at hand, I left the shelter of the trees and leveled my rifle full at the man in the bow. At the same instant I heard Quashy's guttural shout, and almost instantaneously the plunge of two dark bodies shivered the river's calm, and two black heads cut through the water, heading upstream and taking a quartering course for the shore. Without the loss of a second, I waded out, finding the water unexpectedly shallow, and in an instant I had drawn the canoe to shore, and, leaping in, started in the direction of the island.

Progress in one of these light crafts is rapid, even with an unskilled hand at the paddle, and in a very few moments I had gained a position where I might turn and make straight down the river. For an instant I thought of continuing to the western shore and thus baffling the negroes on the plantation, but I remembered in time that there were other estates beyond the hills, and even now skirmishers might be lurking in the dense vegetation ahead of me. With the memory of my own ambuscade so fresh in mind, I had no wish to meet a similar fate, and therefore suddenly shifted my course and headed the bow of the canoe for the south. Undoubtedly that sweep of the paddle saved me, for a second later, to the accompaniment of a sharp report, a bullet whizzed past me, and I bent to my work in earnest, praying that my assailant was scouting alone, and not with a body of companions. Apparently this was the case, for no more shots followed, but to balance matters I heard lusty yells from the plantation, and, casting a hasty glance in that direction, I could see them shoving off two boats to intercept me before I could gain the shelter of the island.

There was now necessity for speed and nothing else, and I plied my paddle for my very life. For a time the issue seemed doubtful. The leading boat, well manned and driven forward at rapid speed, presently reached a position where two negroes in the bow dropped their oars and commenced firing; but fortunately for me their aim was poor and their bullets went wild. Quite instinctively, and without stopping to weigh the advisability of my act, I stopped paddling just long enough to pick up my own rifle and take a flying shot at one of the marksmen, who was standing erect in the bow, in the act of ramming home a charge. The shot could not be called difficult, though I may say in my own behalf that my hand was unsteady from my exertions, and that the motion both of my own craft and that of my pursuers was not conducive to exactness of aim. Therefore I did not kill the man, but only wounded him; yet the result was probably in my favor, for with a loud cry of pain he staggered, lost his balance and fell at full length among the rowers, completely demoralizing the crew. At the same moment, moreover (for in their excitement they had taken no thought of their approach to the island), a volley from the house stretched the other rifleman dead. This, not unnaturally, completed their discomfiture, and both boats immediately abandoned the pursuit, and got out of range with all possible speed, leaving me free to continue on my way unmolested. A minute or two later I drove my frail craft high on the beach, and hurried toward the house. The door swung open to receive me, and an instant later, with a great feeling of thankfulness in my heart, I darted in and heard it swing to behind me with a crash. Come what might, now at least I could die fighting for the girl I loved.

CHAPTER XIII

"Port After Stormie Seas."

For a moment I was too spent to notice anything; then, to my mingled joy and relief, I saw that it was Helen who had opened the door, and I should have clasped her in my arms, but as she turned toward me, she lifted a restraining hand. "Dick," she whispered, "we're in danger. There's a man here—a lawyer—looking for Robert McAllister. They come from the same town; he's known McAllister all his life. What shall we do?"

I gazed at her, aghast, while a great resentment at the ways of fate filled my heart. I had striven hard for our safety, and had fought, in the face of odds, to reach the island—and now to be greeted like this! How could we escape? The room, with its single lamp, was in shadow; I could count on the resemblance and the scar across my cheek. Should I take the chance, and try to pass for McAllister? Or should we run for it, risking both the danger of pursuit and the peril of capture by the slaves. That, it seemed, would be almost certain death. And then suddenly, in a flash, no choice was left me; I heard the footsteps on the stairs, and a moment later Andrew McAllister stood before me, at his heels the stranger whom I had met, on horseback, on my way to the Port of the Devil.

"Here's an old friend of yours, Robert," said McAllister, "with news for you from your home."

At the words the man stepped forward, cordially enough and with outstretched hand, but, as our fingers touched and he looked me squarely in the face, I could read, to my horror, first perplexity, then growing doubt, and at last certainty. His greeting died upon his lips, and he whirled sharply toward the Scotchman. "This isn't Bob McAllister," he cried.

Andrew McAllister stared, as well he might. Then, with an air of irritation, queried, "Not Robert McAllister? What do you mean by that?"

It seemed to me it was time for me to take a hand. "What madman have you here, uncle?" I exclaimed. "He'll be telling you next that you're not Andrew McAllister. Is he drunk or crazy?"

But the stranger, having, alas! right upon his side, was not so easily put down. And as I had a chance to take a closer look at him, I could see, to my dismay, that his wiry figure and keen-featured face, with bright eyes peering from under tufted eyebrows, betokened a man of action. And at once he answered me, readily enough, "I do not drink, young man, and my brains, I dare venture, are equal to your own." Then, turning to McAllister, he continued: "I mean precisely what I say. This youth bears a remarkable—nay, a startling resemblance to my client, but he is not the man. I have known Robert McAllister since he lay in his cradle. This man is shorter, broader in the shoulder; his voice is deeper; his eyes are lighter—in a score of ways he differs from the other. I give you my word—my oath, if you like—he is not your nephew."

At once I determined to hazard a bold stroke. "Uncle," I cried, "we waste time. Whether I am your nephew or not makes no difference now. These slaves of yours have butchered Shively and his men. They'll attack the island next; perhaps at any moment. An hour from now we may all be dead. Let's defend ourselves first. If my life is spared, I'll prove this man to be a liar and a cheat."

My stratagem, however, was doomed to failure. With a braver man it would, I believe, have succeeded, but, as it was, McAllister's overmastering dread of Barclay and his morbid fears of treachery or surprise, were now thoroughly aroused. And thus he answered: "They won't attack us yet; I've been watching them. They're still at work on their ladders. And if they do attack," he added, with a still blacker glance at me, "I want no spies among my troops." Then, after a moment's thought, he turned to the stranger. "Well," he challenged, "you lawyers are said to be artful as the devil himself. How can you prove to me this lad is not Robert McAllister?"

The lawyer reflected for an instant; then asked, "Have you any letters from your nephew?"

"I have," McAllister answered. "Half a dozen, at least. In my chest, upstairs."

I heard question and answer with a sinking heart. That the lawyer meant to compare my handwriting with McAllister's was evident; and it was obvious, also, that I could not meet the test, for my fingers, though skillful with a rifle, have never liked the pen, and I have always written—when forced to write—in a most ill-formed and sprawling hand. That it would resemble the writing of Robert McAllister there was not one chance in a million. I felt that I was doomed.

And now the lawyer spoke again, remorselessly pursuing his plan. "Then get them," he ordered, "and in the meantime ask this gentleman to write for you on a sheet of paper the months of the year, and the words, 'Respected Uncle' and 'Your obedient nephew.'"

Now there is nothing more certain in the world than this: that truth, in the end, will prevail; and I could feel that the stranger's briskness and his quiet air of being in the right were having their effect on McAllister. "Very well," he agreed; and as he motioned me to come forward I noted with a pang, that he made the gesture with his left hand, while his right held his pistol, aimed at my breast in a manner which strongly reminded me of Barclay. "Here are paper, ink and quill," he said. "I will get the letters." And then, to me, he added, in a manner which spoke volumes, "Place your pistol on that chair; then come hither and write as he suggests."

For one second I thought of drawing then and there, and of trying to drill McAllister with a bullet, but a moment's reflection showed me the folly of such a course. A hundred to one he would kill me first, and, even if he did not, and my shot went home, there would still be the stranger and the maroons to reckon with. And though there seemed, indeed, small choice between dying now or later, when my falsehood stood revealed, yet there remained the slender chance that something might intervene to save me, and on this hazard I determined to rely. Accordingly, I placed my pistol on the chair and strode over to the table with an air of confidence which I was far from feeling.

McAllister, meanwhile, had handed his weapon to the stranger, with a word which I could not catch; and I could see, by the manner in which the lawyer handled the pistol that he was a man who could shoot as well as argue. And thus McAllister ascended the stairs, while I pulled the inkhorn toward me, and, seating myself, made a show of preparing to write.

During all this time Helen had remained quietly in a corner of the room, without uttering a sound, but now she crept timidly forward and stood behind the lawyer, as though seeking his protection.

"Oh," she murmured, with such terror in her voice that I half thought she had deserted me, "a spy! How horrible! But you will protect us, won't you? You won't let him escape?"

Now few of us, in this world, are armed at all points, and the stranger, able man though he was, was not proof against the pleading of this frightened lass. "You may trust me," he answered grimly enough; and his gaze, indeed, was fixed so firmly on my face that I doubt, in the semi-darkness of the room, whether he even saw the slender cord which, in falling, flickered for an instant, before his eyes. But I saw and understood, and gathered, like a tiger, for my spring. For a second or two all was quiet; then, suddenly, the lawyer uttered a queer throaty gasp, both hands flew to his neck, and the pistol, mercifully without being discharged, fell to the floor. Instantly I was upon him, and almost in the same motion I had gagged him with my kerchief, caught him, as he reeled, and laid him on the floor, his face already purpling for lack of air. Then, still in less time than it takes to tell it, Helen released the grip of the strangling cord, and with little trouble, for he lay like putty in our hands, we bound him, hand and foot. And next, though moments were precious, Helen snatched the scarf from her neck and bandaged his eyes, then cried: "Quick! To the southerly point. There's a boat there. It's our only chance!" And, rushing to the door, she unbarred it and threw it open.

For an instant I thought that she had lost her wits, for what was the use in attempting to escape, if we thus told the lawyer of our destination? But the next second I understood, for with finger on lip she caught up my rifle and pistol, thrust them into my hands, and motioning me to follow, led the way, on tiptoe, down the hall and into the dining room; then hurriedly explained: "There's a pit. Under the flooring. I found it yesterday. We've thrown them off the track. Now we can hide."

Even in this crisis I could not help admiring her cleverness. They would search for us on the island. Night was at hand. The slaves would shortly attack. For a time, indeed, it seemed that we were safe, and without an instant's delay Helen made for the closet in the dining room, dropped on her knees, fumbled for a moment in the darkness, then rose, swinging up with her a trap door. I gazed downward into impenetrable blackness.

I surveyed the chasm doubtfully, speculating as to its probable depth. But this was no time to hesitate, and, handing my rifle to Helen, I slid downward until I held on by my hands alone; then, striving to relax as much as possible, I let go. To my relief I struck bottom almost instantly; the pit could not have been more than eight feet deep. At once I stretched my arms upward, and after a few moments of quick maneuvering the door had closed over us, and we stood side by side in the gloom.

Johnson Saw No Good Qualities in Merchant

Doctor Johnson was bitterly prejudiced against all merchants, says the Market for Exchange. His famous biographer, Boswell, once asked him what was the reason for his anger at the trader who achieved opulence, and Johnson replied:

"Why, sir, the reason is, though I do not undertake to prove that is a reason, we see no qualities in trade that should entitle such a man to superiority. We are not angry at a soldier's getting riches, because we see that he possesses qualities which we have not. If a man returns from battle, having lost one hand, with the other full of gold, we feel that he deserves the gold, but we cannot think that a fellow sitting all day at a desk is entitled to get above us."

"But," replied Boswell, "may we not suppose a merchant to be a man of an enlarged mind, such as Addison in the Spectator describes Sir Andrew Freeport to have been?"

"Why, sir," quoth Johnson, "we may suppose any fictitious character. We may suppose a philosophical day laborer, who is happy in reflecting that, by his labor, he contributes to the fertility of the earth and the support of his fellow creatures, but we find no such philosophical day laborer. A merchant may, perhaps, be a man of an enlarged mind, but there is nothing in trade connected with a large mind."

Gave Name to Association

The name "Lloyd's" applied to the Underwriters' Association of London, is derived from a coffee house kept by Edward Lloyd in Tower street in the Seventeenth century, where underwriters met to transact business.

LACE COATS COMPETE WITH SILK DANCE FROCKS OF SHEER WHIT

YOUR choice, a summer coat all of lace or of delicate-toned silk—which shall it be? Or perhaps you have made up your mind to own one of the new hand-blocked linen coats whose patterns bespeak East Indian inspiration, or how about a colorful velveteen wrap or one made entirely of ribbon, row upon row? It adds zest to the mode for such delightfully whimsical materials to enter the list of popular mediums for the summer wrap. Furthermore, these prettily frivolous cloakings are yet another proof that we are in the midst of an era of ultra-feminine style trends.

If one must give "a why and a wherefore" of these radically new cloak ideas, let's trace them to their origin—that of tuning them in to complement the popular ensemble costume. Yes, no doubt the ensemble is responsible for the present coat vagaries. Soon as ever the creators of our fashions started to matching up this and that, to complete the compose, it led on and on to using materials related to the frock, for the coat also. Hence we have wraps of all-over lace to wear with gowns of identical all-over lace, also silk coats of the same fabric as the rest of the costume and other versions too numerous to mention.

So enthusiastic is the mode over these fanciful coats they are now being exploited as an individual proposition entirely independent of the ensemble idea. For instance the clever lace coat shown here to the right is designed for summer use. It may be worn over a neat georgette afternoon dress, as pictured, or over a dainty sleeveless beflowered georgette, or over one's washable summer dresses it will prove most winsome. Note the grosgrain ribbon bordering about this coat, which displays a trio of bright colors. Grosgrain ribbon bindings and borderings finish the edges of many a fashionable garment this season. The silk coat to the left in the picture is a Paris creation fashioned of be crepe faille. It is stunning for d time wear, as are the many co which the haute couture are desi ing of light-colored crepes and moi sheer frocks, which are all white and possessed of many flounces and tiers.

Distinction in simplicity is the present hobby of the mode. Again and again, billowy white tulle or filmy net, posed over under-drops of white satin or taffeta, strike a note of refreshing artlessness in the midst of sophisticated styling. Organdie also holds sway in youths' realm. Indeed the mode is extemporizing on the organdie theme at this moment, playing it in every fascinating key. White georgette, too, is quite a favorite for evening wear. Which all goes to show that this is very much of a "white season."

The lovely white evening frock in the picture typifies the trend toward sweetly simple effects. Alluring transparency distinguishes this model of white tulle which is so charmingly posed by Billie Dove, a screen artist who is gifted with the art of wearing her clothes with distinction. In its general styling it is quaintly picturesque. A dream of a gown is this, with a rather long skirt contrasted by a stylishly short white satin underslip. Smart items are the normal waistline and the sash of white satin which girdles it. White pearls, white satin slippers, with flesh-colored hose and the dainty costume completes its story of unaffected loveliness.

Sometimes the mode permits just a touch of color. Perhaps a huge flower of chiffon sprawls its diaphanous petals at the hip. Or it may be that an enormous bow of tinted mallines with streamers finds placement at the waist, dipping its voluminous streamers to accomplish the fashionable irregular hemline.

Here's a fetching idea if one embroiders—work flowers in colorful yarn or white organdie. Try it! So simple to do, so inexpensive—yet, one of the prettiest ideas of the season for the summer frock.

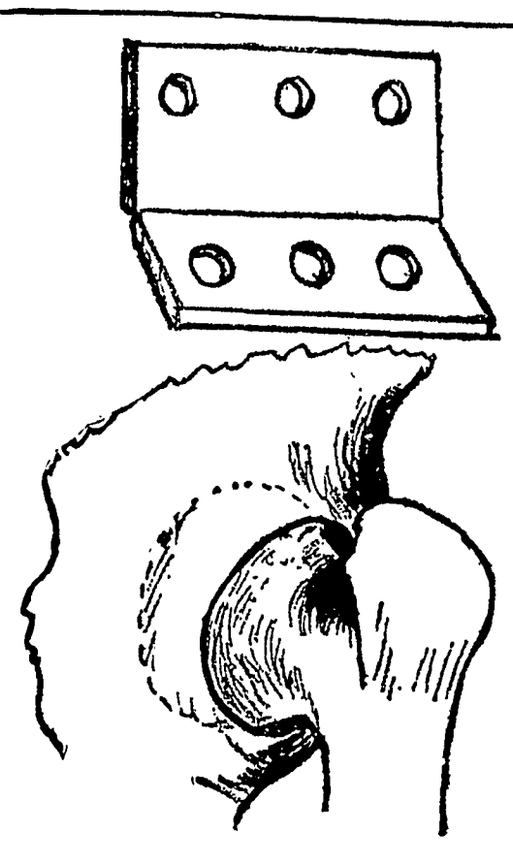
K-R-O KILLS-RATS-ONLY

YOURSELF and YOUR BODY

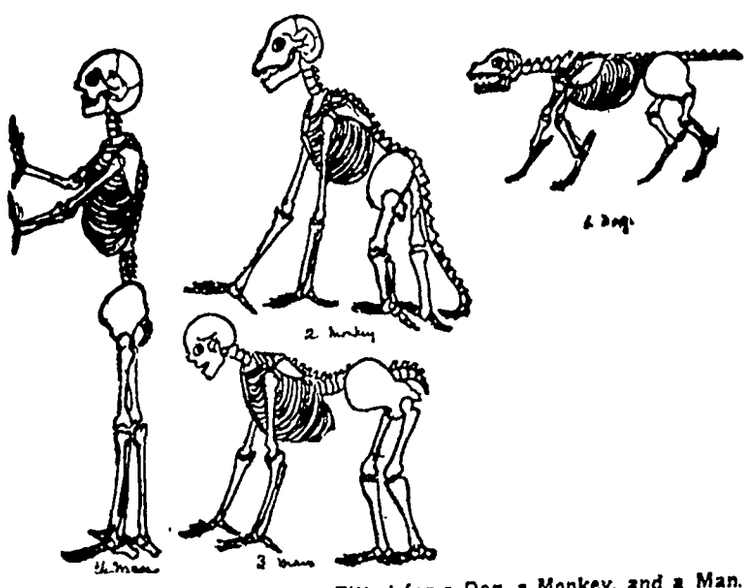
By WILFRED T. GRENFELL

THE FRAMEWORK

The Arm.



A Hinge Joint (top) and the Joint of the Hip. The Joint of the Hip is a Ball and Socket. This Is the Strongest Kind of Joint to Carry the Weight of the Body.



The Same Kind of Frame, Fitted for a Dog, a Monkey, and a Man.

"LEGS again today, isn't it?"

"No, arms, father."

"Same thing, just front legs."

"Oh, father!"

"Man must stand erect. He can see better that way, and turn quicker. So he had better have arms on the top instead of four legs, hadn't he? Can you guess why?"

"To eat with?"

"No, he could eat without hands, like a pig or a dog. It is in order to enable him to use weapons so as to give him greater strength against other animals, and to use tools so as to become the real master of the world. Otherwise he could never have killed a lion or an elephant. They would have killed him every time they saw him. If you lose your arms it is far worse than losing your legs.

"Just as the body sits in the basin on the top of the legs with the spine up the back, so the arms hang from a cap on the top of the body.

"Now we will take the same number of bones as we took for the foot, and lay them out as they ought to be to hold instead of to walk. Now you see we have got the hand laid out. Isn't it like the foot? Only we do not want a heel in the hand to stand on, so those bones have grown small.

"Now for the . . Get two bones like the leg, and we will lash them together in the same way as before, except that we will let them turn round on one another, and not strap them so that they cannot move, like the bones of our leg. You fetch them, and I will carry the big bone of the upper arm. Isn't it exactly like the thigh-bone? Only as it has to twist about so much more than the thigh and leg we will not make the socket of the joint so deep.

"Now comes the arch or arm girdle. As you see, it is made up of the top bone of the chest, the collar-bones, and the shoulder-blades. But where will you hang the girdle up? It is absolutely necessary for our body to have a pump to keep driving the blood all over the body day and night, because in the blood are all the workers swimming to their work, in every corner of the body. If that pump breaks down once (as our motor sometimes does), for more than even a minute or two at the outside, the whole body dies and goes to pieces. So it has to be ever so carefully protected, and the box to hold it must be strong, as well as elastic, in case anything hits it. We will joint the ribs of this box onto the spine, and hang the arm girdle around the top. Here is the box. You know it quite well."

"Why, it is the chest."

"Certainly; a box is a chest, and a chest is a box. People call it the chest. Everybody should try to make his chest as big as ever he can."

"What else is in the chest?"

"That is a secret for later on. All we want the chest for now is to hang the arms on. This is how we will make it. It must be full of joints or it would be broken up in a few minutes. The joints make it elastic, and so save shocks from breaking it, and also help to make it possible for us to move our arms in every direction. This picture shows it a little more clearly. Where the ribs of the box are fixed to the chest bone they all have elastic ends like rubber. You can call it gristle. You cannot break it by hitting it. It just bends and then comes back to the same shape.

The Motors.

"The world thinks a lot of itself nowadays because of the way we can travel about so nicely and so quickly. But you remember the trapeze men, the bareback riders, and the 'broncho-busters' at the circus, don't you? You will soon see that our bodies are still by far the most wonderful 'moving' machines on earth—so marvelous are they that many of the motors in them work day and night, from the day of our birth to the day of our death, and never stop; and yet we do not know that they are working, and we cannot stop them, and we cannot order them about. They repair themselves while they go on working, and though the force which works them is probably very much the same as the force that we call electricity, there is never any spark-plug trouble, or any short-circuiting that stops the gears from working one single moment.

"The old Romans called these motors 'muscles.' There is one kind which we cannot control, and fortunate for us it is, for we get tired, and they never do. They arrange to rest while they work. They are called involuntary muscles; but we have to control the largest, the quickest, and the most powerful, and so, like slaves, they soon get tired. For example, you want—that is, it is your wish—to pick up a spoon and scoop up some porridge from your plate and carry it to your mouth. Framework alone cannot do that—it must have a motor to move the joints, such as the fingers, or elbow, and move them as they are directed. If you didn't command those motors, as you do, they might put the porridge in your pocket, or your nose. Those motors are therefore called voluntary muscles, since you can order them to do your wishes.

"But the most important of all the muscles, those that drive the great pump, or heart, have all the advantages of both kinds.

"Each muscle consists of thousands of motors, all united together, and all working together. There are 600,000 in one muscle of the arm.

"These motors work and muscles suddenly become short, either when you yourself tell them, or when anything tells, the nearest office that to save accident or to prevent damage the motor must act instantly. There are special cells always on duty in local offices which tell them to shorten up at once, without waiting for you to be consulted, lest you should be too late. We call this reflex action.

POST TOASTIES

They stay crisp in milk or cream

A man's appetite is just a boy's—grown up!

Crisp, crunchy, delicious Post Toasties. Was there ever a hungry boy who could resist this delightful combination of true corn flavor and double-crispness? Men are merely boys—grown up. Give men Post Toasties. They like the crunchy goodness and the unequalled flavor of the toasted hearts of corn. Serve Post Toasties with milk or cream. Try them, too, with juicy berries or luscious fruits. Here is one dish that men never tire of—Post Toasties, with the true corn flavor sealed in lasting crispness by the special process of the Postum Company.

Make sure that you get the real Post Toasties, in the red and yellow, wax-wrapped package that keeps them crisply fresh and ready to serve.

Famous Bible Sure to Appreciate in Value

The Melk copy of the Gutenberg Bible, which I bought at the Anderson galleries last year, was as exciting an acquisition as I have ever made. Of course there were many collectors and dealers besides myself who yearned to own it. The price I paid for it—$106,000—was like the first shot of the Revolution, heard around the world.

Mrs. E. S. Harkness bought this copy from me and most graciously bestowed it upon the library of Yale university, in memory of Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness. It is certainly one of the greatest gifts ever made to a university in this country. So many copies have passed into public institutions during the last few years, it is unlikely that many more perfect ones can come into the market.

What will its price be in the future? One can as well stem the tides as to block its steady and irresistible march. It is only a matter of time. Today it sells for more than $100,000; more than $1,000,000 will some day be a reasonable price for it.—Dr. A. S. Rosenbach in the Saturday Evening Post.

Breaking It Gently

It was the scent of summer in the air that sent a certain business man a-hurrying to his tailor.

During the winter months, however, his figure had altered. No longer was he tall and slim. Plenty of good food and long days of enforced idleness had played him a low trick.

His tailor spotted the change but, knowing his customer, kept a discreet silence as he measured skillfully.

"About the same as last year—eh?" queried the business man, as the measuring process came to an end.

"Oh, yes, sir," replied the tactful tailor. "Chest a bit lower, p'r'aps, that's all."

CREAMERY HAS MANY ROUTES

FIVE TRUCK DRIVERS EMPLOYED BY BUTTER FACTORY

Cream Routes Radiate In All Directions From Klemme

Harold Leitzinger is the latest addition to the force of men employed by the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery Company. For some time he has been hauling cream for Clifford Swartz, taking over one of the three routes handled by Mr. Swartz. Mr. Leitzinger is still hauling on this route and in addition he has started a new route running north-east of Klemme. He started hauling on the new route Tuesday.

Leitzinger has purchased a new Ford truck, completely equipped of the Garner Auto Co here, which he uses on his routes.

With the addition of the new route just opened the Klemme butter factory now receives cream over ten routes. On the majority of the routes the cream is hauled in every other day, and this means that the haulers must leave real early in the morning in order to get the cream delivered early in the forenoon. One of the drivers leaves at four o'clock in the morning and gets his first delivery in at seven, and then goes out again and gets his second route in before noon.

The addition of another route s just another indication of how the Klemme Creamery is steadily growing.

Thirty rounds of headliners will be offered the fans at unusually low admission price. Abe Martin of Mason City is in charge and arranges the matches for each Monday night.

KNOW WHY IT IS CALLED "AUGUST, MONTH OF BATTLES"?

Interesting Article In Times This Week Tells You Why

"Extra! Extra! British capture and burn American Capitol! Mad Anthony Wayne Defeats the Indians! Old Ironsides Wins Great Victory over Guerriere! Massacre at Fort Dimms' Allies Enter Peking! Washington Defeated in Battle on Long Island' King Philip Run to Earth! Kentuckians Defeated at Blue Licks' Sioux Attack New Ulm! Quantrill Slaughters Citizens of Lawrence! Extra! Extra!"

So might the newsboys have cried their papers on almost any August day almost any year since the history of the United States began. For it is doubtful if any other month ever saw so many important and dramatic military engagements as has the month of August. If you would know why, read the feature article "August, Month of Battles," by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Times. It's an "out-of-the-ordinary" article handled in an unusual way. Don't miss it! Turn to one of the inside pages.

It is not expected that the new Ford model will be able to climb a tree.

RICHLY DECORATED

Thus far Col. Charles A lindbergh has received 18 different medals and decorations, to say nothing of the vox populi medal of merit. If he tried to wear them all at one time he would look like a bit of Tiffany publicity. He has more orders than any living American, but that is no sign that he has to take any. After all, he seems to like the iron pants button of the flying mail as well as any of his flossy decorations.

No other young man—or old man, either—ever got so much publicity in so short a time as did Lindbergh Nor did any other young or old man ever so conquer the world in so brief a period. For conquest and publicity Lindbergh breaks all records.

LIVE STOCK SHIPMENTS HERE HOLD STEADY

Five Car Loads Shipped Saturday; Seven Week Before

The previous week the Shipping Association handled four car loads consisting of two car loads of hogs, one cattle and one mixed. The same week C A. Larsen shipped two car loads of hogs and one car load of cattle.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

All services last Sunday were well attended and proved to be profitable The children's service in Liberty Church was especially enjoyed. The pastor spoke on 'The Potters Wheel' and by practical demonstration showed and told how pottery is made and how God wishes to make man useful and of honor to his Creator

The song by the girl's chorus was enjoyed by all as usual.

We are planning for next Sunday's services to be most helpful as we know they will be to all who help make them so. The Rev. O W. Zeidler, of Wheatena, Kansas, a brother of our townsman will preach to the Klemme folk. At this service the special collection announced last Sunday will be taken.

Next Sunday is one full of interest as the Epworth Leeague Institute is on at Clear Lake beginning on Monday. It will be held at the New Methodist Camp east of Dodges Point The fine new tabernacle with a seating capacity for 3,000 people will be used. From 600 to 700 young people of eastern and southern Iowa will attend. The mornings will be taken up with class work where methods for best carrying on the work in the local leagues will be studied. The afternoons will be given over to recreation and play on land and lake.

The evening programs will be of varied forms, such as speaking, singing, bible story telling contests, pageants, etc.

While these activities are on at the camp at Clear Lake, the Bible Conference will be on at the Methodist Camp at Lake Okoboji. This is our Northwest Iowa camp. West Okoboji is known as one of the three blue water lakes of the world and is a beautiful body of water. A strong program is prepared again this year, so that those who attend are assured of ample provisions for the spiritual and the intellectual, while the physical man will find his just dues in the recreation part. All these are open to "Whosoever Will."

CIVIC PRIDE

Citizens of Klemme should realize that neglected and rubbish-strewn vacant lots are a nuisance and a disgrace to the town. Weeds should be cut, and rubbish taken care of. Owners of property who really take care of their grounds are made to suffer because of the neglected condition of unimproved property around them.

FARM LANDS DESERVE LOWER TAXES SAYS THORNBURG

Land Values Lower Now Than They Were Two Years Ago

"Studies of the tax situation which have been completed by different divisions of our department, with the co-operation of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, show that there is need for a still further equalization of farm taxes," stated M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture.

"Our study shows that land volues are lower on the average than they were two years ago, therefore, land taxes must be equalized accordingly. If the net earnings of the lond are capitalized, it will also show the need of a lower taxable value than given to most farm lands at present. We hate to admit the low value and low returns of Iowa londs at present but we must face the facts.

"Railroads are in better shape to pay increased taxes than farmers," states Mr. Thornburg. "If farm land paid the same net return in comparison to its taxable value as railroads, Iowa land would return $5.39 net per acre. However, figures collected from over the state, show that the net return lost year, after paying taxes, depreciation and repairs, was only $3.51 per acre. In other words, the returns from railroad property wee 53 percent greater than farm land."

POP CORN IN IOWA

Assessors reported 29,366 acres of pop corn raised in Iowa in 1926 which is only 54 per cent of the acreage of 1925. Thoy reported a total crop of 42,656,647 pounds of ears, which is only 47 per cent of the crop of 1925. The average yield per acre in 1926 was 1,453 pounds of ears.

From somewhat inharmonious reports received by the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture, it appears that the acreage has suffered another great decline in 1927 to about 14,000 acres. The condition of the crop, though a little more backward than usual, is better than lost year. A total crop of about 23,000,000 pounds is now indicated.

FARMERS ELEVATOR ISSUES REPORT

COMPANY SHOWS SUBSTANTIAL GAIN THE PAST YEAR

Farmers Grain Dealers Association Of Iowa Audited Books

The annual financial report issued by the Farmers Elevator of Klemme shows that the institution enjoyed a very good year with an operating profit of nearly $6,000, the best in the history of the Company.

The books of the Farmers Elevator were recently audited by the auditing department of the Farmers Grain Dealers Association of Iowa, with headquarters at Fort Dodge.

Commenting on the report the auditing department says: "The results of the year's operations were very successful and should prove satisfactory to all concerned. There have been obstacles such as disputed accounts, unbusiness-like practices, poor grain, etc. These had to be overcome without causing friction and losing customers. The result indicates that the community has been treated fairly. Your company is stronger financially and the buildings have been improved during the year by installing a truck dump, and the building of a new coal house, also a new grinder has been added to the equipment. Total cost of these improvements is $3,628.86. With this improvement in the plant, and with the support of the community, there is no reason your company can not be one of the many successful farmers elevator companies of Iowa."

EPWORTH MOONLIGHT PARTY WAS FINE SUCCESS

Fred Arnold Will Lead Services For League Sunday Evening

Perhaps one of the most successful social affairs of the summer was put on by the members of the Epworth League last Thursday night in the form of a moonlight Mystery Party. The first event was a treasure hunt in which the Leaguers displayed their sagacity in following a trail. The remainder of the evening was taken up with stunts, games, stories, and a short "sing." About thirty attended.

Leaders of the Sunday evening devotional services for the next few weeks will be:

July 24: 'Contemporay Prophets" by Fred Arnold.

July 31: Institute Sunday, no meeting.

Aug. 7: Donald Gibbs and Floyd Klotzbach.

Aug. 14: "My Life Work," Clarence Elder.

U. S. FIRST

Americans have conquered the ocean and the air, the vast traverses of exploration. We stood first at the North Pole. We were the first to girdle the earth with airplanes. We were the first to make a non-stop flight across the Atlantic. We hold the heavyweight championship of the world in the field of pugilism. It was our entry into the war that turned the scales in favor of the allied arms. We recognize no subordinate position in the field of literature and science. We are sweeping to the front in the arts of music, sculpture and painting. We are first in industry and commerce.

This is no boasting, but statement of fact.

RUNAWAY REMINDER OF OLD TIMES IN KLEMME

Tom And Jerry Draw Bigger Crowd Than An Auto Wreck

An automoble wreak now-a-days causes nothing more than a few comments of "going too fast" or that "the driver is green," and other like remarks, but to have a team run away draws a real crowd now.

Owen Neuhring provided the excitement Tuesday forenoon when he tied his team to a post west of the Garner Auto Company and then went up town.

The team, a nice big pair of bays hitched to a lumber wagon became disturbed when "nose flies" attacked them, causing them to pull back and tear away across the streets toward the lumber yard where the wagon struck the cement curb near the tracks and upset, the horses breaking away with the tongue and front wagon trucks and running on west and finally piled up near the highway in the ditch where they were captured.

The only damage resulting was a broken reach in the wagon, a few straps broken on the harness and one of the horses was one tooth shy.

NOSE FLY OF HORSE IS A BOT

May Be Controlled by Treating The Horses In Fall

The nose fly which annoys horses is one of the three kinds of bot flies and may be controlled by treating the hores during the late fall and winter, according to Fred D. Butcher, extension entomologist, Iowa State College.

The pain which the nose fly inflicts is caused by the laying of eggs at the base of the hair on the horses' lips. When the nose fly attacks horses they become unruly and many runaways are caused as a result.

Larva or grubs hatch from the eggs and these attach themselves to the stomach of the horse where they feed the remainder of the summer and fall months. In severe cases the horse may die from bots.

By November and December the young bots in the stomach of the horse may be rather easily killed by treatment administered by a veterinarian.

In order to assist in cleaning up the nose fly, the extension workers of Iowa State College in entomology and veterinary medicine are offering a project along this line. At least 75 percent of the horse owners in a territory must agree to have their animals treated. Also the cooperation of the local veterinarians is sought.

Woodbury, Hardin and Chickasaw counties all are considering the ose fly project. The treatmnet per horse including materials, probably will not be over 50 cents.

While the nose flies and other bot flies spread some by flight, they are introduced into new territories principally by shipping in or moving horses.

PAYS TO LIME PREVIOUS YEAR SAYS AMES EXPERT

Station Gets Better Results With This Method

If ground limestone is applied to the soil the year before clover or alfalfa is seeded, a better stand will often be obtained than where the lime is applied just preceding the seeding of the legum. This has been the experience of a number of farmers thruout the state and also agrees with the results obtained in experiments at Iowa State College.

Many farmers have applied limestone just preceding the last corn cultivation and have obtained good results, according to J. L Boatman, soils extension specialist of Iowa State College. This should be practiced only when the corn field the following year is to be sown to alfalfa or clover with oats or some other nurse crop.

In sections of the state where winter wheat is grown, the limestone frequently is spread after the ground has been plowed for the wheat and the lime is then worked in when the seed bed is prepared. The clover or alfalfa in winter wheat is sown the following spring.

The Farm Bureau in Benton Co. this year has cooperated in a number of demonstrations on liming. On one farm five acres of alfalfa on which lime had been applied the previous year made an excellent stand, whereas a similar piece along side made only a fair stand when crushed limestone was applied in the spring just preceding the sowing of the alfalfa.

Similar results have been obtained by the Farm Bureau demonstrations in a dozen or more counties this year, according to Mr. Boatman.

Applying the lime several months ahead apparently gives the material a chance to correct the acid condition before the young plant begins its search for food material, the specialists say.

AUGUST—Month of Battles

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS named for Augustus Caesar, Roman emperor and great military leader, because it had been a lucky month for him, this month which we now know as August. Although the United States has never prided itself upon imperialism as did this ancient conqueror—the name itself means "imperial"—the fact remains that August has been an important month in American military history. It is doubtful if there have been in any other single month in the year as many important engagements with the enemy as there have during this one. Heitman's "Historical Register and Dictionary of the United States Army—1789-1903" lists no less than 296 major battles, skirmishes and other actions in which troops of our regular army have been engaged during August. Add to this number the record of important engagements during our colonial history and it is easy to see why the characterization "August, Month of Battles" is an apt one. Every day in the month is the anniversary of some stirring military event, as witness:

August 1.—In 1813 this day saw an army of 1,200 British and Indians, led by General Proctor, surround Ft. Stephenson or Lower Sandusky, on the present site of Fremont, Ohio. It was defended by 160 men of the Seventeenth and Twenty-fourth infantries, commanded by Capt. George Crogan who had just passed his twenty-first birthday, and six of his subordinates as youthful as himself. They held the fort against repeated assaults on this day and the next and when Proctor's army finally retreated, the state of Ohio was delivered from the fear of a British conquest. On August 1 and 2, 1832, away up in the northwestern corner of Illinois, an army commanded by Gen. Henry Atkinson fought the engagement known as the Battle of Bad Axe river, with the Sac and Fox warriors of Chief Black Hawk, and virtually ended the Black Hawk war.

August 2.—Out on the plains of Wyoming, near Ft. Phil Kearny of tragic memory, in the year 1867, 32 white men, commanded by Col. J. W. Powell of the Twenty-seventh infantry, crouched down behind the scanty shelter of some wagon boxes arranged in the form of an oval. Around them raged a torrent of howling, blood-mad savages—Chief Red Cloud's Oglala Sioux, 3,000 in number. Charge after charge of these Indians, the finest warriors of the western plains, was hurled back by the steady stream of rifle fire which wreathed the improvised corral with a cloud of smoke. When the battle was over, the 32 defenders had lost 2 killed and 2 wounded. The loss of the Indians in killed and wounded was 1,137. No wonder the Wagon-Box fight has come down in history as "an account that reads like a story of Cortez"!

Black Hawk.

August 3.—On this day in 1869 Companies E and F of the Twenty-second infantry and a group of Indian scouts fought an engagement near Ft. Stevenson, in North Dakota, with the hostile Sioux who were swarming about that post. From its founding Ft. Stevenson was in an almost perpetual state of siege, and the white man who ventured out from its walls went to certain death The only exception to this rule was the case of the famous scout "Yellowstone" Kelly, who acted as mail carrier between the Missouri river posts in those days, whose hairbreath escapes were more thrilling than anything which can come from the imagination of a Wild West dime novelist.

Marinus Willett.

August 4.—One hundred and fifty years ago on this date an army of British, Tories and Indians, commanded by Col. Barry St. Leger, appeared before Ft. Schuyler (the former Ft. Stanwix) on the present site of Rome, N. Y. It was defended by Continental troops commanded by Col. Peter Gansevoort and Col. Marinus Willet. If St. Leger captured the fort he could sweep down the Mohawk valley and ravage this "Granary of the Revolution," join Burgoyne at Albany and with him march south to join General Howe in the stroke that would put an end to the Revolution. But Ft. Schuyler held out throughout the siege and the patriot cause was saved.

Red Cloud.

August 5.—Out in the wilds of western Pennsylvania one hot summer night in 1763 a little army of British regulars and Colonials, commanded by Col. Henry Bouquet, a Swiss soldier of fortune, found themselves in a desperate predicament. They were marching to the relief of Ft. Pitt, a frontier outpost which was besieged by Indians. A large force of warriors had been sent to intercept Bouquet's troops. They were surrounded and there was no hope for relief. They must fight their way out. Defeat meant massacre. Fight their way out they did. The next morning by a brilliant stroke of strategy, which should give Bouquet a place with the great captains of American history, the Indians were overwhelmingly defeated, and his soldiers continued their triumphant march to Ft. Pitt. The battle of Bushy Run was one of the most decisive ever scored by white man over red. On this day also, August 5, in the year 1864, Admiral David Farragut won his great victory at the Battle of Mobile bay during the Civil war.

David Farragut.

August 6.—While Col. Barry St. Leger was laying siege to Ft. Schuyler, an army of New York militia was marching to its relief. It was commanded by Gen. Nicholas Herkimer who had arranged with Colonel Gansevoort for a sortie from the fort at the same time that Herkimer advanced with his troops to attack St. Leger. Unfortunately the well-laid plans were upset by the rashness and impatience of Herkimer's officers and men, who demanded to be led against the foe immediately. And so they fell into the ambush and on the bloody field of Oriskany August 6, 1777, they won a victory, but at the fearful price of one-fourth of all their number.

August 7.—In the fastnesses of the Sierra Madre mountains in Sonora, Mexico, on this day, in 1885, detachments of troops G, H, I, and K, of the Fourth cavalry, accompanied by a party of Indian scouts, killed 5 hostile Chiricahua Apache Indians and captured 15 women and children. This may not sound like an important victory, but to anyone who knows of the hardships suffered by American soldiers in their campaigns against these "human tigers," the warriors of the notorious Geronimo, it was a victory of no mean proportions. It proved that the American soldier COULD run to earth these elusive enemies and it sounded the knell to the last important Indian uprising in the West.

Joseph Brant.

August 8.—On this date began a campaign by a detachment of Company A of the Twenty-third infantry and a group of Indian scouts in the Juniper mountains in Idaho which did not end for nearly a month. But when it did end the soldiers had rounded up the last stragglers of the hostile Piutes upon whom General Crook had inflicted the crushing defeat earlier in the year.

August 9.—Fifty years ago, August 9, 1877, the Big Hole river in Montana was the scene of one of the hardest fought engagements in the history of the West. Chief Joseph, the matchless leader of the Nez Perces during his epic flight from his home in Oregon to Canada, was attacked at this place by Gen. John Gibbon and his troops of the Second cavalry and Seventh infantry. Despite the surprise of the attack, Joseph quickly rallied his warriors, handled them so skillfully that he beat off Gibbon's attack and continued his flight. It was here that this Indian leader proved once more how well he deserved the title of "The Indian Napoleon."

Chief Joseph.

August 10.—This is the anniversary of the Battle of Wilson's Creek in Missouri, one of the few important Civil war battles fought in that state. It was both a victory and a defeat for the Union army. They drove the Confederates from the field, but could not hold it and were forced to retreat. They lost their leader, Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, who was shot from his horse, near the close of the battle. But they won a moral victory, for after this battle thousands of Missourians who had been wavering decided to stand by the Union.

August 11.—This is the anniversary of two important Indian battles in the West. In 1823 Col. Henry Leavenworth ascended the Missouri river with a force of 400 soldiers and trappers and 700 Sioux allies to punish the Arikaras for their treacherous behavior toward representatives of the Rocky Mountain Fur company. The campaign ended on August 11, when a treaty of peace was signed. Fifty years later the banks of the Yellowstone river, in Montana, saw a war party of Sioux attacking Lieut. Col. George A. Custer's Seventh cavalry. Custer with a small detachment was far in advance of the regiment when the Indians attacked, and only the speed of his horse and the quick wit of his brother, Capt. Tom Custer, saved him from the fate which overtook him less than three years later on the Big Little Horn in Montana.

Tom Custer.

August 12.—On this date in 1676 the first great Indian war in America came to an end, when King Philip, the Indian leader, was shot down by a man of his own race who had led Capt. Benjamin Church to Philip's hiding place in a swamp near his old home, Mt. Hope, Massachusetts.

August 13.—New England has reason to remember this date because in 1776 Lieut. James Burnham, a Maine veteran of the French and Indian Wars, with 16 of his comrades, armed only with flintlock muskets, opened fire upon a British warship off Goat island with such deadly effect that 17 sailors were killed before the British commander gave orders to weigh anchor and sail away.

King Philip.

August 14.—On this date in 1900 the Allied armies entered Peking, China, and when the Stars and Stripes was carried through the gates of that city with the flags of other nations it meant the end of the Boxer uprising and safety for the whites who had been in such deadly peril for so long..

August 15.—In 1812 on this day a little army of whites was marching along what is now Michigan avenue in Chicago. Out of the sand hills along the lake shore dashed a war party of fierce Pottawatomies, who opened fire upon the column. There was a short, sharp struggle, and when it ended more than half of the whites had been killed. The remainder were prisoners and the Ft. Dearborn massacre was history.

Frank Nortn.

August 16.—Up in the hills of Vermont, 150 years ago, on this date, August 16, 1777, Gen. John Stark won a brilliant victory over the force of British and Hessians, led by Colonel Baume, a victory which contributed to the downfall of General Burgoyne. Three years later, near Camden, S. C., Geheral Gates, who had conquered Burgoyne, suffered defeat at the hands of the British Lord Cornwallis. Thus did Gates' "northern willows turn into southern weeds."

August 17.—This is the anniversary of the one occasion when the Indian won a victory over his enemy the "Iron Horse." On this date, in 1867, a war party of Cheyennes wrecked a train near Plum Creek, Neb., and plundered the contents of the cars. But in the midst of their exultant dance a force of the famous Pawnee scouts led by Maj. Frank North and his brother, Capt. Luther North, appeared on the scene and put an end to their rejoicing.

Anthony Wayne

August 18.—The streets of the sleepy old town of Santa Fe, N. M., resounded to the hoof beats of American cavalry on August 18, 1846. Gen. Stephen W. Kearney and his dragoons entered the city and raised the Stars and Stripes, proclaiming the Southwest American territory.

August 19.—This is the anniversary of two famous engagements. In 1782 it saw Daniel Boone and his Kentuckians disastrously defeated by the Indians and a few British at the Battle of Blue Licks, Ky., a defeat caused by the same rashness upon the part of headstrong men that brought disaster to General Herkimer's army at Oriskany, five years earlier. In 1812, it saw one of the greatest victories ever won by the Constitution when her guns humbled the British ship Guerriere.

August 20.—"He put the horse's hoof on the moccasin," and at the Battle of Fallen Timbers, in Ohio, on August 20, 1794, Gen. Anthony Wayne, the "Mad Anthony" Wayne of Stony Point fame, inflicted a crushing defeat upon the warriors of the confederated tribes in the Old Northwest and brought peace at last to the harried frontier.

Quantrill.

August 21.—Of all the individuals whom the title of guerilla has made famous—or rather infamous—the name of Charles Quantrill leads all the rest. During the Civil war Kansas suffered from the scourge of war in many ways, but its most appalling disaster was Quantrill's raid on Lawrence on August 21, 1853, when 150 citizens fell victims to his ferocity, making 80 widows and 250 orphans.

August 22.—The last great uprising of the Indian tribes of the Southwest took place in 1874. On August 22 of that year there was a hot engagement at the Wichita agency participated in by troops C, F, H, and L, Tenth cavalry and I, Fifth Infantry. Eventually, however, the uprising was quelled by Gen. Nelson A. Miles and his "foot cavalry," the Fifth infantry, in a brilliant campaign in the staked plains of Texas.

Israel Putnam.

August 23.—One of the most serious Indian uprisings in American history was that which occurred among the Sioux of Minnesota under the leadership of Chief Little Crow in 1862. Hundreds of citizens were killed before the Indians were defeated and one of the high spots of this war was the attack upon New Ulm, August 23, 1862.

August 24.—Once in history the capitol of our country was captured by the enemy. This occurred on August 24, 1814, when a British army entered Washington, close upon the heels of the fleeing President and other high government officials. The invaders applied the torch and flames consumed the capitol, the President's house and other public buildings.

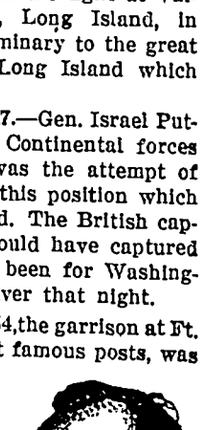
August 25.—This is the date of a fight known to history as the "Four Men Battle" when four privates of Company M of the Twenty-third infantry fought a sharp skirmish with a force of insurrectos near Cebu in the Philippines, and defeated them.

John Sullivan.

August 26.—This date is the anniversary of a number of engagements in American history. Perhaps the most important was the fight at Valley Grove, Long Island, in 1776, preliminary to the great battle of Long Island which began on:

August 27.—Gen. Israel Putnam was in command of the Continental forces on Brooklyn Heights and it was the attempt of the British to drive him from this position which led to the Battle of Long Island. The British captured General Sullivan and would have captured the whole army, if it had not been for Washington getting them across the river that night.

August 28.—On August 28, 1854, the garrison at Ft. Laramie, Wyo., one of the most famous posts, was forced to defend itself against an attack by the Sioux Indians. This was an aftermath of the massacre of Lieutenant Grattan, on August 19 of that year, a disaster which that impetuous young officer brought upon himself by his high-handed methods in dealing with the Indians during a dispute over a cow that had been abandoned by a passing emigrant train.



Stonewall Jackson.

August 29.—The Battle of Newton, or Chemung, on this date in 1779, near the present site of Elmira, N. Y., is one of the high spots in the campaign of Gen. John Sullivan against the Iroquois Indians which broke the power of that great confederacy. Here Lieut. Thomas Boyd was killed, a most tragic incident of the Revolution.

August 30.—This date is the anniversary of two historic events. On August 30, 1813, the commander of Ft. Mimms, Ala., paid a fearful price for his carelessness when a war party of Creeks led by the famous Chief Weatherford, swept down upon the fort and massacred most of the garrison. On August 30, 1862, the military genius of Stonewall Jackson was again demonstrated when he defeated the Union army, commanded by Gen. John Pope, at the second battle of Bull Run.

August 31.—The end of the month! And it marked, too, the end of the siege of Ft. Erie in Upper Canada during the War of 1812, which began on August 1, 1814, and ended August 31, 1814.

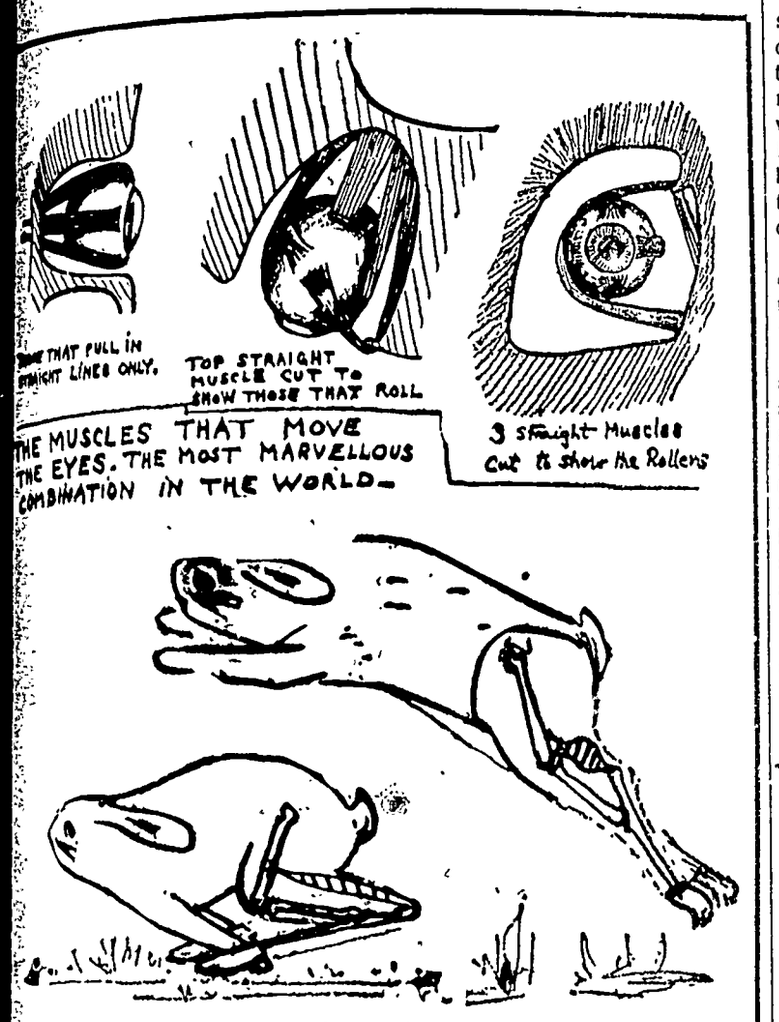
THE MOTORS



THAT PULL IN STRAIGHT LINES ONLY.
TOP STRAIGHT MUSCLE CUT TO SHOW THOSE THAT ROLL
THE MUSCLES THAT MOVE THE EYES. THE MOST MARVELLOUS COMBINATION IN THE WORLD.
3 straight Muscles Cut to show the Rollers

Animals Whose Lives Depend on Their Quick Speed Have Longer Levers.

THE way a muscle works is that the long motor-cells become instantly short, and pull whatever is tied to its nearer together. Why it does no one knows. We only know some chemical change takes e, that heat is given off, and that, an ordinary piece of wool under- does when boiled, it does get ier. Moreover, this is the way in h nine-tenths of the heat of our y is made. That is the reason why n we work very hard or run a and so many motors are at work get hot and sweat all over.

The joint is pulled quickly one way the other because all joints have muscle on each side, just to keep joint in balance and keep things and ready to move either way in- tly, and so avoid jerks. This is ed 'muscle tone.' On cold days we it best (i. e., are high-strung), use the brain makes all the mus- work a little more in order to p us warm. If we are still too cold, work harder, and we start 'shiv- g.' This is an automatic warning central to turn on more heat by ping about and to close the stop s—that is, narrow down all the hot-pipes and save heat. That why we get pale and blue when d."

How many of these motors are e?"

Millions in all; but of groups of , that is, whole big muscles, there about four hundred and ten. It a whole army of motor-tractors. these motors must burn some- g, naturally; and the stuff that use is like sugar and water, and called glucose The pipes bring it them in the blood stream. As soon It is burned something is left be- d like the soot or black carbon of or the ashes of coal. It is mostly stuff. When there is too much of the muscle-motor warns central look out or it will break down. Just it is the acid from smoke that kills flowers in cities."

But how does the muscle do that?"

It sends a message to the central m, which we call 'having a tired ling.' A tired leg is only a leg from ich the ashes have not been emp- d, and there is too little fuel. If neglect the warning we get mps'; which means that the mus- are all staying contracted and ing you a very nasty pain as well, that you squeal out and pay better ention to their warning the next e. If the wires carrying the or- s get cut or crushed, the motors out of commission, unless the nage is above a local office in the ne where the 'reflex' orders are en care of."

Can you tell where the break is?"

Yes. If it is a man with a para- ed leg, stick a pin into the leg cles. If he kicks you, then the nage to the wires is above the ex-box. He cannot send a message kick you if the wires to a reflex cut or broken, no matter how ch he may wish to. You can try the next time you see a man with aralyzed leg.

Sometimes central can mend the es, if doctors draw the cut ends ether. Then central sends a re- ring gang down and puts in new es."

How can we get the muscles run- g again if the motors are over- ed?"

Just stop using them. The blood then slowly carry away the poi- , and also bring fresh fuel and h air or oxygen to burn up all the ains of the half-burnt poisonous es. You can hurry matters up by ting or rubbing. That brings more d along more quickly, as the pipes are clever enough to know what's wanted, and to make themselves larger at once. But don't forget that you can overwork the motors until you spoil them for good and all. For example, before there were any typewriters lots of clerks overworked their hands by holding pens and writing so long that they got writer's cramp, or palsy. They never again could get quite well. Our bodies accept no excuses. They never fail to punish us if we ill-use them, whether we do it ignorantly or not. 'Watch your step,' shouts the policeman; while doctors, which really means wise men, say: 'Watch your bodies'—especially while you are young and are making them."

"But, father, how much ought we to work the motors?"

"A very wise question. You can easily underwork them. For instance, the boys who are always mugging away at books and do not play games. What happens? Such a boy seldom makes a team. He may get round-shouldered, and short-sighted, and flat-chested, and spindle-legged, and flabby-armed. His muscles waste away, or at least do not grow big, and when disease or accident overtakes him, he cannot resist it and dies.

"Now here are some motors with which we can roll our eyes around just as we wish. (See picture.) Inside the globe or eyeball are more muscles, for opening and closing the safety-shutters, which we call the pupil. It protects the delicate seeing film—central can't trust us to remember to do that without ever once failing. So these muscles are involuntary. We can't control them. This is central's way all over the body. Let us look at a few voluntary motors. Give me your hand. You can easily feel the tendons in your wrist. Each finger has a tendon in front to bend or flex it, and one behind to extend or straighten it; and there are side motors to pull them sideways, and one to pull the thumb over and nip things, so that you can pick up a piece of money if you want to. Some races of people are said to have very big muscles for that purpose. The tendons of the muscles run through sheaths, which are well oiled and very strong. These act like our snatch-blocks on the hospital steamer, to enable us to pull in every direction. Now for your leg.

"This great tractor combination at the back is called the 'calf.' It pulls up the whole weight of the body on the balls of the feet, or toes, when you walk or jump. Some call it the tendon of Achilles, because he was able only to be wounded in his heel. In animals that have to save their lives by running, it is not only stronger, but the lever of the heel is made longer, so that they can jump farther each time. (See picture). All four-footed animals run on their toes, as you see. The tendons of the tail of a whale are as big as cart-ropes.

"As you grow older you will hear a great deal of talk about high heels and pointed toes and flat feet. Remember, our bodies are the result of ages of a very wise central adapting them to the uses for which we need them. So don't think that you can make your feet more useful by pinching them in front, as would-be fashionable ladies did; or by raising the back part so that you never stand on a flat surface. We are intended to walk on a flat surface with a springy arched foot with a wide front, and a nearly straight inside line. The motors will keep everything in their places, and will look best, too, if you make your boots just to protect them as they are and not try to change their shape."

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

GOOD SOIL MEANS ORCHARD SUCCESS

Good soil is so closely linked with success in orcharding that given good orchard land planted with varieties that are adapted to the locality and market demands, even the amateur will find it hard to keep from succeeding financially in the fruit growing business, says R. S. Marsh, horticulture extension specialist at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

If the soil is poor the grower must center all his efforts in building it up before the trees are planted and while the orchard is young.

"In Illinois, at least, the limestone and sweet clover program, which is advocated for corn and other grain and hay crops, also is unsurpassed for orchard soils. Apple and peach trees will grow twice as much on sites where a good crop of sweet clover has been turned under before the trees are set as they will on sites without sweet clover.

"If the trees are set out on a site where the program of limestone and sweet clover has not been practiced it is recommended that sweet clover be grown between the trees to build up the land. Of course, the young trees must be cultivated, but this can be done by establishing cultivation strips about six feet wide along the tree row.

"If apple trees are planted 40 feet apart each way and peach trees not closer than 25 feet apart, there will be plenty of room between the tree rows in which soil building crops can be grown and turned under.

"Although sweet clover stands at the top of the list as a soil building crop, other crops can be used. Such crops as soy beans, cowpeas, buckwheat and the clovers greatly benefit the soil when they are turned under. Under no circumstances should these crops be taken from a young orchard and stored in the barn as hay.

"After the orchard is bearing and clean cultivation is practiced, cover crops should be used to maintain fertility. Cultivation usually will be stopped some time between July 15 and August 1 and then soy beans, cowpeas, buckwheat, millet, oats or vetch can be sown as a cover crop. These crops make a good growth which catches and holds the leaves that drop from the trees, and in the spring when the crop and the leaves are disked under, valuable organic matter is added to the soil. Such crops also help to prevent soil erosion; they hold the winter snows, protect the tree roots against freezing and help the trees harden their tissues for the winter.

"Since soil, site and variety are the most important factors in successful orcharding, many investigations are now going on throughout the United States with orchard soils. The day may not be far off when a fruit tree's ration will be handled like rations for a poultry flock. A balanced food supply will be given young trees for growth the same as young chicks are now fed for growth. Fruit production rations may be given to bearing trees in much the same way that hens are fed for egg production."

Control Young San Jose Scale by Summer Sprays

I cannot speak from experience regarding the control of the young San Jose scale by the use of summer sprays. For the past several years we have not been troubled enough with San Jose scale to consider it a menace in our orchards. On some of our old scattering trees we do have a little scale, enough so that we can show our students the appearance of a few scales on the fruit. This would indicate that neither our dormant nor our summer sprays were controlling the insect.

I doubt if the average summer applications of lime-sulphur and arsenate of lead are strong enough to have much effect in the control of the young San Jose scale. Our growers are not using "Black Leaf 40" to any extent, depending upon the delayed dormant applications to control the aphids, and consequently the young San Jose scale would not get the "Black Leaf 40" which would otherwise be used for the control of aphids, as it has been necessary in years past to use "Black Leaf 40" in some of the later summer sprays.

We are using one of the new liquidusters today, and if the wind is not blowing it certainly is doing the work, but it is impossible to do effective work against the wind, as I found by personal experience a few days ago when I was spraying our plum trees. Fortunately I was using oil spray for the European red mite on the plum trees, and not dormant strength lime-sulphur.—S. P. Hollister, Connecticut Agricultural College.

Benefit to Fruits

Practically all fruits can be indirectly benefited by applications of limestone, especially on soils which are quite sour. Soils which are too sour will not grow leguminous cover crops. Unless large quantities of nitrogenous fertilizers are used in such cases, the trees will be unable to secure a sufficient nitrogen supply. On sour soils, it is a good thing to apply sufficient limestone to enable the legumes to grow. The legumes can then extract nitrogen from the air.

This hard-to-suit age chooses Camel

MODERN people are hard to satisfy. But Camel has pleased them and they have made it the most famous cigarette of all time.

Present-day smokers are "tasty," and they recognize in Camel the choicest tobaccos grown, blended for smoothness and mellowness. Camel leadership in this modern world is an overwhelming tribute to the taste and fragrance of this quality cigarette.

Camel will prove itself to you. What a cool, satisfying smoke! When you try Camels, you will see why they are first and favorite with present-day smokers. "Have a Camel!"

Russia Needs Capital to Develop Industry

In Russia the situation of three or four years ago has been reversed, and now concession seekers have almost vanished from the stage, while the government in its turn is hunting for capitalists to take over new enterprises.

Russia's woolen mills are reported to have shut down for a period on account of scarcity of raw materials. Flax mills closed for a month or six weeks for the same reason. Simultaneously, however, the commissariat for trade has ordered a 10 per cent reduction of prices. Some mills have obeyed, but have decreased the width of materials or reduced the quality of their goods.

According to German reports, the most promising field for the foreigner in Russia today is as a buyer of local produce. Concessions have proved money losers, and attempts to sell goods to Russia are defeated by the long-term credits demanded by the government trading bureau.—The Living Age.

Rays Solve Crime

Criminals who alter documents with any ink that contains iron can be detected by ultra-violet rays, according to Professor Bruning, Berlin scientist, in Popular Science Monthly. Postal thieves who open letters and reseal them also are branded guilty by the rays; one kind of mucilage, for instance, glows with a fluorescent light under the rays, while another does not.

Artificial pearls, however skillfully made, are revealed as false, as are imitation diamonds. The finest genuine diamonds shine with a magnificent purple light under rays of the ultra-violet lamp.

The Yangtzekiang and its tributaries have a total navigable length equal to half the circumference of the globe.

Big Rats in Rochester

Rats not only grow large, but they grow hard in the Granite state's Rochester. A rat was recently caught in a trap in that city which measured 15½ inches from tip of its nose to the tip of its tail. This giant rat, said to be twenty years old, always turned the trick on the cats of the town. Residents claim that during its life the rodent killed seven cats.

Beauties of Other Days

"When I was a boy there were just as many beautiful girls as there are today," said an old man. "Pretty girl photographs and beauty contests deceive some into thinking that feminine beauty is on the increase. But I believe that many will back me up when I say that the girls of 50 years ago do not suffer by comparison with present-day beauties."—Detroit News.

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

SCOUTS START CORN BORER INVESTIGATION IN IOWA

Farmers Asked To Send Doubtful Specimens To State Entomologist

The appointment of Chelsa Gibson and Tom Brindley as scouts for corn borers in Iowa has been approved by M G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture, and they are now actively engaged in Eastern Iowa investigating insect injuries of corn.

"We do not believe that the corn borer exists in Iowa but we want to be certain," states C. J Drake, state entomologist, explaining the need for scouting work. "Over 2,000 different kinds of borers and insects have been sent into our office from different parts of the state by people who are interested in finding out whether they are corn borers or not.

"A large portion of the insects that have been sent in are common stalk borers. This insect is doing a large amount of injury thruout the stote It has been found in over 100 different plants. Primarliy, it is a weed insect and will be found most common around the edges of fields. It is advisable to plow under all weedy fields in summer or fall and burn the weeds around the fences in fall or early spring. This prevents a repitition of the trouble the following year.

"People who find borers tunneling in corn plants, should put them in a small tin or gloss container and send them to Dr. C J. Drake, state entomologist, Ames, Iowa," states Mr. Thornburg. "There are a number of notive borers which resemble the corn borer in some respects and we appreciate the cooperation of the people of the state in our scouting work."
